The Chicago Evangelization Society finds itself already oppressed by the magnitude of this undertaking, but the great evangelist sees clearly that important and mighty results are to be obtained by it. To train and commission workers who will go to the homes of the people who are not now reached by the churches; to direct the labors of these men and women; to furnish such trained men and women to the churches who may desire their labors; to have well-known and skillful evangelists also at work in the city; to bring the non-church goers into our churches, and then to follow up this effort by special and personal visitation of the inquirers, will be the mission, in part, of the Evangelization Society.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

A NEATLY PRINTED SIXTEEN PAGE WEEKLY JOURNAL, UNSECTARIAN AND OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE POLE STAR OF REFORM.

EVERY Christian, every Prohibitionist and every Patriot should read it for the following among other reasons:

1. Because it meets the wants of the general public by giving in brief the latest reliable information on all questions of Reform, having the special object of exposing and opposing organized secrecy. Besides able editorial, contributed and selected articles upon this topic, which is of more than national importance, it has interesting sketches of progress and incidents from the reform lecturers in all parts of the country, reform news and notes, letters from the Old World, etc., etc. It is the especial organ of this movement in America—a movement which is sustained by the utterances of some of the able statesmen, and divines whom the country has produced. Every person interested in either the family, government, or religion—the most sacred interests of humanity—is directly affected by secret societies, and needs to keep posted in this movement.

2. Because it is uncompromising on ALL questions of the day. On temperance, tobacco, Sabbath desecration, Mormonism, the Southern and Indian questions, civil-service reform, monopolies, the rights of labor, and every other question, its only aim is to be RIGHT, and advocate the TRUTH. It is hence FEARLESS and OUTSPOKEN.

3. Because it emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the WORD and SPIRIT of God and that Christ must be acknowledged KING of NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil government based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

4. Because, in addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc. It is now owned and published by the

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, and how to make the more general application of it? 'Age, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his bit in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and headed around by over much respectability and comfortable property."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his failings lead to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Time.

Thurloe Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1828, which has been the most widely published of any Antimasonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurloe Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. No greater letter than that of W. J. and his affidavits—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument erected by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. J. Bailey, on the "Freemason and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

READ ABOUT THIS GREAT HISTORICAL MEETING.

A handsome pamphlet, 50c. 25 cents, postpaid, sent to the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. 50 Francis Temple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and perpetrate the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin and history, what it is and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought. The Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-Laws of the Association. 25c. each, per doz. $1.50.

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. Composed of the Rituals of the Order of the United States of Industry, "United Some of Industry Illustrated," and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against following Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, AND COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in this title, bound together in cloth. $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

ON ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-Fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encompassed and Rebekah (ladies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $5.00. Paper cover, 50c.; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-Fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is a most convincing and complete exposure of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christliche und Engherzige Freimaurer," 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leominster, Mass. A very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disaffiliate Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen $1.00.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Temple of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character, its complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degree of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other reason, than his rejection of the dogma of the divinity of the Supreme Being, and his refusal to join the order of the Supreme Being. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respected Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ELKS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney, a prominent member of the lodge, murdered Ellen Slade, Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring forth to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he being applied to the charge and after a long and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses By Mrs. Louis Watkins. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Preach. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disaffiliate with secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder J. B. Newcomb and Wm. J. A. Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate, 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Addressed by Pres. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Holden With Ours. ON THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by Rev. E. J. Bailey. This is a most convincing argument, curiously true to life because, mainly a narration of historical facts. In cloth $1.00; paper 50 cents. In Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The sacredness of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Browne. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Nathaniel Hawthorne. A most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

IN BRIEF.

Mrs. Helen M. Avery, of the Interior Department, is the most accomplished penwoman among the 15,000 and more Government clerks. The President is a great admirer of her penmanship, and frequently refers to it in complimentary terms when it comes, as it often does, under his observance. Mrs. Avery is also a clever pen-and-ink artist. She does her work rapidly and apparently without effort. Her duties occupy about two hours a day, and her salary is $1,600 per annum.

Ten years ago Thomas F. Clark jokingly gave Miss Julia A. Malcolm, of New Haven, a deed of certain Colorado lands which he thought to be valueless. She said she would keep the document to remember him by, and has since been earning her living teaching school. The other day she received a letter from Colorado, saying that there was a lead mine on her property, and $250,000 was offered for it. Miss Malcolm thought it was a joke, but finding that it wasn't, she accepted the offer, and the check is on its way East.

Many years ago in Cliff street, New York, lived a man named Woolley, a deacon in St. George's church. His servants had the habit of emptying the ashes and cinders from his house into the street just before the door, where a heap accumulated, much to the annoyance of the neighbors. One day a wag who lived next door hit upon a neat device by which the nuisance was abated. He planted a stick in the heap which bore a placard inscribed with these words in large letters: "Here lie the ashes of Deacon Woolley."

Sam Jones says: "Here's the labor question in a nutshell. If you give me the money that Knights of Labor spend for whisky, I will feed your families the year round. You say, what do you mean?" When I was over there in Baltimore preaching a few weeks ago, the laboring men, 18,000 strong, marched through the streets in solid phalanx. Some of those poor fellows I really felt sorry for. They had their toes out of their shoes; they had on coats with their elbows out. Some of those poor fellows didn't have a hat or cap. They were marching along 18,000 strong; and I said, 'Who are those men on horses, marshaling those laboring men?' 'Every man on those horses is a wholesale liquor-dealer or a bar-keeper.' I saw the poor laboring men walking along, some barefooted, and the liquor-dealers on horseback marshaling the crowd."

There is no country on earth which tries so many experiments in governing as does Switzerland. It is, indeed, a model republic in many respects. Its people are divided in religion and in language. Some of the cantons are intensely Roman Catholic, others are as devotedly Protestant. Then, German is the tongue of one portion of the country, Italian of another, while French is the language in the region near Geneva. But, somehow, though partly spirit often runs high, the governmental machine runs with tolerable smoothness. No country on earth is so democratic. All important laws, before they go into force, have to get the direct indorsement of the voters. The verdict at the polls is called the "referendum." Hence the elections in Switzerland are educating. The people discuss every proposition for a new enactment. The politician, the candidate for office, is of small moment in that republic; for the people debate upon, and then make, their own laws.

While the soil is rapidly increasing in value in the United States, it is a remarkable fact that mere farming land is becoming almost worthless in Great Britain and the continent of Europe. The extension of steam communication to hitherto remote regions has made the supplies of breadstuffs and provisions so abundant in the ports of the Old World, that land for raising grain and cattle no longer yields an income to the landlord. Of course it still pays to run dairy farms, to raise eggs, milk, and butter, and to supply vegetables and fruits. City property, also, never brought such high prices as now. The great landlords of Europe, once controllers of all the wealth of the nations, are now without incomes, and quite willing to part with their holdings to the tenants and field laborers. Lord Randolph Churchill has announced that he favors the transfer of the soil of Great Britain to the laboring people, and undoubtedly the new Tory government will not offer local home rule, but will try to create a farming population, the heads of families to own their allotments in fee simple.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,
The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

OF

Baptist Commendation.
"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.
"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.
"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.
"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.
"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church and State.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ill.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject, and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable to read. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

A Few Books of Special Worth
IN BIBLE STUDY.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Rev. James Stalker, M.A. Arranged for study, 18mo, cloth, 60 cts.

This work is in truth "Mittum in Parvo," containing within small compass a vast amount of most helpful teaching, so admirably arranged that the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole revealed record of the life-work of our Lord, in a nutshell of space and with a minimum of study.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MARY. By Rev. George Rogers. New Edition, enlarged. Cloth, 15 cts; paper, 10 cts.

The writer of this delightfully interesting work has opened up a rich vein of truth, and in a remarkably simple style has presented the life and teachings of the Tubericle of Israel. The book is really fascinating.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS FOR BIBLE READINGS. By Briggs and Elliott. Contains over twenty short chapters by various authors on different plans and methods for Bible readings, followed by over six hundred outlines of Bible lessons, by a great variety of authors. 283 pages, 12mo, flexible cloth, 75 cts; stiff cloth, $1.00.

C. H. M.'S. NOTES ON THE PENTATEUCH. By W. H. Macintosh, 6 vols. in set. For set, $4.50; separate vols., each, 75 cts.

Mr. D. L. Moody says: "They have been to me a very key to the scriptures."

And D. W. Whittle says: "Under God they have blessed me more than any books outside the Bible I have ever read."

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE. By D. L. Moody. A most practical little work. Flexible cloth, 15 cts; paper, 10 cts.

OUTLINES OF THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE. By Rev. J. H. Brookes, D.D. Very suggestive and helpful. 193 pages, cloth, 50 cts; paper, 35 cts.

* Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS.

And for those Dealing with Enquirers.

GRACE AND TRUTH. By W. P. Mackay, M.A. 2nd edition, 600,000 sold in England! Mr. D. L. Moody says: "I know of no book in print better adapted to aid in the work of him who would be a winner of souls, or to place in the hands of the unconverted." 283 pages, 16mo, 75 cts; paper, 50 cts.

THE WAY TO GOD, and How to Find It. By D. L. Moody. 18 pages, 12mo, cloth, 50 cts; paper, 30 cts.

The Way of Salvation is made as clear as simple language and forcible, pertinent illustration can make it.—Liberator's Observer.

"Very earnest and powerful."—National Baptist.

LIFE, WARFARE AND VICTORY. By Maj. D. W. Whittle. 124 pages, 12mo, cloth, 60 cts; paper, 35 cts.

"The warfare is so sustained, the way to serve in the warfare, and the way to have assured victory, are admirably presented in a clear, helpful style, abounding with apt illustrations."

THE WAY AND THE WORD. Prepared by D. L. Moody. 43th thousand. A treatise on regeneration, followed by Mr. Moody's helpful suggestions on Bible study. 84 pages, cloth, 35 cts; paper, 15 cts.

MY INQUIRY MEETINGS; or, Plain Truths for Anxious Sinners. By Robert Boyd, D.D. 64 pages and cover. Price, 15 cts.

For simplicity, clearness and force of statement we have met with nothing that equals this volume.—Interior.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

President Cleveland has appointed the following Interstate Commissioners: Thomas M. Cooley, of Michigan, for the term of six years.

William R. Morrison, of Illinois, for the term of five years.

Augustus Schoonmaker, of New York, for the term of four years.

Aldace F. Walker, of Vermont, for the term of three years.

Walter L. Bragg, of Alabama, for the term of two years.

COUNTRY.

For the Chicago city election next week the Republicans, Democrats, Prohibitionists, and Labor party have each nominated a ticket. The Democratic ticket has gone to pieces. Carter Harrison reluctantly accepted a fourth re-nomination for Mayor, but resigned in a day or two. The Labor candidates are generally pronounced socialists or leaders in the labor lodges. Chicago will be, probably, under Republican rule for a term of years.

The Crosby high license bill, applying only to New York City and Brooklyn, passed the New York Assembly Wednesday, 70-56—the minority being all Democrats, re-enforced by four Republicans. The bill provides for four grades of licenses, ranging in price from $100 to $1,000.

In the Illinois senate last Wednesday, the bill to prohibit the selling of intoxicants in less quantities than five gallons within two miles of a village school house or church without a retail license was read a third time and passed. A duplicate of this bill is on the order of its second reading in the house, where it is known as Ruby's "jug" bill. The indications are that it will become a law.

In Chicago seven additional indictments were returned into court Friday by the special Grand Jury, covering the names of Warden Frey, Varnell, and McGarrigle, Commissioner Wren, ex Commissioners Ochs and Van Pelt, and wholesale grocer Elisha A. Robinson, the charge being that of conspiracy against the country.

The arbitration going on for some days past between the Knights of Labor and the North Side rolling company, Chicago, is ended. The men get an increase of 9 per cent, time for cleaning flues, and extra help for handy work during the warm months. The basis of the settlement will affect the mills at Irondeale, South Chicago, North Chicago, Bridgeport, Joliet and Milwaukee, resulting in an increase of wages for over 15,000 men.

The taking of the testimony in the Haddock murder case was begun Friday at Sioux City, Iowa. Physicians and others gave evidence as to hearing the shot, finding the body, the nature of the wound, and the flight of the conspirators, among whom Leavitt, the State witness, was identified.

Early Friday morning, near Leetonia, Ohio, on the Pan-handle road, a freight train dashed into the rear of the Chicago express, which had been stopped for the purpose of repairing the air-brake hose. The sleeper and one coach were wrecked, the engineer of the express killed, and seven persons wounded, two of whom may not recover.

Constable Pierce refused at Des Moines, Iowa, Friday, to deliver to a deputy marshal, who held a writ of replevin issued by the United States Circuit Court, the liquors recently seized from Hulbert, Hess & Co. The writ was issued in favor of Ohio and Kentucky firms, who claim to own the liquors.

Mrs. J. A. Herman, who had not walked a step for nine years, is reported to have been cured at a prayer and healing meeting at Kokomo, Ind., to which she was carried on a litter. She is now doing her housework.

The Whitaker Quaker church at Buffalo, Kansas, was blown to atoms by a giant powder explosion at nine o'clock Saturday night. Frank Van Meter was arrested, charged with having committed the deed. The circumstantial evidence is strong against him. Van Meter has been prosecuted lately by some members of the church for gambling.

John Knepper, an Austrian, who fought against Napoleon, died Tuesday night at Ransom, Pa. aged 108 years, 1 month, 17 days. He had been in this country nearly seventy years.

At Galveston, Thursday, Willis & Brothers sold to Kauffman & Runge, for export, 6,500 bales of cotton—the largest single transaction in the staple in Texas, if not in the entire South.

The flood on the north Missouri river has resulted in the drowning of five persons near Legrace, D. T. An additional rise of two feet will submerge the towns of Scranton and Legrace.

A year ago, at New Bedford, Mass., the tendons in one of Edward K. Russell's legs were severed by accident. Two tendons from a dog were placed in Russell's limb and united with the severed tendons. For ten months the patient was not permitted to use the injured member, but has now resumed work, the operation having proved a complete success.

Owing to scarcity of grass in the Rio Grande districts in Texas, thousands of sheep have perished of hunger. One firm lost 30,000 head.

A frame boarding house at the Colby Mine, near Bessemer, Mich., was destroyed by fire early Wednesday morning, twelve men perishing in the flames. Of nine others, who escaped by jumping from windows, a half dozen were seriously injured.

Snow to the depth of fifteen inches has fallen in sections of New York and Pennsylvania; in Vermont trains have been seriously blocked.

A new iron bridge over the Big Otter river, Va., on the Norfolk and Western railroad was nearly finished, a large force being engaged on the work. Thursday afternoon a freight train was crossing, and the engine and several cars had passed safely when the bridge gave way and nine cars went through into the river. It is reported that all the train hands escaped unhurt, but that of the workmen on the bridge nine were killed and several wounded.

FOREIGN.

The twentieth anniversary of Emperor William's birthday was ushered in Tuesday in Berlin by the tolling of bells in all the churches and the tower of the Town Hall and the sounding of a choral. The city was decorated as it never was before. Garlands, flags, laurels, festoons of evergreen, banners, bright drapery and carpets hung on every conspicuous spot. The monument of Frederick the Great was covered with wreaths and flowers. Wherever there is a bust or statue of the Emperor in a shop window or other exposed place it was buried in flowers. Early in the day special memorial services were held in the churches and synagogues, and the edifices were crowded in every case. The children from all the schools in the city went in processions, accompanied by bands of music, to the church services. The students' procession that passed the palace was a grand affair.

Prince Bismarck has assured the Crown Prince Rudolph, of Austria-Hungary, who was in Berlin representing his father at the Emperor's birthday celebration, that Germany's foreign policy is pacific; that peace is assured for 1887, and that there is no cause for disquiet in either the East or West.

The Kaiser's expressions of belief in the maintenance of the peace are everywhere the subject of comment. At Prince Bismarck's dinner it was the common topic of conversation. The general opinion is that the crisis is over, and that a period of quiet is commencing.

The German Reichstag has passed the second reading of the army bill, agreeing by a large majority to vote the grant, which was several times rejected by the former Reichstag, for the construction of military schools for non-commissioned officers at Neu Brissach.

In the British House of Commons Friday evening Mr. Morley's amendment to the Government's motion to grant urgency for the coercion bill was rejected by a vote of 249 to 280. The resolution to grant urgency for the crimes bill was agreed to, and the first reading of the bill was fixed for Monday.

Henry M. Stanley reports that he arrived at the mouth of the Congo on the 18th inst., and that the expedition would reach Matadi by the 21st inst.

From Berlin and Vienna the Pope has been advised that during the continuance of the alliance between Germany, Austria, and Italy, the three powers will support the Pope's independence and liberty.

John Bright, in a letter with reference to home rule, says that a majority of the people in Ireland would vote their country be made a State of the American Union if their present leaders instructed them to do so, but that that would be no reason why the kingdom should consent.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg states that the police authorities of that city have discovered stores of dynamite and apparatus for the manufacture of bombs in several villas in Pargelovo, a suburban resort of St. Petersburg. It is reported that six persons were captured in connection with the recent plot to assassinate the czar, and hanged next day. DeGaeff, the man who murdered Lieut. Col. Sudekin, Russian chief of police, three years ago, and who was suspected of having planned the plot against the czar's life, is said to have been one of the six.

A dispatch from Sydney, in the south of Wales, says that an explosion occurred in the Bulli colliery, near Sydney, killing seventy persons and injuring many more.

While the French section of the Salvation Army was holding services in the Jeffrey-Hale school hall last Tuesday, a bomb exploded in front of the building. The explosion wrecked the front of the building, put out the lights, and threw the crowd into a panic. Several persons were seriously injured, but nobody was killed.

The New Brunswick industries are said to have been paralyzed by the failure of the Maritime Bank, whose $1,000,000 of deposits have melted away, and hundreds of people are financially ruined. The bank and the great firms which it has been carrying are hopelessly bankrupt.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 32c. Cloth, 60c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffelfinger. Paper covers, 5c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It meets a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

Send 25c. for an assortment of our tracts. Send by Registered Letter or Money Order. We can take American bills or postage stamps, but do not send American post notes, silver, or drafts on American Banks. For the above, address,

Anthony Comstock, the knight errant of purity, is one of the best abused men in America. His methods have been criticized without mercy by papers which were being paid for advertising scoundrelism, and these criticisms have been taken up by some good people. If there must be criticism, yet let it be remembered that the society of which Comstock is actuary, last year destroyed 195,000 pounds of obscene books and pictures, and prosecuted many of the scoundrels engaged in the villainous work of distributing them among the youth of the land.

Johann Most, the New York grog-seller and an architect, whose blood-thirsty book on dynamite and bomb manufacture was the manual of American anarchists, has just been released from Blackwell's Island penitentiary after about a year's imprisonment. He has only been made more defiant and desperate by his punishment, and promises to be more outspoken than ever in his fiendish attacks on society. He is encouraged by a crowd of followers, who met him on his release, and headed their procession immediately for a saloon. It is a question whether we get rid of anarchy until prohibition prohibits. It is at least evident that if the saloon is emptied into the gutter, the anarchist should be set outside our boundaries, until he gets over his rage. Why do not these social hyenas go off to some desert and set up a social system to suit themselves? If that system is as good as they pretend, we will all follow to their paradise.

At the Hershey Hall convention last week our reform bard Clark called attention to the word from Detroit that in one of the wards of that city citizens in favor of the State prohibitory amendment were in danger of their lives if they should attempt to vote. As we write there is great encouragement to believe that the result on Tuesday will be a victory for the right. A long article a few days since in the Chicago Tribune prophesies a liquor defeat, and says that had the Republican members of the legislature supposed that such a result was possible they would never have submitted the amendment. They hoped that its defeat, upon which they reckoned with certainty, would convince Prohibitionists that they were wrong and drive them back into the Republican ranks. The vote is taken April 4th. Texas comes next, August 4th, which is yet some time hence, but the temperance workers are active and the goodness of their cause gives them confidence. Bro. Hinman has written us of Tennessee, where the vote is cast September 29. Oregon votes November 8th. Narcissa White has almost adopted that State for her own as a lecture field. West Virginia votes two days before, and along her mountain tops the signal-fires already begin to gleam.

The Masonic world was but lately in distress over the discovery that Dunn, a notorious Chicago crook, gambler and murderer, with some New York friends, were good brothers in Masonry. They had taken all the degrees, and sworn all the necessary oaths, and been "raised to the faith of salvation" in Prudence Lodge, and gone on to perfection in Palestine Chapter. But all in vain to change their Ethiopian skin of devilry. Yet they were not found to be uncomfortable companions, or black birds in the flock. They were ambitious to take the "Christian degree," so-called, but some one in Ivanhoe Commandery black-balled them. Their case was finally made known to the public, outside Masonry, and then the lodge had the cramps. A committee sat on the case from Grand Lodge and has expelled Dunn, Gould, the master of Prudence Lodge and six others, and charters taken from lodge and chapter. We heard a Chicago Mason, the other day, praising the virtuous New York Masons for their prompt action. He is numbered among the highest degrees, and is also at the head of other secret orders, yet his neighbors tell of his drunken carousals, and Chicago papers have published his connection with abortions and baby-farming of the most infamous kind. Should there not be a purging of the lodge in this city also?

The cruel report of the loss of the Cunard steamer Scythia with 800 souls on board was contradicted Monday by the word that the vessel was safe in port. The wonderful record of this company, which has never lost a passenger by its own neglect, has been often referred to as a special interposition of Providence. Lately one of the captains of the company, William McMickan, on receiving from his friends a purse of $3,000 as a testimonial that during his twenty years of service with the Cunard Line he never lost a life intrusted to his care, or seriously damaged a single vessel under his command, said that "his thanks were unspeakably due to Almighty God, who had made his feeble efforts so successful." This is old-fashioned talk, but it is safe and reliable, better in a storm than the sneers of an Ingersoll or the oaths of a Johann Most. A century ago it was honorable and the custom to acknowledge God, as may be seen in the following which we were permitted to copy the other day from a bill of lading about a hundred years old: "Shipped by the grace of God in good order by —, in and upon the good brig called the Juno, whereof is master under God for this present voyage Capt. —, and now riding at Port au Prince and by God's grace bound for Boston.... and so God send the good brig to her desired port in safety. Amen."

"The machinery of Mormonism is creaking in every joint," says Talmage. "There are not enough tons of salt washed upon the shore of its lake to save the institution. If forty millions of dollars more than now were spent in aqueducts there would not be enough water to cleanse the pollution." But the American voters of Utah are not made happy yet, since the permission of the new law of the ballot to all Mormons who would take a test oath, gives the church leaders their opportunity to keep control in politics. These Mormons commit moral perjury, to be sure, in this matter, but that does not matter since they have absolution beforehand from their chiefs. The Congressional conference which compromised the Edmunds-Tucker bill by introducing such a worthless test of citizenship should have remembered that the Mormons are full of Masonic oaths already, and for another, forced on them by a foreign government, they have no regard. One set of Mormons take to their church such an oath as this; what impression can any civil obligation make thereafter upon them? "In the name of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, I do covenant and agree to support the First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in all things, right or wrong; I will faithfully guard them and report to them the acts of all men, so far as in my power lies; I will assist in executing all the decrees of the First Presidency, Patriarch, or President of the twelve, and I will cause all who speak evil of the Presidency or the heads of the Church to die the death of dissenters or apostates," etc.

THE RED SEA PASSAGE.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

On they rushed, 'mid hope and fear
For an army's tread was near,
While the monarch's voice of cheer
Rang through parted flood.
Lords of Egypt, there's the slave,
Heed ye not the mountain wave,
Who's a God the wretch to save,
When I ask for blood.

Deeper grew the gloom of night,
Fearful grew the water's height,
But the gleamy pillar bright
Marked out Edom's coast.
Swiftly sped the exiled band
Till the last had reached the strand.
Stretched the prophet then his hand,
Toward the royal host.

Now for strength, and now for speed,
Now, King Pharaoh, is thy need,
Warrior, urge for once thy steed;
Israel hath not bowed!
Hark! The floods are coming! Fly!
Ah, see there; that awful eye!
Looking at us. God! we die!
God is in the cloud.

From their axes dropp'd the wheels,
Steed beneath his rider reels,
Dark and wild the thunder peals
Through that ocean bed.
Backward rolled the mighty waves,
Gurgling to their ancient caves;
There they roar above the graves
Where sleep Egypt's dead.

GOOD TEMPLARISM OUTSPOKEN.

BY PROF. A. R. CERVINE.

In Sweden secret societies, except Freemasonry, were unknown until some years ago when the Good Templars, both from England and North America began to work there. To the Freemasons belonged worldly ministers, many of the nobility, military and civil officers; also some of the merchants and artisans in cities and towns; but scarcely any peasants or farmers. The king and archbishop were in the highest degrees, officially it may be.

The Good Templars are joined by all classes. We now hear how a prominent and renowned gentleman — within the order — pronounced himself sometime ago, thus: "Concerning religious matters we observe a pietism which we recommend all men to pursue. True it is we do not chain our members to any specified dogmatic definitions, or narrow-minded literal faith. In Christendom you find scores of different sects, all persuaded to have the truth, every one themselves alone. We stand without and above them all. No sect has monopolized God. Where justice and human charity is found, there is God. Men may name themselves how they please,—Catholics, Protestants, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, Waldenstromians and so on.

"Thus it is, that the Good Templars, as a body, take their position over and above all definitions withered and dried up. We apply ourselves to all men, who are willing to realize what is true and just; for their names we do not care. There are found in this world two hundred millions of Mahomedans and four hundred millions of Buddhists, who by their religions are forbidden to taste wine or other intoxicating drinks, consequently most of them are total abstainers, the most temperate nations on the earth. How are we to exclude from our order such invaluable workers for the cause of temperance only for a dogmatic definition."

This is broad enough for a platform. Faith in Christ, in all Christian truth is nothing but "a dogmatic definition." Faith in Jesus or in Buddha, is just the same if only you are a brother of their order!

"BE YE STRONG."

BY MRS. MARY A. BLANCHARD.

Hope and courage are important elements of success in prosecuting any important cause. When Moses, at God's command, sent one from every tribe to spy out the land of Canaan, his parting word to them was, "And be ye of good courage." If they had obeyed this one injunction all would have been well. But the majority then, as too often now, failed to obey, and the weight of wrath and woe, consequent on their course, can never be correctly estimated. Caleb and Joshua, brave souls, full of faith, said, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it." But the moral cowardice and unbelief of the ten carried the multitude and prevailed against their sublime courage. God was then ready to give them possession of that good land, flowing with milk and honey, "but seeing they judged themselves unworthy of it," thirty-eight years of added pilgrimage was given them in the desert, and a grave beneath its sands. That was even better than their own choice, which was to "choose a captain" and go back to Egyptian slavery and idolatry.

"History repeats itself," and in our own times instances too often occur, where moral cowardice is keeping the church back from splendid victories, which Christian faith and courage would enable her to achieve. All of those spies admired the fertility and beauty of the land of promise, and by bringing of its fair fruits showed what it was able to produce. So Christians in our day see the fruits of sin and all forms of vice and know they are breeding misery here and woe hereafter. They know the sad contrast between the fruits of the Spirit, which are love, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost, and those unfruitful works of darkness which God wishes us to root up. By their fruits ye can know them. They are in direct opposition to God and the Gospel of his Son. Christ, our example, ever spake openly. He joined no secret cabal, but his light shone continually. Why, then, do not Christians with bold front and hearts of courage move on these doomed works of darkness! Alas! one of these unoccupied Christians has seen their numbers, another their wealth, another their rapid increase, another has heard their threats, until ten out of the twelve leaders, the "princes" of the people, with blanched cheek and faint heart, cry out with those of old, "We be not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we." They might and should say in all truth and soberness, "They that be with us are more than they that be with them." Their pride and arrogance are as displeasing to God as to all good men, and forebode their destruction.

The blast of God's breath will melt down those lofty and magnificent temples whose altars are really dedicated to an unknown god, and scatter their hosts now as easily as he did those of Egypt and Assyria when arrayed against him and his people of old. Let the light which is and has been shed on the dark orders from the word of God and the most sainted of men in this and other lands, come under the rays of ten thousand reflectors, that the truth may be burnt into men's hearts and souls so they will take earnest hold of God in prayer for the putting down of the strongholds of secretism—joined with united and earnest work, until the fall of error and the clear shining of truth from the face of Jesus Christ may bring us to a world of light here, and finally to the blessedness of heaven.

PURITAN IDEAS OF WORK AND PLAY were remarked upon at a late anniversary by one who is suspicious of those who express fears of our becoming as a people too industrious:

"Play is the exercise of our faculties for the enjoyment it brings, but the Puritans saw the importance of transforming play into work, and used all their faculties for the consummation of some great end. This self-sacrificing concentration of energies and steady application, which is a condition of success in everything, our fathers understood and used in religion. Let us, in the education of our children, show them the value of using their faculties for the accomplishment of some purpose, and not in play that brings only momentary pleasure; for any education that has not taught a child to work, is no education at all. We are to become great by ministering to others and not by being ministered unto. Dumb creatures find their greatest enjoyment in being fed and cared for, but man can never be groomed and foddered into blessedness; the religion of Christ consists in visiting the widows and the fatherless, and keeping ourselves unspotted from the world."

SOUTHERN CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

There is a nearly unanimous conviction on the part of educators and pastors of colored churches in the South that the present secret society system is unfavorable to the cause of true religion and public morals, and especially that it is an obstacle to the prosperity of the churches. While many of the pastors have been, and still are, involved in these orders, there is still an evident conviction that such connection is unwise, and an earnest desire to break away from the whole system and lead their churches into better methods of social improvement and mutual aid.

Yet they see many difficulties in the way. There is much poverty and dependence among the people. They have acquired the habit of looking to their societies in case of sickness and for the burial of the dead, and there is constant fear that other methods may fail. There is also fear of meeting, singly, the combined opposition of the societies; and hence many churches and pastors continue to drift in a course which they see to be ruinous. I wish to make a few suggestions to my brethren who are pastors. 1st. The primitive church had the same difficulty to encounter. Their members were poor, in many cases very poor. We are told that "not many rich, not many mighty were called," but that God had "chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith" to be the heirs of salvation. The mother church at Jerusalem—whether because they had adopted for a time the communistic system, or because of their persecutions—was very poor and collections had to be taken up at Corinth and in Galatia for their benefit. 2d. In all this trial of their faith no appeal was made to the outside world. The apostolic injunction was that they "Come out from the world," be a separate and peculiar people and the promise was that the God would provide for all their need. 3d. They had a plan of relief, which was doubtless given by inspiration of God, and was wiser than any of human devising: "Now concerning the collection for the saints,—upon the first day of the week let every one lay by him in store as God has prospered him, and whomsoever ye shall approve, them will I send to bring your liberality to Jerusalem." 1 Cor. 16: 1-3. 4th. The office of deacon was instituted for the sole purpose of dispensing the charity of the church to them that had need, so that the burden might not rest on the apostles (Acts 6: 1-5), and they attended to this matter. 5th. Not only was the obligation to minister to the wants of all believers insisted on, as the essential element in Christian character, but the corresponding obligation to be diligent in business, and that to provide not for one's own household was to deny the faith and be worse than an infidel. Under this system the primitive church, with vastly greater difficulties and vastly fewer advantages, grew and prospered most wonderfully, so that in a few years the Gospel was preached and churches established all over the great Roman empire. There seems to have been no special suffering except in times of persecution, and there was surely no need of an "unequal yoking with unbelievers" to help out the cause of the Lord. 6th. We have still the same blessed Gospel, and the same precious promises, we have the same divinely appointed plan that we can put in motion when we choose. Some churches in the South have adopted it and take up collections for the poor saints, leaving the control in the hands of the pastor and deacons. They find it succeeds, and that it is vastly easier, wiser and more economical than to enter into an alliance with the ungodly to raise money, a large part of which shall go for worldly and selfish purposes.

Aside from the question as to whether there is anything intrinsically wrong in these societies, they are at least needless, out of place, and wholly unscriptural.

THE OPENING OF THE CONGRESS.

ADDRESS OF WELCOME BY CALVIN W. PRITCHARD.

Many who are in this Convention came from other cities and States far and near; some are veterans in anti-secret warfare, some it may be have a word of defense for this system, but nearly all view in it great evils which they hope to see exposed in these discussions. We welcome you, one and all, into our midst, and would have you enjoy the very best we are able to afford. Much of the social, intellectual and spiritual refreshment for the occasion you bring with you. Place it upon our tables, and we will partake of it in a common feast.

I cannot tell where the people of Chicago stand on the question of secret societies, but I suspect there is a great variety of sentiment. If you care to stay with us long enough to inquire you will probably find many who look with alarm at the dangers which threaten our country from the multitude of secret orders, the magnitude of their membership and support, and the general evil tendencies of secret combinations. You will find many who have some sense of these dangers, and will rejoice at the words of truth, the exposition of facts, and the clear and logical arguments by which the evils of this system are made apparent, but who are so bound by financial, social, political, or church relationships that they are silent, have not the courage to break their chains. You will find many who have taken step after step, degree after degree, in secret orders, and who speak in defense of the system, but whom, if you could inquire within, you would find sick at heart; they have been vainly following a phantom, seeking rest for their inner life in the lodge, and finding it constantly but a bar to their admission into the fullness of life in Jesus Christ. But sadder still, you will find many who worship the lodge as their god, whom you cannot hope to turn away from their idols; in secret places they plan evil, and in the execution of their designs follow destruction and death, the end of which will be national ruin and the laying waste of peace and happiness in our communities and homes; a foretaste of these horrors we have witnessed, in their dreaded reality, in this city. But what you would find by your inquiry in Chicago, would be only an index of the condition throughout our whole country. To all these, of every class, this Congress has an important mission; the vail needs to be lifted; if the better classes could but see, there would be a reform; the masses do not intend to be wrong; it is true now as of old, "Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." The words spoken, and the spirit displayed in this Convention will have their influence upon those who hear, and through the press upon those who read, not only in the community in which you are assembled, but in every part of our land. The words should, therefore, not only have clear, intellectual and logical expression, in harmony with the truth, but should be spoken in the fear of God, and under the power and anointing of the divine Spirit.

I may congratulate you on having come to our city at an auspicious time. It is a day in which Chicago is under an especial visitation from the Lord. His power is being displayed in awakening sinners, and leading many to accept salvation. In the heart of the city, surrounded by some of the vilest places of sin, Francis Murphy is preaching gospel temperance, and 10,000 persons are reported as having signed the pledge. On the South Side D. L. Moody is speaking twice a day to thousands, as he has done on the West and North Sides; and evangelists, pastors and people, are pressing the work of soul-saving in all parts of the city. It is a pleasure to welcome you at such a time, knowing your work is in entire sympathy and harmony with this most excellent service.

RESPONSE OF DR. GEORGE.

It is very unexpected to me to be called to this position at this hour, and hence any word that I may be able to say must be wholly without premeditation. This is a Congress of the Churches and of Christian people to consider the subject of secret societies. It begins at the right place. Before Christ left our world he gave a commission to his church of two-fold significance. The first enjoined the disciplining of the world, that is the teaching, to every creature on the globe, that Jesus died on Calvary to save men; and the second was an obligation upon the church to authoritatively teach all things, whatever God has commanded; and these commands of God are commensurate with an unmutated Bible.

I was reading, but a day or two ago, the exhortation of Paul to his beloved son Timothy, where he called up a number of reasons why Timothy should be a faithful and true man. First, his pedigree, in a pious mother and a godly grandmother, held him to fidelity. Second, the gift that God had bestowed upon him, bound him in the use of it to be true; and third, because of the spirit God had given him—a spirit not of fear, but of power and love. All these forced the conclusive injunction upon him, "Be not thou, therefore, ashamed of the testimony of our Lord."

All these reasons press us equally to-day to be true to every testimony of our Lord, and to not be ashamed of the cause of Christ although his name should be denied, and his cause dishonored and disowned.

In the name of this Congress, I express our hearty thanks for the kindly and beautiful words of welcome that you have just heard. We are greatly encouraged at the large number of earnest faces that present themselves at the beginning of this Congress of Christian men. This meeting is the result of much laborious effort, as many weary faces give full proof of, the result of much, very much yearning, wrestling prayer, and the unusually solemn and pertinent and persevering prayers at the opening of this meeting—all, all indicate that the Spirit of the Lord is with us, and that the blessing of the Most High God may be expected upon our deliberations.

SECRET ORDERS AND OUR FOREIGN POPULATION.

ADDRESS OF REV. L. A. JOHNSON, D. D., PASTOR OF THE FIRST LUTHERAN CHURCH, ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS.

In this land of liberty we are deluged by secret orders. No time is to be lost to obstruct the onward march of secretism. The friends of secretism are availing themselves of every opportunity to increase their numbers. This calls loudly upon us as a Christian people to stand up in our power to counteract the dangerous influence of the secret orders. As Christians we must be opposed to them, because they are in direct opposition to the spirit of the Scriptures. Often do we read passages from the holy Scriptures directly opposed to the principle on which the secret orders are based. Let me quote the following: "O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united." "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." "I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing." "I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth." "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." We need not study the secret orders much, before we observe that they are unchristian and profane. As such, they are enemies to the church of God. But if the church would only use her influence and lift up her voice against this great and growing evil, the power of these societies for evil would be so weakened as to excite little alarm. Or what is it that now constitutes the main part of their strength? It is the silent indifference or active encouragement of the church regarding them. This must not continue longer. The attitude of the church to secret orders should be that of constant and uncompromising hostility. The obligation on the church and its members to maintain a complete and entire separation from them should be imperative. This is necessary if the church of God shall keep herself pure and unspotted from the world. She must avoid all compromise with that which is evil, and free herself from all corrupting influences.

But the secret orders are not only dangerous to the church of God, but also to the family and the state. The influence must be dangerous there, where wife and children are forbidden to go, where the doors are locked and the windows are darkened. There are not many homes where the husband frequents the lodge rooms but what the wife thinks her husband is with doubtful associations. She has also a perfect right to know the character of his associates and his actions. The secret orders have long been considered as dangerous to the state. Let me quote here the well-known words of Daniel Webster in a letter dated Boston, Nov. 20th, 1835: "I have no hesitation in saying that however unobjectionable may have been the original objects of the institution, or however pure may be the motives and purposes of the individual members, and notwithstanding the many great and good men who have belonged to the order, yet, notwithstanding, it is an institution which, in my judgment, is essentially wrong in the principle of its formation; that from its very nature it is liable to great abuses; that among the obligations which are found to be imposed upon its members, there are such as are entirely incompatible with the duty of good citizens; and that all secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another and are bound together by secret oaths, are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and good government. Under the influence of this conviction, it is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths, and the formation of all such obligations, should be prohibited by law." The history of the past tells us that secret orders have made strenuous efforts to take legislation in their own hands. We notice the same thing to-day. I quote from John Quincy Adams's letter in reference to the Morgan trial: "Look at the government of New York, struggling in vain for five long years to bring the perpetrators of the murder to punishment. See the judges, sheriffs, witnesses, jurors, entangled in the net of Masonry, and justice prostrated in her own temple, by the touch of her invisible hand. Go to the records of the court; you will find witnesses refusing to testify upon the express ground of Masonic obligations, avowing that they considered their obligations paramount to the law of the land." Look at the history of the secret orders in France, Germany, Russia, England, Portugal, Spain, Mexico, and especially the history of our United States. Look at the present movements of secret orders. They knock at the doors of our homes, our churches, and halls of legislation with an alarming evil. The practices of secret orders are contrary to the institution of our popular government. It follows, therefore, that secret orders are enemies to our civil government, and should be abandoned. We glory in a republican form of government, where offices are filled by the elective franchise, and where public and individual rights can be secured only by the suffrage of a free people. But the whole body politic cannot be free and independent so long as a part of the community are banded together by the oath of secrecy to help each other to assure power and offices. We cannot give ourselves up to the secret orders. As Americans, who have been taught the lesson of freedom at the expense of the blood of our fathers and the widowhood of our mothers, we must be free. We cannot, by pledging secrecy and obedience to the secret organizations, sign away the right of private judgment.

There is no just cause for secret orders in this land of freedom. Our country is not one that is ruled by the despotic will of one individual. We have no grievances but what we have got the right to meet publicly and discuss them. This right being to a great extent denied in countries of Europe, secret societies have originated in great numbers. This spirit of secretism is transplanted to us by many of the foreigners landing upon our shores. This spirit of secretism and the socialistic pest seems to thrive well together in this our beloved land of America, and is succeeding well in uniting the laboring men into secret orders to the detriment of the laborers, stealing the money from their pockets and putting it into the hands of the socialistic agitators. I may be pardoned for dwelling a moment upon socialism as it is so closely connected with the present labor movements. That they are closely connected can be plainly seen by reading a very large number of papers like the Labor World of Philadelphia, organs of the Knights of Labor. They are growing nearer to each other continually, and are undoubtedly helping one another in the general movement. It has been stated that there are in this country much over 200,000 members of labor organizations who are more or less familiar with the doctrines of socialism. In my judgment this is a very mild statement. Our socialists are foreigners, the most of them Germans, and their numbers are constantly being recruited by immigration. In the same proportion the numbers of the secret labor organizations will increase. Have we nothing to fear from this source? The Vorbats of this city says: "You might as well suppose the military organizations of Europe were for play and parade, as to suppose labor organizations were for mere insurance and pacific helpfulness. They are organized to protect interests, for which, if the time comes, they would fight." When reading such extracts, who is it that does not subscribe to the following words by Mr. C. O. Brown in his Talks on the Labor Troubles: "The man who talks about burning the property of the rich or about murdering his more fortunate neighbors is a vile wretch, too ignorant to appreciate, or too wicked to improve, the opportunities which this free country offers to the laboring poor. Such men should be sent back to the countries where despotism crushes every aspiration, and where a titled aristocracy forbids the hope that a poor man may better his condition and become the owner of an estate." And is it not just this that the Knights of Labor have been doing in many parts of the country—destroying their neighbors' property, etc. And if the Knights of Labor are not moulded after the same model with socialism, why do we find such stanzas as the following:

"Tolling millions now are waking—
See them marching on;
All the tyrants now are shaking,
Ere their power is gone."

And the chorus to this poetry reads thus:

"Storm the fort, ye Knights of Labor,
Battle for our cause;
Equal rights for every neighbor—
Down with tyrant laws!"

But where are the tyrant laws of our free country? No true lover of his country has yet been able to find them. We are always the friends of the toiling millions, but we must denounce the secret order called the Knights of Labor together with all other secret orders.

We have great sympathy for wage workers, and undoubtedly more than the un-crowned kings and princes of the Knights of Labor. We do not look for permanent good to workingmen from this order, because it is founded on unsound principles and is fruitful of great evil results. The Knights of Labor is a secret order and is therefore based upon a wrong and dangerous principle. The Knights of Labor pretend to be the friends of the laboring classes but the history of the order has told us time and again that it works only for the interests of its own members as against all others of the same class who refuse to enter its organization. Selfishness is stamped upon this order. It says to those outside of the order that they have not right to work according to their own judgment. It has brought immense harm to the interests of the workingmen. Industrious men have been intimidated, property has been destroyed and lives have been sacrificed.

It is a very mild statement when we say of secret orders that they are not after the model of Christ. And it is a sad thing that they receive the countenance of so many professing Christians who identify themselves with them. We should have no fellowship with them. And not only that, but as Christians we should strongly oppose them. Why so? Because they are unnecessary, selfish, profane, and are opposed to Christ. If the clouds that are hovering in the heavens over the church shall be driven away the ministry must begin to denounce secret orders as well as other things which are the enemies of the church. And when the church of God comes to stand on purer ground in this respect, we will see greater throngs of pious souls, both old and young, gather under its blood-stained banner.

I am glad to say that the conference and synod that I represent has taken a decisive step in this direction. They have made it imperative for every member to sever all relations with secret orders. Never a moment have we regretted this step, but we thank the Lord the step was taken so early in the history of our church in this land. If we would change our constitution now so as to admit members of the secret orders, we would lose the majority and the best of our members. But we will never change our constitution in that way. We have no inclinations to go half with the secret orders.

We are here to sound the alarm against the evil of secretism. When shall we see the day when the church of God is purged from the abominations of secret orders and many of the sons of Levi purified from the defiling powers of darkness. It is time to root out this formidable enemy of righteousness, with all its combined and complicated powers of deception. If this can be accomplished, the church and the state shall not be the losers.

If "a man may be known by the company he keeps," he may be much better known by the God he worships. The soul of the Christian is elevated because he believes in Jehovah. The Hottentot is a Hottentot because he worships a worm.

The words "Christ is risen from the dead," should be well marked and written with great letters. Each letter should be as large as a town, yes, even as high as heaven and broad as the earth, so that we see nothing, hear nothing, think nothing, know nothing beyond it.—Martin Luther.

THE CONGRESS OF CHRISTIANS AND CHURCHES.

THE RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS.

It must have been with a just pride in the result of the work of his committee that chairman Calvin W. Pritchard called the Christian congress to order on Wednesday forenoon. The main floor of the handsome hall was occupied with several hundred delegates, with many in sympathy with the object of the meeting from the city, and doubtless a number of the curious or the hostile.

Mr. Pritchard introduced Dr. J. E. Roy, western Secretary of the American Missionary Association, who led the devotional exercises of the opening session, which were begun by singing, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." Prof. W. E. Nickle, chorister of the Moody church on Chicago Avenue, conducted the singing. Dr. Roy said he would read the 58th chapter of Isaiah, which used to be a favorite one in the Abolition days. It was the habit of those days, when in the midst of that terrible struggle, to think there could be none other like it. But we find the iniquity and the terrible power of the liquor system demanding of us equal sacrifice and labor and prayer; and then there are the questions which the present convention is called together to discuss. He spoke of his observations in the South, of the evils resulting from the secret societies there, where family and church were neglected while the secret order was supported. The money which should buy bread and sustain the ordinances of religion was squandered in these orders. This whole chapter is eminently suited to the object of the present convention.

After reading of Scripture Dr. Roy offered an earnest prayer beseeching that the Lord Jesus Christ might be exalted, true human brotherhood be honored, and iniquity rebuked through this convention. The audience arose and sang, "Stand up for Jesus," and Bro. John Dorcas of Iowa offered prayer; also Pres. E. H. Fairchild of Berea College and Pres. J. Blanchard. The devotional exercises closed with singing, "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."

Organization was begun by the election of Pres. H. H. George, D. D., to be moderator. The address of welcome by Mr. Pritchard and response by Pres. George followed, and the election of Rev. Wm. Dillon, editor of the Christian Conservator, Dayton, O., as secretary. The appointment of committees was left to the chairman by general consent. E. D. Bailey of the American, Washington, D. C., and H. W. Johnston, editor of the Western Crank, College Springs, Iowa, were elected assistant secretaries.

The addresses of the forenoon were by Rev. Halleck Floyd of Dayton, Ohio, and E. D. Bailey of Washington, on the respective topics: "The Secret Lodge System," and "What We Know about Secret Societies." Both were well received by the conference. George W. Clark, who is still singing his way on to heaven, and is just returned from his three months of labor among the colored churches, sang, "We are Workers in one Vineyard."

Rev. L. N. Stratton, from the business committee, read from the correspondence received from those who could not attend some extracts of letters from Rev. David McFall of Chambers Street Presbyterian church, Boston; H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, now in London; Pres. J. B. McMichael, D. D., of Monmouth College; Pres. James McCosh of Princeton College; Rev. C. E. Walker of Minnesota; Pres. H. A. Thompson, D. D., of Otterbein University; the secretary of the Palmer House Company, offering the use of the club room of the hotel; and reported other letters from Drs. Howard Crosby, Richard S. Storrs and George F. Pentecost, and the evangelist L. W. Munhall.

The chairman appointed Rev. S. A. Acheson, Rev. A. W. Parry and W. N. Enlow as committee on Enrollment, and after singing and prayer the noon recess was taken.

The opening devotional exercises of the afternoon were conducted by Rev. Dr. E. P. Goodwin of the First Congregational church, Chicago, who read the first chapter of John's gospel and offered an earnest prayer that Christ, the light of the world, might be present, that we may know the truth, and that our lives may be witnessing for that truth; and that the respect and confidence of men might be won, and they led away from low and questionable ways.

Upon the opening of business the president announced his appointment of the following committee:

On Resolutions: Rev. Dr. L. N. Stratton, Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, Prof. H. A. Fischer, Henry Wood, Rev. Dr. W. H. French.

On Address: Pres. E. H. Fairchild, Bishop M. Wright,

Pres. J. Blanchard, Rev. M. C. Ranssen, Rev. N. Wardner, Rev. B. T. Roberts, C. W. Pritchard, Pres. P. Goebel.
On Finance: J. P. Stoddard, J. M. Scott, J. M. Hitchcock, Rev. M. A. Gault.

The following vice-presidents were also elected:

Bishop Milton Wright, D.D.,
Rev. W. H. French, D.D.,
Rev. N. Wardner,
Rev. P. Goebel, D.D.,
Rev. E. Carlson, D.D.,
Rev. John G. Fee,
Rev. John Harper,
Rev. L. A. Johnson.

In order to perpetuate the results of this convention, Rev. Halleck Floyd moved a committee to suggest a form of permanent organization. It was suggested by the chair and others that this matter would probably be reported by some of the committees already appointed. The committee, however, was voted and the mover made chairman. The first address of the afternoon was given by Rev. N. Wardner of Syracuse, New York, editor of the Wesleyan Methodist, on the topic, "Secret Societies and Civil Courts."

The succeeding half hour was given to remarks of a voluntary nature: Rev. William Dillon said that the great objection to the lodge system was the rejection of the Lord Jesus Christ and the striking out of his name from his Word. When the lodge spirit gets into a man it ejects the Christ-spirit. As a convention we sustain the same relation to this system that the farmer does to the weeds in his corn. If he don't root out the weeds his corn will amount to nothing. So with the lodge and the church.

Rev. J. A. Cole was introduced as a missionary among the secret societies of Africa. He expressed his gratitude for the privilege of addressing the convention. He had known something of five African secret societies, among them the Kofong and the Purrow. In his efforts to evangelize the natives of his country he had found a strife going on, an invisible contest. We read the history of battles and admire the heroism of great generals, the Grants and Shermans; but there is an invisible conflict also. A struggle is going on out of sight. It is like a canker worm doing its deadly work out of sight. Light and darkness are in conflict. These secret societies are ever working out their evil designs where no man mistrusts them. He had found the African societies to be of the same nature as Masonry. His classical studies had informed him of the Eleusinian and other mysteries. He found the same mysteries in the Kofong and in Masonry. Liberia, whose institutions were modeled after the American type, was happily contrasted with the government of the British colonies of the coast. Yet the liberties of Liberia were endangered by the plots of the lodges. He had resolved to forever oppose these orders, and would give his life if need be to deliver his country from so desperate an evil.

The address of Rev. John Grunert of Urbana, Indiana, was in the German language, and so but a small portion of the audience were able to understand the eloquent gentleman. The Cynosure is fortunate in being able to reproduce it immediately in English on another page.

The next topic was "What Secret Societies have done for the Laboring Classes." The committee had requested Pres. C. A. Blanchard to open this discussion. His address was followed by remarks from Rev. Wm. Dillon who told of an amusing conversation with a Freemason who wore a compass and square, and whom he therefore addressed as a carpenter. Rev. N. Wardner objected to these labor lodges because they set man against man, the laborer against his fellow. Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, in an earnest speech, said that the lodge set men against God, the Infinite Jehovah, God of heaven and earth, to whom all created beings owe the highest allegiance. George W. Clark said the lodge strikes at the brotherhood of man—the brotherhood established by the Creator of man. In this respect it is opposed also to our Declaration of Independence—the Magna Charta of our liberties. And now transpired one of the most that was ever witnessed in a convention of our reform.

As Mr. Clark began speaking a gentleman near the door cried out to the chair and came impetuously down the aisle removing his overcoat as he came, and standing until the speaker closed his remarks, when he again addressed the chair, and giving his heavy mustache a twist, said with a slight Irish brogue that his name was William David Thomas of LaCrosse, Wisconsin. He wanted to speak for the sake of the truth. He had heard but a part of the address of Pres. C. A. Blanchard and was sorry he could not have heard the whole so that he might answer it more completely. He acknowledged that he was a Knight Templar. Several voices called on him to take the platform, which he did on invitation of the chair, and in answer to inquiries as to his standing as a representative of the lodgesaid he was pastor of the First Presbyterian church of LaCrosse. He was sorry to see so many gentlemen wasting their time on a subject they knew nothing about and could not know unless they had been Freemasons. If what is said here of secret societies be true they should not exist, but he could prove it to be false. No man could possibly be believed who should reveal the secrets of Masonry. We can't believe a man who is a liar. No man can violate his Masonic oath—the most sacred and binding of all obligations. A man who joins the Masonic lodge and reveals what he solemnly promised to conceal is an infamous liar.

A voice, "Is he a perjurer?"

"Yes, he is an unmitigated perjurer!" (Loud applause by the convention, who understood that he thereby owned that the so-called perjurers told the truth and so put himself exactly in their company.) No man, he repeated, on this floor can know what Masonry is unless he joins the order. A man may withdraw if he chooses, but he has no business to reveal Masonry. I belong to the Blue Lodge, the Royal Arch chapter, and the Knight Templars. I talk to Masons plainly in my pulpit and tell them their oaths bind them to be good men. A man can't be a third degree Mason until he prays. If the church did its duty by Freemasonry it would be the best ally the church ever had. I say it in truth, and weighing what I say, that the man who goes through the three degrees and carries out the instructions and lectures taught in them must be a perfect man. I don't say they all do so; or that one in a hundred does so; but the man who lives up to the teaching must be a perfect man.

At this a general expression of disapproval came from the audience. "Hogs can grunt," shouted Mr. Thomas.

Pres. George immediately called him to order and reminded him that he was on his good behavior as a gentleman to whom the conference had very considerably given an ample opportunity to present his case. He had invited approval or disapproval, and could not be allowed to use insulting epithets. He bid him proceed, but be honorable.

He continued that in the lodge a man promises to be guided by the inspired volume, but he could not abide the men who publish its secrets. I did not say that Masons were always perfect men. I do not say that one in 10,000 is so. But this I say, in the fear of God, that the man who carries out the precepts of the three degrees of Masonry must be a better man; he must be a Christian; he must believe in deity, in every truth of the Christian religion. I would that all men could be brought under these obligations.

A question from the audience, "Can a Jew take the three degrees of Masonry?" "Yes he can."

"Is a Jew a Christian." "Well not in every sense."

"Can a Mohammedan take the three degrees of Masonry?"

Mr. Thomas responded with hesitation that he believed so, but never knew one in the lodge. The sequence was too plain to need further question.

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan asked, "Is the acknowledgment of the name of Christ necessary for a man to be a Christian?" "He is," replied Mr. Thomas.

"Is Christ acknowledged in the first three degrees of Masonry?" "N—no."

George Clark got the floor to ask, "You say that Masonry gets all its good things from Bible, do you?" "Yes." "Why then do you need to go into Masonry and swear all its savage oaths in order to secure them?" "Well, it is not necessary."

Pres. C. A. Blanchard asked: "You are a minister of the Gospel, and acknowledge the supremacy of Christ?" "Yes."

"You want to oppose whatever opposes your Saviour?" "Yes."

"If I show you that Freemasonry strikes the name of Jesus Christ from portions of his Word will you renounce the order?"

After some hesitation Mr. Thomas replied deliberately, "I will." Pres. Blanchard said he wished to be perfectly understood and repeated the question and received again an affirmative answer. A Masonic Monitor by Daniel Sickles, 33rd degree, issued by the Masonic Publishing Co., New York, was handed up and Pres. Blanchard requested Rev. Thomas to read the Scripture quotations in the lecture of the Royal Arch degree. He complied with great hesitation and in a subdued tone quite in contrast with his vehemence a few minutes before. The passage was read from the New Testament showing him beyond dispute that the name of Jesus Christ was purposely cut out from Scripture passages. The audience listened with breathless attention, and a pious lady suggested that all should pray for the bewildered Mason. The question was then plainly and kindly asked that he fairly meet the proposition to which he had agreed.

"Well, but," Mr. Thomas replied, "this edition is dated in 1869. I joined the order twelve years ago, and I am sure the name of Christ was there when I took the degree."

"Then," it was replied, "you agree that Masonry changes every few years?"

Pres. Blanchard held the reverend gentleman to his promise made without haste in the presence of all the witnesses present, but if it would be any accommodation he would get a ritual of recent print which could not be disputed and meet Mr. Thomas in the evening, but the gentleman had other engagements.

Rev. N. Wardner offered Thomas $100 a night to discuss Masonry in the dress in which he took the third degree. Finally Rev. J. S. T. Milligan moved that in the judgment of the convention the gentleman had not made good his pledge to renounce Masonry. It was received with some hesitation; but the venerable John G. Fee arose and said in an impressive manner, "Shall we not remember the command, 'Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy brother and not suffer sin upon him.' He believed such a decision as the resolution implied was due to the convention as witnesses, and to the misguided brother as a testimony. The resolution was voted as Mr. Thomas backed out of sight behind the stage scenery.

In the evening session a half hour was given to an inspiring song service led by Prof. Nickle who was accompanied by his fine choir from the Chicago Avenue church.

The addresses of the evening were by Pres. H. H. George on "The Position of the Church toward Secret Orders," and by Rev. L. A. Johnson, pastor of the First Lutheran church of Rockford, Ill., on "Secret Societies and our Foreign Population." The latter is printed in full in this number. Dr. George's address was one of his most logical and able efforts. Those who read his great speech at Knoxville, Tennessee, will need no reminder of its convincing power. The fine singing of the choir added much to the enjoyment of the evening. A hat collection was taken up which before adjournment amounted to $110.

I. R. B. Arnold had been engaged to give a few of his calcium light pictures on the heathen origin of Masonry, and a short time was given to the exhibition before adjournment.

SECOND DAY.

The conference opened promptly Thursday morning, and Dr. George announced that Rev. R. C. Wylie of Ohio would conduct the devotional exercises, in which several members of the conference took part.

Rev. Mr. Acheson of the Enrolling committee reported the names of delegates and voluntary members recorded during the first day. The number of the former being 137, fourteen States, the District of Columbia, and Dakota, and thirteen religious denominations being represented. The committee was continued to complete their report.

Secretary Dillon read from the correspondence of the convention a letter from Prof. Lewis Davis, D. D., of the Union Biblical Seminary, Dayton, Ohio, and Elder J. L. Barlow of Guthrie Center, Iowa.

The addresses of the forenoon were by Elder C. F. Hawley of Iowa, on the topic, "Are Masonic Covenants Irrevocable?" and by Rev. Dr. W. H. French of Cincinnati, on "Secret Societies and the Church." As he introduced Dr. French the chairman happily referred to a former intimacy between them as pastors in Cincinnati. He could vouch for the opinions of the speaker, and wished to call attention to the fact that the committee of arrangements had assigned to both himself and Dr. French the same topic. This explanation was due, because some might suspect that he had somehow borrowed his brother's arguments and forestalled his address.

At the conclusion of the address Rev. J. A. Cole, the brother from Africa, was called to the platform and referred to the gift of a Bible to an African chief by Queen Victoria, saying that this book was the foundation of the prosperity of England. It was safe to say that that Bible was not mutilated by cutting out the name of Jesus Christ. It was not a Masonic Bible. It is so with this great country of America. The glory of this nation and the foundation of its prosperity was due to the cultivation of Christianity and liberty. He spoke of the African secret societies and their similarity to the Masonic lodge. He had been led to study this matter in his own country, and was determined to oppose the lodge whatever its form or name. Of the two he would prefer to remain in the heathen Kongo than join the Freemasons.

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan spoke an eloquent word for Bro. Cole, giving a brief history of his being reared as a Mohammedan, and he was, therefore, a convert from that faith. His father was now a Mohammedan priest. He was a well-educated man, having studied the Hebrew, Greek and Latin classics, the Arabic, German, English and seven African dialects. Secret societies he found directly in the way of African evangelization. He proposes to be free from this evil, and this conference should give him their heartiest God speed. Mr. Milligan moved an endorsement of this African mission, to be free from the lodge. Remarks were made upon this resolution by Dea. O. M. Brown of Oberlin, founder of the Faith Missionary Society, who referred to other heathen nations, as the Chinese, among whom secret societies were a hindrance to evangelization. He wished the resolution might be broader in its scope. Rev. D. A. Richards of Michigan, and A. C. Hand of Florida also spoke upon the resolution, which was referred to the committee on resolutions.

The work of the afternoon was taken up vigorously at 2 o'clock and a report on a permanent organization was read by Rev. Halleck Floyd, which was adopted, without discussion of the merits or demerits of the plan, as follows:

Whereas, The church is Christ's mystical body, the spiritual embodiment of Christian doctrine and service, the salt of the earth, the light of the world, and the pillar and ground of the truth.

Whereas, Denominational co-operation in the cause of truth and righteousness would greatly increase her power and influence; and

Whereas, The knowledge and confession of the true and living God, the submission of men and communities to Christ the Lord and the acceptance of the supreme authority of God's holy law are the essentials to divine glory and human happiness; and

Whereas, Secret societies are among the most mighty of opposing agencies to the universal knowledge and acknowledgment of these fundamentals of Christianity and the Christian church; and

Whereas, There is a demand and necessity for an alliance of Christian churches against the secret orders;

Therefore it is hereby declared, that the following articles of association shall constitute a basis of union for active work and co-operation of the churches opposed to secret fraternities:

ARTICLE I. This association shall be called The Congress of Churches and Christians. Its object shall be to preserve the purity and promote the efficiency of Bible Christianity and secure the overthrow of all secret fraternities.

ART. II. Its officers shall consist of a president and one vice-president from each ecclesiastical body represented in this Congress; secretary, or secretaries, and treasurer, who shall be elected at the annual meetings of the Congresses.

ART. III. The president shall preside over the meetings of the Congress, and in his absence the vice-presidents in the order of their election, or as he may determine.

ART. IV. The secretary or secretaries shall keep a faithful record of the meetings of the Congress, and shall conduct its correspondence.

ART. V. The treasurer shall keep and hold all moneys of the Congress, and shall pay out of its treasury only by its order or that of the executive committee signed by the president.

ART. VI. The officers of the association shall, together, constitute an executive committee who shall have power to call meetings of the Congress, fixing time and place, and making all necessary arrangements thereunto; and to transact any necessary business of the Congress in the interim of its sessions.

A committee to nominate officers for the new organization was named, of which Rev. Halleck Floyd was chairman. A partial report from the committee on resolutions was also read as below:

WHEREAS, We, a portion of the people of God, made up of the representatives of various Christian communions, in this first "Congress of Churches and Christians" assembled "to consider the nature and principles of the secret lodge system, and its influence on the Christian religion and civil liberty," feel that we have at heart a common cause and are confronted by a common foe; and whereas, attacks made upon our common faith and patriotism require that our defenses should be as numerous and far reaching as they, and whereas we also find that our reformatory churches and Christians are scattered over as wide a territory as our national domain, and are often envied by embarrassments from unpopularity, unwillingness to compromise the principles of the Gospel, and sometimes resulting from thinly populated localities: and whereas, we are further aware that the co-operation and unity of action required among us as a Congress of Churches and Christians cannot be wholly reached by artificial ditching to run all the streams of life and action into one body, but while we may not unite all our denominations into one ecclesiastical body, at present, we can combine our influence, faith and prayers for the purpose of greater efficiency in urging and enforcing the claims of pure religion as against the false religions which foist themselves upon the worshippers of our only Lord Jesus Christ; therefore,

1. We recommend the increased cultivation of co-operation and brotherly kindness among the reformatory churches here represented.

2. We recommend when consistent that churches adjacent to each other shall so far as practicable unite in winning souls to Christ.

3. We recommend when practicable the exchange of pulpits between the pastors of reformatory churches, and such gatherings among the membership as will intermingle and strengthen mutually their faith in Christ and the means of grace in all reformatory work.

Rev. R. W. French of Chicago interposed briefly the objection to the latter portion of the report that in adopting them the convention was assuming to do the work of an organized Christian church. It

CORRESPONDENCE.

A GREETING FROM DENVER.

The following letter, addressed to the Christian Congress from the Denver Association, was received the morning after the close of the meeting. We give it immediate publication that it may cheer a wider circle even than it had been read in the meeting:

DENVER, Col., March 28, 1887.

Though unable to be represented in the convention of the 30th inst., we are yet unwilling to have it understood from our silence that we are indifferent to the subject for which it is convened. It would afford us great pleasure to be present and listen to the discussions which must be so interesting, and which must have a vital bearing upon the interests of our common Zion. It is daily becoming more evident that the time is at hand when the best Christian minds should be turned in sharpest scrutiny upon the principles, character and tendencies of the Secret Empire; and it is our conviction that the more thorough and searching the investigation, the more alarming will it appear, and the more profound the belief that it is all arrayed against our holy religion, and against Him who is our Sovereign Lord and Master. From the nature of things we do not see how it can possibly be otherwise. The more it is studied the more marked does the antagonism appear. Their principles and rituals are not according to the faith once delivered to the saints. Their spirit is cold and formal. The most vital doctrines of grace are excluded. With so large a following of infidels and pagans, Jews and Mohammedans, how is it possible that our divine and adorable Saviour should be duly honored, or that a prayer should be offered in his name.

Recently we here have had some professed prayers offered by some ministerial members of these secret orders, in which no mention or allusion was made to Him whose name is above every name. It can hardly be difficult to see what all this means, or what terrible consequences must follow from this state of things. The work of arousing public sentiment to the impending danger may not be agreeable or popular, but he can hardly be regarded as a faithful "Watchman on the walls of Zion," who, for any such considerations draws back and keeps silent, while the wolves are ravaging both within and without the fold.

We doubt not the discussions of the convention will furnish abundant evidence that the vineyard of the Lord is now being devastated and laid waste by the various combinations of selfishness and wickedness; that "the boar out of the wood doth waste it, and the wild beast of the field doth devour it." In this view, the mission of this convention is high and most sacred. Henceforth great moral heroism will be more in demand than ever. The conflict will be at home and not abroad, and we fear it will be only too often seen, that a man's foes shall be they of his own household." We shall watch with deepest interest everything there said and done.

In this city we have a little band which has not bowed the knee to this Baal—a "remnant in great affliction and reproach." We need help. The people need more light on this subject, and we ask who there is among you who will come over to this lodge-ridden Macedonia and help us? In behalf of the True Yokefellows, T. E. BLISS, D.D., President.

WORK IN SOUTHERN OHIO.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Mar. 31, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath I preached morning and evening in Avondale Presbyterian church, Rev. Geo. C. Heckman, D. D., pastor. This congregation was organized in 1868. They have about 200 members. They have abundance of material and intellectual wealth. Three judges of the city courts worship there. I talked in the morning on moral reforms. Judge Johnston said: "I wish to thank you personally for that discourse,

It ought to be delivered in Music Hall." Another said, "That was home truth for home consumption." They are very much excited there over the election, which comes off Monday next. It determines whether they will have local option or not. They say the liquor men are sending in $10,000 to buy votes. The impression seemed to prevail that my sermon was intended to arouse Christian citizens to drive back the foe. But it was providential. I had no knowledge of these things until after the service. In the evening I spoke on the kingly authority of Christ. The hand-shaking that followed was more like a Methodist than a Presbyterian after-exercise.

On Monday afternoon the Evangelical Ministers' Association of Cincinnati met in the first Presbyterian church. There was a large turnout. "Church Union" was discussed. The discussion was suggested by the encyclical letter issued by the college of Episcopal Bishops to the Protestant churches. The address proposes that the churches unite: 1. On a return to the primitive faith and order; 2. An acceptance of the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the Word of God; 3. An acceptance of the Nicene creed; 4. The polity of apostolic succession.

Rev. Dadly Rhodes defended the letter in an encyclopedic manner from the Episcopal stand-point. Prof. E. D. Morris, D. D., showed its impracticability from a Presbyterian stand-point. Rev. Thomas H. Pearne, D. D., the representative of the M. E. church, pointed out its impossibility; and Rev. Mr. Fee, of the Baptist church, read a paper to the same effect from their point of view. The three last agreed that the unity of the Spirit was becoming more and more a fact and organic unity was neither desirable nor possible at the present. Another meeting is to be held two weeks hence in which there will be a general discussion, all participating.

On Tuesday I visited Antioch College, Yellow Springs. They have a large and handsome building and two dormitories, one for boys, the other for girls, all in a campus of ten acres, beautifully laid out. This was originally a Unitarian institution. Under Horace Mann they had over 400 students, and an endowment of $125,000. It is now in the hands of the Christian church. President Long of South Carolina is infusing new life into it. They have 125 students and a good faculty. They are having a week's vacation. There is a prospect that I may give a lecture on National Reform before the students next term. Yellow Springs is a beautiful village of 1,700. It is quite a summer resort. William Neff, of Cincinnati, has 300 acres on which he put up a great hotel beside the springs. He was offered $100,000 for the land as a site for the "Soldier's Home." He refused and the Home went to Dayton. Ex-Mayor Means, of Cincinnati, has here a fine summer residence in a ten-acre lot. Dr. Sloane said: "Topsham, Vt., was a good place to be born at, and a good place to come away from." Yellow Springs is a good place to go to and a good place to stay.

On Wednesday morning I visited Wilberforce College, an institution for the colored people. It is three miles out from Xenia. This rural retreat reminds one of the ancient seats of learning called "the shades of Greece." President Mitchell very kindly made an appointment for me to lecture before the students Thursday afternoon. On Wednesday evening I lectured in the First U. P. church of Xenia, Rev. Joseph Wright, pastor. Xenia is the county seat of Green. They have about 12,000 population. There are three U. P. congregations here. Psalm-singers are numerous in this county. This is an old tramping ground. I do not find in all the rounds anything to compass or even equal it. J. M. FOSTER.

FROM THE LOUISIANA MISSIONARY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—There is a great work to be done here, both against the lodge and against intemperance. The ministers of all the colored churches here are either members of Odd-fellow, Masonic or some other secret order, except Rev. Ambrose Hubbs and Charles Williams, pastors of the Macedonia and Pilgrim's Rest Baptist churches. Both Bros. Hubbs and Williams are seeders from Satan's secret empire. Bro. Williams has lately begun to warn his flock of the lodge evils. I preached at his church Tuesday, the 15th, a sermon of separation. I believe it did much good. Bro. Hubbs has been warning his flock against secretists these last five years; and also sisters O'Keefe and Harris of Chicago are here doing a good missionary work. They appreciate your good work, and bid you God speed.

Prof. Richey of Ohio was here a few weeks ago, and did much to enthrone the people toward prohibition. I did not learn his disposition toward the lodge, but judging from his lecture he must be an anti-lodgeite. I think I will soon get some subscribers for you and the Living Way. Several sawmills and shingle factories are now running, and work is more plentiful for laborers. I have consented to remain here until fall, God willing, preaching between Donaldsonville and Baton Rouge. There is enough to be done for Jesus. Bro. Hubbs is thankful for the Cynosure. Peace to thee.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

BARREN SOIL FOR THE LODGE.

PINE BLUFF, Ark.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We have a round of exciting times in this "miniature Africa"—as father Geo. W. Clark terms this section. Secret societies have held high carnival. The ladies élite of the colored population organized a "Mason lodge for ladies" (Queen Esther Court), the object of which as stated is to aid the wives, daughters and sisters of Masons to make themselves known as such. The installation ceremony was calculated to impress the spectators. On the walls of the room round about hung Masonic emblems, and recalled the speech of Bro. Browne at Knoxville. This occasion served happily for gathering material for future use. I was eyed inquisitively by the chiefs, for they knew me as their Micah, that never spake good of them; yet they treated me courteously, and with open ears and eyes I was fully engaged and passed, I hope, a profitable evening.

The first of this month the Odd-fellows, two lodges, were to turn out to hear their annual sermon. The rain prevented them and it was deferred till the second Sabbath when they were out in full dress. Rev. J. M. Collins, A. M. E. minister, preached the annual sermon. They returned to the hall where we hold service; and while down stairs the nurse of one of the members of the congregation came in with a little girl about three years old. On seeing familiar faces the little one cried out, "Agne; Agne! The monkeys are coming! The monkeys are coming! They are down stairs—whole lots of monkeys." In this same hall some fifteen lodges meet. The charters of eight lodges are on its walls. One day the little ones came running to me, saying, "Come, Mr. Johnston, oome and see!" I went. Their prying eyes discovered an opening to the ante-room; there was to be seen the coffin, harrow, chains, etc. Then they warmed my ears with questions. Said one, "I don't blame you for preaching against secret societies; who wants to be put in a coffin before they die;" or "bound with chains" said another, or "run over with that thing," added another; pointing to the harrow.

Rev. Helm (colored) of Memphis lectured in the First Baptist church of this place, in the interest of secret societies, and endeavored to organize a lodge of the "Knights of Christian Union." I do wish the readers of the Cynosure could have witnessed this meeting unseen, or could have heard the lecture in full. I'll dare say that in a short time missionaries would come pouring into Arkansas from all quarters, and we should have schools and churches for the heathen at our door for the destruction of the lodge monster. Rev. Helm claimed that God handed down these secrets direct; that Christ our Saviour was a secret society man; that all good men belong; that they are better to the sick than the church; they do more for the widows than the church; that you are expected to belong or join one. If you are taken sick, the first question is, "To what society does he belong?" Next, "Is he financial?" It is never asked to what church do the sick belong. He said that the out-posts were captured about the city of Pine Bluff, and he intended to take the citadel, and advised them to come and surrender, pay the fee and become "Knights of Christian Union."

The wife of Rev. Robert Wylie asked, "What do you charge ladies to join?" But before Rev. Helm could answer, Uncle Robert Wylie (as he is called) sprang to his feet for the second time during the evening, and with clenched fist beating the air, exclaimed:

"Rhodie, Rhodie, we have been together for nigh forty years, but if you join this secret society I leave you dis berry night. For any one who joins a secret society is an unbeliever, a child of darkness, and I don't have any union with them. The Bible says, 'Be ye not unequally yoked with unbelievers,' and I won't stay wid you, Rhodie, if you join: no difference if I have been wid you for nigh forty years. All secret societies are of the devil, and this is a scheme of the devil to break down the church of God. No, Rhodie, if you join I won't stay wid you. Do you hear me; and I mean it! And dis brother here, counting himself a minister of the Gospel; going round saying secret societies are better than the church of God; lying on God, saying he hand you down secrets,—don't you know, brother, you got to stand before the God you pretend to serve and what will you answer him? You say your society is better than the church of God, then it is too good for me: and the devil don't want any better preacher than you."

Rev. Helm here turned on father Wylie and said, "Here, old father, don't you see you are breaking up the meeting. I want you to stop." Then turning to the rapidly diminishing audience he said, "Some folks say old folks are childish, but I tell you they are devilish." Here the audience grew confused and rushed for the door—and there is no order in Pine Bluff of the Knights of Christian Union.

LEWIS JOHNSTON.

AN INVITATION.

WARE, Mass., March 26, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—A thought has been revolving in my mind, and I wish to present it to the friends in the anti-secrecy movement, through the columns of your most valuable paper. We would like an anti-secrecy convention held in our "Grove" the coming season, as early as July if possible. I would like to inquire through your paper if the friends in the East would concur in such an arrangement. A cottage 20x36, feet two stories high, upper rooms, a sleeping apartment, the lower used as a dining hall or audience room, also a cooking room attached. The grove a splendid place for large gatherings, and centrally located from the different railroad stations. Use of grove and cottage free for a convention of this kind. Will friends of the cause, favoring this, write us at an early date and let us know what they will do to carry forward the project? We would also be glad to meet any and all of our Western friends in such a gathering. Can we not rally our forces and "beard the lion in his den?" for this section is full of secretists. We could entertain at least twenty at the cottage. It does seem to me we need such a convention. We want speakers that are not afraid to meet this "foe of human liberty." There will be people enough to speak to, if such a meeting is once announced. Please write me at once. Yours for the right.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON III.—April 17, 1887.—Joseph makes himself known.—Gen. 45: 1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Overcome evil with good.—Rom. 12: 21.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Law of Christian Love. vs. 1-4. Paul represents him who freely pardons a wrong as heaping coals of fire on the head of the wrong doer; and John tells us that God is Love, and that God is a consuming fire. But no one who has had personal experience of divine forgiveness will find any contradiction in these seemingly opposing statements. It is undeserved grace that breaks the sinner's heart, burns up his secret idols and bows him to the dust in penitence and shame. The argument is frequently used by infidel writers that our Saviour gave the world no new moral truths. But there is no such thing in the universe as a new truth. The great truths of science were as much truths thousands of years ago as to-day. Forgiveness of injuries was just as much a moral duty in the beginning of the world as it will be millenniums hence. Christ shows himself a divine teacher in this: that he has done what all the greatest and purest teachers of antiquity failed to do. He took this doctrine of love, longsuffering, patient, enduring love and put it in the center of the Christian system like a sun, making all other doctrines and principles of religion radiate from it as from a focus. The lodge shows itself to be anti-Christian because it antagonizes at the very outset this great central truth of Christianity. It keeps its "benevolence" for its own members, and binds them by oath to follow with hatred and persecution every offending brother. How different from the teachings of our blessed Saviour, or even the example of this young Hebrew who lived ages before the Christian era!

2. God's Overruling Hand. vs. 5-12. All human history corroborates this truth, that God overrules human wickedness and brings good out of evil. Yet Joseph's kind excuses of his brethren's sins must have made their sense of guilt the keener. It is true that their crime in selling Joseph wrought out in the end a great deliverance, not only for Jacob and his family, but for Egypt and all the surrounding countries. But they meant no good. Their intentions were only evil, and God judges men by their intentions. But while the providence of God in overruling men's sins is no excuse for them, it is the greatest encouragement to Christian reformers. High as the tide of human iniquity may rise, hopeless as may seem the struggle, he is only working out through it his plans for the good of the race. When the lodge murdered Morgan it really aimed a deathblow at its own heart; when the saloon assassinated Haddock it only roused to white heat the national sentiment for prohibition. The worst thing that wicked men can do will surely turn out in the divine providence, the best thing for us—the best thing for humanity.

From Peloubet's Notes

The evil results of sin set out the guilt in blacker colors, and awaken the conscience.

Much of the punishment of all sin is future punishment; Joseph's brethren were suffering for sins committed 22 years before.

Those who have done wrong must expect to be tested and proved before they are received back into friendship and trust.

One of the best histories of early England is called "The Making of England," so many biographies should be called "The Making of a Saint." So here we have several glimpses of the process of the making of saints. Joseph's brethren have very decidedly improved under the discipline of God, till, instead of being willing to sell a brother, they are willing to be sold, and even to die, to save a brother.

The only way to overcome evil is by good. To attempt it by doing evil simply adds another evil, and does not cure the first.

Note the delicacy and courtesy with which Joseph treated his brothers who had injured him. These are Christian virtues to be assiduously cultivated. And the best cultivation is to cherish the character and heart of which such virtues are the natural fruit.

There is great comfort and encouragement in the assurance that God overrules all things. He does not destroy men's free will, but uses men's actions, and compels them to serve him and his kingdom. What a sad thing, and hopeless, it would be, if the world of human affairs were like the chance world of Hafed's Dream, or if demons had control, or men! "The Lord reigneth" is the hope of the world.

We see, in the actions of Prince Joseph to his brothers, a type of our Elder Brother, the Prince of Peace, in his dealings with his unworthy brethren. We have sinned, and ill-treated him, but he forgives us, he yearns over us, he invites us to his palace and his tables of plenty, he communicates with us, he brings us into his kingdom.

AMERICAN PLATFORM.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clanishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directed, and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutual confidence, and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable:

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors, that civil government, though ordained in God, is "founded in nature, not in grace," and therefore, that all have equal civil rights; while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion or controlling the conscience by human laws, and recognizing as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot and the stake, we at the same time as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twin and both alike enemies of liberty and welfare. We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a crime, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and while we consider government without God as a usurpation, we regard all religions and worship invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling propositions and cheats. We believe in peace and in national arbitration as a means of perpetuating it; yet we as profoundly believe that the bravery and blood of our soldiers have bought us the peace which we enjoy, and we honor the memories of the dead and will be just to the claims of the living; and we take up and prolong the strain raised by the women of this country for God and home, and native land; that this beautiful and patriotic motto will soon be not only echoed by their voices, but sustained by their votes.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes. We hold:

1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.
2. That the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.
3. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.
4. We demand the prohibition of the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating drinks.
5. We hold that the charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.
6. We are opposed to putting prison labor or depreciated contract labor from foreign countries in competition with free labor to benefit manufacturers, corporations or speculators.
7. We are in favor of a revision and enforcement of the laws concerning patents and inventions; for the prevention and punishment of frauds either upon inventors or the general public.
8. We hold to and will vote for woman suffrage.
9. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by Articles 14 and 15 of our amended National Constitution should be preserved inviolate, and the same equality should be extended to Indians and Chinamen.
10. That international differences should be settled by arbitration.
11. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.
12. That the general government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency.

13. That it should be the settled policy of the government to reduce tariffs and taxes as rapidly as the necessities of revenue and vested business interests will allow.

14. That polygamy should be immediately suppressed by law, and that the Republican party is censurable for the long neglect of its duty in respect to this evil.

15. And, finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of electoral colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGES.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day).
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists).

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership).

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part).

Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference).

Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch).
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1887.

THE SPEECH OF THE EDITOR of this paper in the "Congress" was in a sense a failure, though prepared with great care and labor. It was designed for the ministers and theological students drawn to our cause by the endorsement of Drs. McCosh, Storrs, Talmage, and Chicago Theological Professors, who by the almost universal silence of pulpit and press, have come on the stage in ignorance of the nature of the secret lodge system. But though President George had bespoke for it a favorable hearing, the platform and the house were buzzing and busy, as if the "prince of the power of the air," who had "departed for a season," had returned to depress the speaker and disturb the audience. The mass of ministers and students in this country are neither worldlings nor cowards; but, ignorant of the source and power of demon worship, our speeches seem to them exaggerated and denunciatory. Hence they oppose secret societies for what effects they see them producing, not from what they are in themselves, as fundamental and fatal evils, which the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation is set against. Hence the W. C. T. U. already shows symptoms of becoming a pillar of salt, looking languishingly on temperance and the Knights of Labor lodges; and our young girls are invited to advertise their chastity by a regalia of white ribbons, instead of "purifying their hearts by faith."

We shall yet endeavor to get the learning and logic of that lost discourse into the minds of the ministry and scholars of this country and age.

THE CONGRESS OVER.

Those who have looked, longed, and prayed for this Christian Congress, will rejoice at the following proofs of its success:

1. The number of members was above three hundred from fifteen States. Some were sent by individual churches; some by conferences, presbyteries, and synods, so that the Congress represented many thousands of the best people in the United States.

2. But the power of a meeting is not measured by its numbers. "One hundred and twenty" poor men and women held a meeting in "an upper room" whose vibrations shook the world; and President George and others said at the opening, "God has come here before us and met with us at the beginning."

3. The large city dailies, by their reporters (who were abused, assaulted, and all but assassinated by the lodge-socialists and anarchists), have given large, and generally excellent reports of the speeches; particularly of those by President George and President C. A. Blanchard. Eighteen years ago, our first annual meeting in Farwell Hall, Chicago, addressed by Senator Pomeroy, then one of the most popular members of the United States Senate, and attended by members from nineteen Christian denominations, but one Chicago daily noticed our meeting with decent respect.

4. The convention was harmonious and happy. A well-dressed man came forward late on Thursday, giving his name as William D. Thomas, a Presbyterian minister, Mason, and Knight Templar of LaCrosse, Wis. He spoke with arrogance; and uttering some things known to be untrue, by the audience, some of them groaned slightly. "Grunt!" said he. "Hogs can grunt." He was called to order; and as he closed, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, who had said Masons dropped Christ's name from the Bible used in the Blue Lodge, asked him, "If I will prove to you on good, Masonic authority that the lodge drops Christ's name from the Bible, will you renounce Masonry?" He said he would. The Masonic manual was opened and he was shown, before the audience, two places where Christ's name was dropped, and then asked to fulfill his promise and renounce the order. The man quibbled, stammered, wanted to know the date of the book, and said he had "joined the lodge since that edition was printed." He was reminded that Masonry boasts that it is unchangeable; but the offer was made to send to a Masonic store, and bring in a fresh edition. The poor man writhed, leaned against the boards behind him, and began to declaim irrelevantly about "Truth," "Truth," his object was "truth."

The audience began to call—"Renounce," "Renounce!" "Your promise: fulfill your promise." Amid which the poor soul suddenly slunk through a side door and disappeared.

Rev. M. C. Ranssen of the Lutheran Synod, remarked in private conversation, "I think that man's appearance on the platform produced more conviction in the crowd than many good speeches."

5. The Congress passed two important votes, viz., for a meeting for the South, to be held next winter, and for a committee on co-organization of women for this cause. The whole South is now heaving with the secret society question. And though the white people of the South are sensitive about social equality with the negroes, they have no objection to laboring to save the colored churches of the South from disintegration by the secret lodges. If we can hold a convention in the Central Congregational church of New Orleans, where the white faculty of Straight University worship, the whole South can be reached by it as the forest by a wind. The clergy of the Presbyterian church South are said to be free from the lodge defilements. Dr. Henry M. Smith of the Southwestern Presbyterian, a profound and influential minister, is against the lodge, and the great and venerable Dr. McCosh is trusted and beloved by that church generally. Rev. Mr. Hinman, who knows and is well known all over the South, says, "New Orleans is the point, and the Central Congregational church the place for a Southern convention," which will draw from Florida, Texas, and even from Mexico. We begin thus early to draw out our correspondents, for "in the multitude of counsel there is safety."

In Florida, Dr. J. N. Bishop, a prominent citizen of Sanford, and his excellent lady would encourage a convention in Florida, which is fast getting to be "a Southern State with Northern principles," and its climate is beautiful in winter.

ST. JOHN IN FARWELL HALL.

"Nobody can equal that," said Mr. Webster, as he and the whole Senate and House came out from listening to S. S. Prentiss. We were forcibly reminded of that remark of Webster by Gov. St. John's speech in Farwell Hall last Friday night. The great auditorium was filled to overflow, floor and gallery, and the speaker held the vast crowd for near two hours in rapt attention. We shall try and give portions of the press reports of his harangue in our temperance columns. The applause was enthusiastic and produced by his keen, good-humored utterance of solemn truth. He excels all orators but Lincoln in making truth so plain that nobody can help seeing it. It was the eve of the city election. Carter Harrison would not run, and Roche (Republican) and Nelson (Socialist) are the candidates of the popular parties. Col. Whitlock, the Prohibition candidate, presided in the St. John meeting, and opened with a few sensible remarks. He was cheered loud and long by the audience who were almost all men. St. John was speaking of the great increase of Prohibitionists in the country. He was interrupted by a voice, "Two-thirds women!" He paused in the midst of a grand illustration and replied, "Some one says the Prohibitionists are two-thirds women. We call the reporters' attention to the fact that this audience is not two-thirds women." The applause was deafening and prolonged.

Before our present issue is mailed the city election will be over. Carter Harrison has signalized his craft by retiring and letting the socialists and anarchists try their hand. The telegraph will have given the result of this singular election to the country and the world before this writing reaches our readers. If the Republicans are beaten the secret lodges and the withdrawal of Prohibition voters will do it. Most of the city papers ignore the Prohibition nomination, saying there are but two candidates, Republican and Socialist,—a singular election in which the Democrats have no candidate. If half the voters who cheered St. John last Friday night vote for Whitlock, the papers will learn that there is a third candidate, and the question will get down to a single issue between right and wrong as in the slavery struggle. The pestilent secret orders will be the soul of one party and the other will be an American party which will absorb the original Republicans.

In the great mass who crowded to hear St. John some one marched in a troop of well-grown children on one corner of the platform with little temperance collars around their necks. But though Mr. Geo. C. Christian, who aspires to be Finch's Chicago lieutenant took up the collection and spoke ramblingly to the crowd, neither he nor St. John took any notice of the Good Templars, though there are lodges here. The Good Templars are the mar-plot of the temperance as the secret Know-Nothings were of the anti-slavery reform, "bribing, dividing, and amusing." And no reform will succeed till it has shaken off that home and shelter of devils, the secret lodge.

—We refer Rev. D. K. Laurence of Big Springs, Kansas, to the present and following numbers of the Cynosure for answers to their earnest and good letters concerning the Congress which reached us after it was over.

—Bro. Hinman remains a short time in Chicago, planning still for the South. He is urging so strenuously that Rev. J. A. Cole, the African brother, be sent on a tour of a few weeks with him, that we are all becoming of the same opinion.

—The assistance of Profs. Nickle, Excell, and the Moody church choir was very heartily given to the congress, and was as heartily appreciated. As Bro. Clark begins to look across to the choirs of heaven and already to hear their strains, it must be to him as to us all, a cause of thanksgiving that young men of such ability, culture and spirit are coming on to take his place.

—Our sister city of St. Louis instead of rejoicing in the new law which would give her a quiet Sabbath—the saloon dens closed and beer gardens dark and silent, the streets quiet, without the shouting of the news-boy or the rumble of the street-car—instead of accepting the Downing law and the Governor's proclamation as a blessing, the people are grumbling ominously. The saloonists are in consternation, and their power is not yet broken in St. Louis.

—It was a regret to many at the Christian Congress that Miss E. E. Flagg, of Massachusetts, was not able to attend, because of the health of her father. Two of her friends had become responsible to the committee for her expenses and when the last mention of her coming was made in these columns, it was confidently expected that many who have learned to esteem her highly for her works' sake might have the privilege also of a personal acquaintance.

—As it is probable that the full report of the conference of last week will be published, with the addresses, by the permanently organized body, it might be considered discourteous for the Cynosure to publish these addresses entire. The Christian Conservator of Dayton printed the opening speech by Rev. Halleck Floyd last week. We had hoped to give the address of Rev. Mr. Grunert along with pastor Johnson's in the present number of the Cynosure, but the translation was not completed in time. We hope to publish two or three others during successive weeks, leaving the remainder to the committee in charge.

—The Chicago press reported the conference of last week with praiseworthy care. Except in the case of the Masonic pastor from LaCrosse they manifested great fairness, and as that episode took place late in the afternoon the reporters had gone. The Times of Thursday gave two columns and one and a half Friday, making a synopsis of most of the addresses. The Tribune closed its report with the comment: "The sessions were well attended throughout, and were characterized by a remarkable degree of zeal and earnestness. If the meeting accomplished nothing more, it has certainly done a great work in inspiring its attendants with renewed zeal in the cause in which they so devoutly believe."

—At the closing exercises of the Reformed Presbyterian Seminary in Allegheny City, says the Reformed Presbyterian magazine, Dr. Stevenson, at the request of the board, directed the attention of the students to synod's action in reference to the use of tobacco, and referred to it as a great moral weight upon a minister's character, which would hold him back so that he could not get forward, and hold him down so that he could not rise. He also spoke of the wonderful opportunities now presented, and closed by uttering the conviction that in the band of students then before him, there was enough of intellectual and moral strength, even if they stood alone, to carry forward any great moral reform, to the success of which they would consecrate their lives, so as to insure its complete and final triumph. The chairman made the closing address, emphasizing the testimony against the use of tobacco, declaring it to be a "lust of the flesh," which must be crucified, and setting forth the necessity of fidelity on the part of the student to all the duties of the student, from the first day to the close of the course. He closed by presenting in behalf of the Board of Foreign Missions, the claims of the mission work, and made an eloquent appeal for entire self-surrender to the cause of Christ. Certificates were granted to six students of the fourth year, as having completed their course, and commending them to the church as candidates for the ministry; also, to four students of the third year, recommending them to their presbyteries for licensure.

—As we go to press the result in Michigan is given, 15,000 for the prohibitory amendment.

AN AFRICAN INDUSTRIAL AND THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—I am convinced that the Congress of Churches has been a mighty instrument in the hand of God to aid in breaking down the strongholds of Satan throughout the world. This it has done in America by standing face to face with that Dagon, and we have all seen openly how Dagon fell before the ark in the shameful defeat of Rev. Mr. Thomas, who audaciously came into the congress to defend his heathenish lodge against the force of the religion of Christ, but was brought to his wits end, and left the hall in shame and confusion. It will do good in England by the publications in exposition of Masonry, for by this the veil of secrecy is opened and the folly and superstition of the fraternity exposed.

I am happy to inform you that the result of the congress has opened the way for a gleam of light for the dark continent of Africa. Bro. Ezra A. Cook has given me to-day $50 in anti-sect books, and promises to increase it to $100 per annum for the benefit of the above institution. I must also acknowledge the sum of $23.13 from Wheaton congregation; $16 from Wesleyan church, Dayton, O.; $9 from Wesleyan church, Ripley, O.; Wesleyan church, Richmond, Ind., $3, and $5 from the M. E. church, Ripley, O. J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Since I last wrote you, the vexed question of Inter-State Commerce Commissioners has been settled and the little army of ignored applicants who waited in suspense for recognition from the President has had to content itself as best it could. The five lawyers selected for the new National Court have been thoroughly dissected, discussed, viewed from every standpoint, and finally pronounced good. The Commission will organize and enter upon its duties.

The next trouble in connection with it is in finding a home for the new bureau. That devolves upon Secretary Lamar, and the Interior department is already overcrowded.

The President pronounced the construction of this Commission the most perplexing problem yet encountered by him in his present office, and the universal praise accorded to his selection gives him much gratification. But the Commissioners cannot fail to have a hard time at best. They are good men and able men, but their labors will be complex, comprehensive and exacting beyond description, and they have an immense puzzle to work out in the new law. Jay Gould said it was a good thing that they were all lawyers, for they would get out of the law all there was in it.

The effect of the new law upon Washington will be to greatly increase the activity of the coming summer. A large bureau must be rapidly organized, a clerical and official force employed, and thousands of persons interested in questions coming before the Commission will swoop down upon it even before it is ready to receive them. The clerical force of the Inter-State Commission will not come under civil service rules. The Commissioners could, it is said, place the organization of their clerical force under these rules, but it is not probable that they will voluntarily surrender the power of selection and appointment vested in them.

The President's next difficult task will be to construct a Commission to investigate the Pacific railroads. It is predicted that he will have even more trouble in finding the right men for these places than he had in selecting the Inter-State Commerce Commissioners.

It is now a settled fact that Mr. Fairchild, the Assistant Secretary, is promoted to the Secretaryship of the Treasury. The selection is the outcome of an interesting political experiment. The President declared his desire to wipe out sectional prejudices in financial matters by the appointment of a popular leader of his party in the West or South, qualified to assume the task.

The President was doubtless sincere in his purpose, and endeavored to find a popular leader who was a practical financier, and willing to assume the responsibility of controlling the national finances for the next two years. But he did not succeed. The desired statesman either was not found or was not willing to serve, and the President, after offering to sacrifice personal preference, and to make an appointment in compliance with political dictation, has returned to Mr. Fairchild.

An old soldier has recently had great good fortune by way of pension. He had been a private in an Indiana company, was totally blind, and had been a regular visitor at the Pension Office every day for more than two months, so that the clerks in the office of the Chief Clerk, where he always presented himself, had come to take an interest in him. One Monday morning he was rather late making his appearance and said that he had about given up all hope. But the Saturday before he had been granted an arrearage pension of more than $11,000, and the clerks gathered around him to see how he would take the good news. Tears of joy ran down the old man's haggard, thin face, and he rejoiced and wept for nearly an hour. He had never dreamed of half so much money before. After living for years on his pension of $8 a month, he was made a rich man. The lady clerks were so much affected by the old man's emotion that they wept with him, and for a time there was not a dry eye in the room. *

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

A BOSTON PREACHER TO SUCCEED BEECHER.

Rev. Dr. R. R. Meredith, pastor of the Union Congregational church, Columbus Avenue, has announced to that society his intention to accept the call to succeed Henry Ward Beecher.

Dr. Meredith is an eloquent speaker and an able exponent of the Word. His Saturday lectures in Tremont Temple for many years, on the International Sunday School Lessons, have given him considerable popularity. Sunday-school teachers and superintendents of every evangelical denomination attend these lectures in large numbers. As a preacher he is argumentative, aggressive, pungent and forcible. Once having uttered a proposition he defiantly sweeps his piercing eyes over his audience, throws his head back stiffly, and compresses his naturally curling, sarcastic lips as though awaiting a possible assault or contradiction, before proceeding further. For originality of thought bearing upon any topic he attempts to elucidate, it is conceded, I think, that he is without a peer, at least in this city. The almost unanimous opinion which his hearers form, is, that he has a mind of his own and knows how to express it.

Physically, he is large and robust, standing in height nearly six feet and weighing over 200 pounds. His complexion is dark, and his age I judge to be about fifty years. It is rumored that he is of direct Irish descent, which, if true, his combative temperament would seem to confirm. About ten years ago he was a member of the Methodist Conference and pastor of the Temple Street Methodist church, which pulpit he vacated on receiving a call to the Phillips Congregationalist church, South Boston. A few years later he received a call to the Union Congregationalist church on Columbus Avenue where he now officiates. The force of habit is difficult to overcome. As a Methodist minister Mr. Meredith doubtless acquired a habit of itinerancy which seems to assert itself occasionally in his new environment.

The Boston Globe very concisely and graphically reports his announcement to the Union church of his intention to accept the call of the Plymouth Society as follows:

At the close of his sermon at the Union Congregational church, yesterday morning, Rev. Dr. Meredith said: "I have a word to add which is more personal. It need be but a word just now because so much is understood between us and because there will be further opportunity to say all that ought to be said. You have known something of the sore perplexity which has been upon me for weeks past. I have never before found it so difficult to decide what was the right thing to be done. The question before my mind has been so evenly balanced on its two sides that I have simply been brought to a standstill. Hence I have waited and kept you waiting, contrary to my purpose and desire, thus holding you in uncertainty beyond the limits of anything I had a right to impose on you. Having now reached a decision, I hasten to make it known to you. It seems clear to me that it is God's will that I should take up the work to which I have been called in the city of Brooklyn. Of course I may be mistaken but that is my conviction. My work in Boston is such, however, that it cannot be suddenly terminated. If you will let me, I hope to be your pastor for some months yet. This word is not intended as my resignation, but simply to make known to you the conclusion reached in my own mind. It has been suggested that I might decline the call to Brooklyn now, and let it be renewed later on. That suggestion I could not accept. It would not be compatible with my self-respect, nor in harmony with the simple candor with which I have sought to deal with you from the beginning. No, I have reached a decision, and though it may not be acted on at once, you have a right to know what it is. So to you first and without delay, my dearest and best friends, I make it known. Now, for the present, we will go on with our work, all planning, praying and working together to serve the Master by rendering Union church more efficient and prosperous than ever."

Dr. Meredith is a brother of Mrs. McLaughlin, the gifted and very efficient temperance lecturer.

REVIVAL IN WARREN AVENUE CHURCH.

Dr. Munhall is holding very successful revival meetings in the Warren Avenue Baptist church since closing those at Clarendon street. Last Sunday afternoon he preached to women only on the "Model Woman," and in the evening to men only on what he considers the giant sin of the past, present and future—licentiousness. Mr. D. B. Towner, his singing companion is prostrate with a severe cold, which, it is feared, may terminate in pneumonia.

D. P. MATHEWS.

FROM LIBERIA FAITH MISSIONARIES.

MONROVIA, Africa, Feb. 14.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It is now almost nine weeks since we arrived in Africa. I will not try to go into all the details of our stay here, but will only give a few incidents of the way the Lord has dealt with us. To-day finds us well and happy and enjoying salvation. The dear Lord has taken care of us and not let us starve. Our temporal needs, as well as spiritual, have been supplied. Praise the Lord! The devil is doing all he can to defeat this work and discourage us, but he has not accomplished much yet. We believe the Lord is in this work, and if he is, it will prosper, so we mean to trust and not be afraid.

Three weeks after we arrived here Bro. Harris was taken with the African fever, and got through with it all right. Not many weeks after the rest of us were taken with it, and one dear, good sister was taken from our midst.

Sister Knapp took the fever the 25th of January, and died February 2nd. The day after she was taken sick Bro. Harris advised her to take some remedy, but she refused, as she was feeling so much better than the day before, and said she would have to feel worse than she did before she took anything. From that time on she continued to grow worse, still refusing to take any remedy. The evening before she died she called for medicine, but it was too late to do any good. The next day she was unconscious most of the day. Everything was done that could be done to save her life, but all was in vain. It was hard, indeed, to see her slipping away from us, and we unable to do anything to save her. But we can say, the will of the Lord be done. She died in her unconscious state, eight minutes before three o'clock, A. M., February 2nd, and was buried at about four o'clock P. M., the same day. The funeral services were held at the house, conducted by Rev. Mr. Sevier, the Presbyterian minister, who improved the occasion by talking for a short time from 2 Tim. 4: 7. Her body was conveyed to the graveyard by four Kroo men. Thus we witnessed the first funeral in Africa. It was a sad sight. Do our friends in America realize what it means to leave all for Jesus's sake? It seems to me if they did, they would take more interest in foreign missions. I believe I realize and understand, as I never did before, the language of the hymn,

"Jesus I my cross have taken,
All to leave and follow thee;
Naked, poor, despised, forsaken,
Thou from hence my all shall be."

We feel that if Sister Knapp had taken remedies in time she would undoubtedly have been living now. Though we shall miss her keenly in our little mission, we feel that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord." We see a great deal of work to be done here, and also a great need of men and women, filled with the Holy Ghost, to sow the seed. The people seem so hungry for the truth.

At present there is no public school in Monrovia. We are expecting to move our little school into our own mission house next Monday, as it will be then completed. We expect to have a large number of day scholars, all we can accommodate. We have taken four native boys into our family, but are not going to take any more until we get a crop in.

Bro. Harris is finishing up the house and fencing the little farm this week. Next week (D. V.) he is going up into the interior to open a station in the Pessa tribe. A brother Porterfield has offered his farm and services for this station, and is now building a mission house. The brother is a Liberian, and can speak the Pessa language. We think it a good opening, and believe the Lord is in it.

Bro. Harris will travel in the interior a short distance, and hold meetings at the different native towns, and will stay probably three or four weeks before returning to Monrovia.

Although our number is few, yet we have God with us, and he will help us to carry on the work he has called us to.

We desire that God's people will remember us at the throne of grace. Your sister in Christian love

LIZZIE COX.

NOTE.—Miss Eunice Knapp, whose death is sadly noted above, was, we believe, for some time associated with Mrs. Mumford in Bulgaria. Sister Cox was for a time a compositor on the Cynosure shortly before she left this country.

—A great revival is in progress at New Egypt, N. J. The meetings are conducted by two students from Princeton. The work is advancing and spreading, and there seems to be no limit to the influence upon neighboring churches. Up to last week over one hundred had confessed Christ.

THE HOME.

MEDITATIONS.

BY REV. W. F. ROACH.

ETERNITY.

Eternity! The word is far too vast
For men. God says it shall forever last.
Forever! Yes. My soul shall never die,
But shall live on as year by year rolls by.
When countless centuries, in number more
Than grains of sand along the ocean shore
Have glided past, there still will be to come
The long and endless years of which the sum
Will far exceed the num'rous blades of grass,
That ever grew since time began. Alas!
For some in pangs of mis'ry shall be racked,
Because in life the better part they lacked.
The ages still shall ever come and go,
Their numbers great so that no man can show
The sum, e'en though he told with anxious care
The little drops that in the ocean were;
E'en though he told the stars that shine above
And little orbs that say that "God is love."
'Tis useless to go on, for mortal man
Must live as long as when he first began.

VARIATION.

Some men are like a summer's gentle breeze,
Which blows to-day, to-morrow seeks its ease,
When borne aloft by flames inspiring note,
They do their work as if 'twas done by rote.

DANGEROUS LITERATURE.—A PROTEST.

BY MRS. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

Is it safe to send our young people, with their gentle, susceptible souls, on a lengthy wade through the productions of unhallowed minds? True it is that ungodly individuals have sometimes by hard study and persistent application acquired a good understanding of an art or science. Through such it is harmless to follow them, providing one is capable of discovering and rejecting any outcropping of infidelity which may occur.

Arts and sciences do not appeal to the passions; but can this be said of the literary works of many of the so-called great authors? We are told it is necessary that the works of noted authors be studied in order to obtain their style. Ah! it is to be feared their style has spoiled the keen edge of the sword of many of Christ's soldiers. Does a student plunge into a Shakespeare's or a Byron's boiling caldron of unsanctified thoughts, emotions and desires and escape unharmed?

A noble, intelligent boy graduated from a high school in one of our small cities. He was a happy Christian for a time; but at a certain stage of his education he was required to read the writings of noted men, among which were Dickens's novels. A sad change came over the young man.

Two farmer boys once took part in an old-fashioned school exhibition. They learned and acted the part of robbers. One of the boys has since stated that while studying his part he felt the robber impulse come upon him. Our Saviour has said, "No man having drunk old wine straightway desireth new, for he saith the old is better." Let us then be careful how we acquire a relish for those mental drinks which are the product of men's decayed passions, if we would be capable of enjoying the new wine of God's word and Spirit. The Lord preserve us from all evil!

Wheaton, Ill.

ADVANCE THE STANDARD.

The Christian life is a constant progress. Individually and collectively, the church of Christ is called to go forward! and none but those who are ready to go forward can be truly leaders of the flock of God. There is a story of a colored standard bearer, who in a certain battle, was seen bearing his flag quite a distance in advance of his regiment. Fearing that the flag would be captured, they called to him,—

"Bring back that flag!"

"No," said he, "dis flag doesn't go back; bring up de men!" He had in him the spirit and enthusiasm of a leader.—a hero.

The man who fights the Lord's battles needs to be a man of courage and self-forgetfulness. Ancient history tells us of a soldier who won the admiration of all by his undaunted valor, and apparent indifference to danger and death. The secret of his bravery was, he was smitten with a mortal disease, and, thinking that he had but a short time to live, he fought with the utmost fury, and seemed a stranger to all fear. His bravery attracted attention, and awakened sympathy; and a skilled physician succeeded in removing his disease, and restoring him to health. But when health came his bravery departed. He was no longer found in the battle's front; he had learned to prize his life, and cling to it, and was loth to expose it to danger.

Those servants of God who have been leaders in the fight of faith have loved not their lives unto death. When dangers have threatened them they could say with the apostle, "We had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God which raiseth the dead." They who follow Christ are to hate even their own lives, and say with the apostle, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God." To the faithful Christian death is a conquered foe; all things are his, whether life or death, or things present or things to come. With this consciousness we may press forward with fresh courage, fighting the good fight of faith, laying hold on eternal life, and winning at last the crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Mr. E. P. Smith relates that, during the terrible charge up Missionary Ridge, four soldiers were seen bearing back a comrade on a blanket. When they laid their burden down he knelt by him, and said,—

"Sergeant, where did they hit you?"

"Most up the Ridge, sir."

"I mean, Sergeant, where did the ball strike you?"

"Within twenty yards of the top, almost up."

"No, no! Sergeant, think of yourself for a moment; tell me where you are wounded;" and turning back the blanket, I found his upper arm shouldered mashed and mangled by the shell. Turning his eye to look for the first time upon his wound, the Sergeant said, "That is what did it! I was holding the standard to my blouse, and making for the top. I was almost up, when that ugly shell knocked me over. If they had left me alone a little longer, two minutes longer, I should have planted the colors on the top. Almost up, almost up!"

His own regiment, rallying around the colors that had dropped from his shattered arm, was even then shouting the victory for which he had given his life; and he was dying without the sight.

The Lord calls for men who shall be good soldiers of the cross of Christ, and they are to endure hardness, and count not their lives dear unto themselves. And when assailed by foes on every hand, they are still to keep pressing onward and upward; and if stricken and pierced and wounded and sore they are still to press forward, until the victory is gained. And when such an one finds himself borne down by his adversaries, assailed in reputation, wounded in feelings, crippled and hindered and crushed, if the question comes, "Where did they hit you?" his answer is, "Almost up, almost up!" However he may be smitten and stricken, the bolts of his foes and the fiery darts of his adversaries will find him making for the top—pressing forward to win the victory, and standing at last among those who overcome through the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony.—The Christian.

HOLD UP THE LIGHT.

The famous Eddystone light-house, off the coast of Cornwall, England, was first built in a fanciful way, by the learned and eccentric Winstanley. On its sides he put various boastful inscriptions. He was very proud of his structure, and from his lofty balcony used boldly to defy the storm, crying, "Blow, O winds! Rise, O ocean! Break forth, ye elements, and try my work!" But one fearful night the sea swallowed up the tower and its builder.

The light-house was built a second time of wood and stone by Rudgard. The form was good, but the wood gave hold for the elements, and the builder and his structure perished in the flames.

Next the great Smeaton was called. He raised a cone from the solid rock upon which it was built, and riveted it to the rock, as the oak is fastened to the earth by its roots. From the rock of the foundation he took the rock of the superstructure. He carved upon it no boastful inscription like those of Winstanley, but on its lowest course he put, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it;" and on its keystone, above the lantern, the simple tribute, "Laus Deo!" and the structure still stands, holding its beacon light to storm-tossed mariners.

Fellow-workers for the salvation of men, Christ, the Light, must be held up before men or they will perish. Let us, then, place him on no superstructure of our own device. Let us rear no tower of wood, or of wood and stone. But taking the Word of God for our foundation, let us build our structure upon its massive, solid truth, and on every course put Smeaton's humble inscription, and then we may be sure that the light-house will stand.—Selected.

INVENTIONS COPIED FROM NATURE.

Most of the skilful devices invented by men for doing fine work rapidly can be traced to nature, where for countless centuries they have been operating. The discoverer of each new appliance or mechanism might be shown that his idea was as old as the hills. It is claimed that the inventors of the future will be those who carefully study the natural world.

The buhr-stones of mills are another style of the molar teeth which grind all the grist that feeds men and beasts. The hoofs of horses are made of parallel plates like carriage springs. The finest file of human manufacture is a rough affair compared with the Dutch rush used by cabinet-makers. The jaws of the turtle and tortoise are natural scissors. The squirrel carries chisels in his mouth, and the hippopotamus is provided with adzes, which are constantly sharpened as they are worn. The carpenter's plane is found in the jaws of a bee. The woodpecker has a powerful little trip-hammer.

The diving-bell imitates the work of the water-spider, which constructs a small cell under the water, claps a bubble of air between its hind-legs, and dives down to a submarine chamber with the bubble, displacing the water gradually until its abode with the fishes contains a large airy room surrounded by water.

In laying its eggs on the water the gnat fastens them into the shape of a life-boat, which it is impossible to sink without tearing it to pieces. The iron mast of a modern ship is strengthened by deep ribs running along its interior. A porcupine quill is strengthened by similar ribs. When engineers found that hollow beams were stronger than solid ones, they only discovered a principle that is very commonly seen in nature. A wheat straw, if solid, could not support its head of grain. The bones of the higher animals are porous, and those of birds, where lightness and strength are most beautifully combined, are hollow. The framework of a ship resembles the skeleton of a herring. Aeronauts try to copy the structure and movements of birds.

Palissy, the French potter, studied sea-side shells to learn the best method of fortifying a town. The ship-worm is an admirable tunneller, boring his way through any submerged timber, and lining the round passage with a hard casing. The engineer Brunel took a hint from this animal, and was the first to succeed in tunneling under water. The Eddystone Lighthouse is built on the plan of a tree trunk, and is fastened to the rock in a manner similar to the way a tree clings to the soil. It is supposed that the first idea of a suspension bridge was suggested by the creepers of a tropical forest.

When plans were wanted for the London Crystal Palace, Joseph Paxton, gardener to the Duke of Devonshire, having noticed the structure of the gigantic leaves of the enormous water lily, Victoria Regia, a plant which had been introduced into England a few years before, adopted the idea of copying in iron the ribs of the leaf, and filling the remaining space with glass. So by patterning after nature, the obscure florist became Sir Joseph Paxton, the great architect.—Harper's Young People.

"TELL ME SOMETHING ABOUT JESUS."

A soldier was once led to Jesus by a very little boy. The soldier was quartered for some weeks, one winter, with a pious farmer and his family. It was their rule, before eating, to ask a blessing upon the food; and after their meal they always gave thanks to God who had provided it.

The soldier had not been used to do this, and the first morning he spent with that family he could not help thinking, "Well, these people must love God." And as he sat by the window, thinking of the lessons he used to learn in the Sabbath-school many years before, and about his mother's advice when he left home, the farmer's little boy came up to him, and very lovingly looking into his eyes he said: "Tell me something about Jesus."

This request rather startled the soldier; and he went on to tell the little fellow some stories about dogs, horses, cows and other things, but the boy was not satisfied with this; and looking up earnestly into the soldier's face again, he said: "Do tell me something about Jesus."

The soldier was somewhat ashamed: and in sorrow he replied: "I don't know anything about Him!" The little fellow was much surprised at such an answer; so he said to the soldier: "What! you so big, and do not know anything about Jesus Christ! If you do not love him and serve him now, when you die you will not go to heaven!"

The soldier never forgot those words of the little boy. He gave his heart to the Saviour; he became a servant of Jesus Christ; and now he knows that he will go to heaven when he dies.—Ex.

THE SONG OF THE CLOCK.

Stay, master, a moment, and hear me, I pray,
And mark what I say,
And mark what I say:
For years I have hailed you by day and by night,
To bid you do right, do right,
Do right!

Yet little you heed my monotonous song,
Which warns against wrong,
Which warns against wrong;
You forget that you have with each moment's flight
Less time to repent and do right,
Do right!

From daylight to darkness, from darkness to dawn,
I continue to warn,
I continue to warn;
I'm a time-piece, 'tis true; but my chiefest delight
Is to bid you do right, do right,
Do right!

Each vibrating pulse of my being is fraught
With serious thought,
With serious thought;
For I know that each tick of mine heralds the flight
Of a soul into darkness—do right,
Do right!

What though the heart's sorrows, and passions and strife
Cloud darkly your life,
Cloud darkly your life;
Gaze steadfastly onward, where promises bright
Beam calmly for those that do right,
Do right!

Though fameless, I'm sinless, industrious, true,
And so should be you,
And so should be you;
Would you have a heart cloudless and joyous and bright;
Try, try to do right, do right,
Do right!

Then scorn not my pleading, good master and friend,
For you may depend,
For you may depend,
That the dawn of true happiness follows the night
Or the day of resolve to do right,
Do right!

THE CLOTHES PIN GARDEN.

One, two, three, four broken clothes-pins in the midst of the dead flowers and leaves in Benny Blake's garden!

"How came they there?" I asked.

But Benny looked very sober, and digging the toe of his little boot into the carpet, he said in a low voice, "I put them there, auntie."

"What for, dear?"

"Cause," said Benny. "But it is a very great secret with mamma and me," he added.

"A nice one, I hope, dear?"

"Not—a—very—nice one," replied Benny, "I've had lots and lots nicer."

When he said this his voice was sober as well as his dear little face. Of course I did not try to find out the secret. I heard nothing more about the clothes pins until this summer when we were at the seashore together.

One day Benny made a sand garden, with shells and stones for a wall. In it he put some wild flowers he had gathered that morning. When it was in full bloom he led mamma to it, saying, with a very happy smile on his face, "These are ever so much nicer than old clothes pins, aren't they—the flowers are?"

The tears came into mamma's eyes as she kissed the dear face. Her voice trembled when she answered, "So much nicer, darling."

The next day I was told the secret. Benny had one dreadful fault—sometimes he would tell a lie. So every time he told an untruth mamma had him put a broken clothes pin next to the choicest blossom in his own garden.

All summer he had to see them, and when the winter snows came there were one, two, three, four little white mounds which he could see from the window. Monuments to four lies!

Now you can understand why he was so happy with the flowers in his sand garden, and why the tears of joy came into his mamma's eyes.—M. Kingston in Our Little Ones.

TEMPERANCE.

THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION OF CHICAGO.

The work of the W. C. T. U. in this city is sustained at an average expense of $1800 per month. It occupies four different buildings, and employs thirty persons. It comprises one mission, two day nurseries, and two kindergartens, one industrial school, one kitchen garden, one medical mission, one woman's reading-room, one inn or lodging house, one restaurant.

Mr. M. Smith, who is doing evangelical work for Mr. Moody, reports the Gospel meetings at Bethesda Mission, which he conducted until quite recently. There had been an average of 120 conversions a month at the meetings, the largest number in one week being sixty-seven and the lowest seventeen.

The Talcott nursery was opened in November, 1886, since which time it has cared for 6,600 little ones. In connection with the nursery there is an industrial school. Since November 14,672 meals have been given, 810 of which were in charity. All the expenses of the nursery are borne by Mrs. Talcott, the founder. Mrs. A. L. Trumble, the visitor for the Talcott and Bethesda nurseries, vividly describes the miserable homes, squalor, and crime which she found. Eight-tenths of the crime, she said, was caused by strong drink. She has established bureau of help and now systematically assisted the poor to obtain work.

Bethesda Inn, Nos. 408 and 410 South Clark street, was established in July, 1886, through the influence of Mrs. Carse. It has 256 single beds, 117 at 10 cents and 130 at 15 cents; five bath-rooms, where all lodgers must bathe before retiring; two reading rooms, a writing room, etc. It cost $4,000 to furnish the inn. Since July last there have been a total of 39,742 lodgers. The receipts have been $4,561.41, and the running expenses $4,016.34, although $2,184.41 additional have been expended for various improvements. The house now clears from $200 to $250 per month. Over 1,000 men have been cared for free of charge in the last three months.

A new lodging house for girls at No. 210 Chestnut street has been opened under the patronage of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Woman's Protective Agency. Lodging is furnished girls for 10 cents, and the experiment so far has been very successful. At the restaurant of the Bethesda Mission since Oct. 12, 37,339 meals have been given. The receipts have been $4,909.05 and the expenses $4,850.37.

Mrs. J. B. Hobbs reports for the police station work that during the year there had been an increase of 2,186 arrests of women over the previous year, the number at East Chicago Avenue Station being 646; West Chicago Avenue Station, 247; West Twelfth street, 772; Desplaines street Station, 2,856; Harrison street Station, 6,570; total, 11,118. Of the 2,856 at Desplaines street Station only 952 had any employment and 2,076 of the number were disreputable; at West Twelfth street Station 228 had some employment, but of the 772 arrested 689 were prostitutes.

A reading room for women is established at No. 50 Fourth avenue. The sole object of the room is to save fallen women and prevent others from falling. They have given lodging to 670 women since September.

When the W. C. T. U. was established thirteen years ago nobody dared to dream that it would accomplish what it has. For the first eight years the total receipts were not more than $1,000 per annum; now it is ten times that amount. The Chicago W. C. T. U. is now a greater institution than was the National body a few years ago. The principal officers are as follows: President, Mrs. T. B. Carse; Vice President, Mrs. J. B. Hobbs; Recording Secretary, Mrs. J. B. Payne; General Secretary, Helen L. Hood; Treasurer, Mrs. C. G. Davis.

PEORIA TEMPERANCE NOTES.

I never saw the drama, "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," but I saw the real thing in Peoria [Illinois]. It was just after breakfast, at one of the best hotels. I got into a discussion on prohibition with the chief clerk and several others, when in came the landlord with fire in his eye, and began pouring out a volley of oaths at the clerk. He threatened to strike several others who interfered. He was in a bad fit of delirium tremens, and was dangerous. A large colored man got his arms around him and tried to take him to his room, but he resisted, and the two rolled upon the floor. His wife and daughters came rushing in, wringing their hands. The crazed man turned upon them, abusing them in the most profane language. I concluded to try my hand on him.

Walking up to him I put my hand on his shoulder and asked him kindly if he could direct me to the postoffice. After he had given me the directions, I said soothingly, "You will feel better after a while if you will only keep cool; don't get excited." He seemed melted at once; tears came into his eyes, and taking my hand, he said kindly, "God bless you, sir! Don't go back on us, sir, for this." He went to his room, and when he recovered he seemed to try how well he could treat me.

Wm. Reynolds the noted Sabbath-school worker, who is known all over the State, resides here. He said, "I voted for St. John. I know Dr. Blanchard, and am in sympathy with him in his fight against secret societies. But I can't see that the Religious Amendment would amount to much. It would not be worth the agitation necessary to secure it." I told him I felt enthusiastic on the subject; that the Prohibition party, by declaring in its platform that God was of supreme authority, was inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States which declared the will of the people to be supreme. The Prohibitionists are right, and the Constitution is wrong. If the Prohibition party is to run the Government, the Constitution must be changed on this point, just as it had to be changed on the slavery question, before the Republican party could run the Government.

The American party, in advocating that the false religion of Masonry should be prohibited by the Government, comes in direct collision with the Constitution, which forbids Congress making any law prohibiting the free exercise of religion. The Constitution must be made to recognize the broad, unsectarian morals of Christ, before either of these grand parties can administer the Government. They must both be side-tracked, while the National Reform engine runs in ahead, and clears the track. National Reform is the engine that carries the snow shovel. If these three engines could only be coupled together, with National Reform in front, and then run in together, they would get there in less than ten years.—Rev. M. A. Gault's letter to the Western Crank.

INTOXICATION AMONG ANIMALS.

"The philosophers," says Hauzeau, "that assert that monkeys that have once used intoxicating liquors to excess will not touch them again are more desirous of giving us a lesson in morals than holding to the exact truth. The majority of tame monkeys are fond of wine and spirits. They help themselves when they can. They enjoy getting drunk, and some of them become such sots that they refuse to reform, in spite of the most severe punishment. Besides, their intoxication resembles precisely that of man; their legs are badly controlled, their tongue is thick and its movements uncertain."

Moreover, this identity of the effects of intoxication descends much lower in the animal kingdom. Donkeys have been seen dead drunk. Horses get drunk; and if, as a general thing, dogs refuse wine, some of them are addicted to the use of alcoholic beverages when well sweetened and sufficiently diluted.—The Cosmopolitan.

Queen Victoria is to be presented with a woman's national jubilee memorial, asking her Majesty to use her influence to bring into force a bill for Sunday closing of public houses. The Queen has said she will receive such a memorial with great pleasure.

The Empire of Austria is just at the beginning of a temperance reformation. The only national temperance organization is the Austrian Anti-Alcoholism Society, with headquarters at Vienna. The members as yet only number 330; they take no pledge.

A statue is to be erected at Bristol to Mr. Samuel Morley, whose death occurred last year, and who during his lifetime was president of the Band of Hope Union of Great Britain, and one of the most ardent of temperance workers. Mr. Gladstone has been invited to unveil the statue when erected.

The temperance people of California are making arrangements to prosecute a vigorous war against the liquor interests this year. A stock company which will publish temperance documents is being organized. Newspapers will be published at once in fifteen different counties. The officers of the company will have general charge of the papers, and corps of popular temperance writers will furnish the editorials. The profits will be devoted for several years to increasing the business of the company.

A weekly meeting of Christian workers, for prayer and conference, has been commenced in New York by the Committee of the Cooper Union Evangelistic Services.

was explained that the action was only by way of recommendation, and a half dozen speeches were made in favor of the report by Revs. Dillon, Hand, Pinkney, Kiracofe and Milligan. The report was adopted.

Prof. E. O. Excell, one of the most popular of our Gospel singers, well-known in Chicago, who has been much of late with the Georgia evangelist Jones, was on the platform with Prof. Nickle, and kindly consented to sing before the addresses of the afternoon began. The song, "The Handwriting on the Wall," he gave with thrilling effect, and was constrained to yield to the importunity of the convention, responding with Sam Jones's favorite, "Keep in de middle ob de Road."

The addresses which followed were by Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist, on "Secret Societies, the Press and the Pulpit," and by Pres. J. Blanchard on "Secret Societies and Christ's Kingdom."

The interposition of a sacred song, "I leave it all with Jesus," by Prof. W. E. Nickle, followed appropriately; and then the consideration of resolutions which were adopted without debate as follows: on publishing a report of the convention, on the press report of the previous day, and on a memorial to the General Assembly. The final resolution, advising churches upon permitting lodge members among their members, was of more importance and did not readily pass criticism. Pres. C. A. Blanchard objected to it, because this meeting should not be accused of giving too much advice to the churches. It was better, he believed, to utter our testimony, to put forth the truth, and trust to its omnipotent power to overcome the evil. To the almighty God we may safely leave the result.

Pres. Kiracofe of Hartsville College was in favor of some action of the kind, but preferred a different form. He moved as a substitute: "It is the sense of this conference that members of secret societies are not worthy of membership in Christian churches."

Pres. E. H. Fairchild of Berea objected to the resolution. We must remember that there are many members of Christian churches who belong to some little secret society and have never in their lives heard one word from any one against these secret orders, especially from those to whom they are accustomed to look for instruction in practical morals. Their case demands our commiseration, not condemnation. We do not need to drive them from us into closer union with their lodges.

Several spoke in favor of the principle involved, among them brethren Dillon, Harper, Clark and Keppel. Rev. N. Wardner of Syracuse said he well knew old Dr. Marsh, the eminent temperance reformer, who plead with his co-workers in that cause not to carry it into secretism. He knew also the man who drew up the Good Templar ritual. He was a Freemason of seven degrees. He was Dr. Bristol, who lately died in Syracuse and was buried with the heathen burial of Freemasonry. The little lodges are the recruiting offices and Sabbath-schools of the worst ones.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard offered another substitute, to which Bishop Wright interposed the objection that it left untouched the lodge members now in the church. He suggested a change which was agreed upon and the resolution was adopted thus:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this congress of Christians and churches that members of secret societies presenting themselves for membership in Christian churches should be required to abandon their lodge membership as inconsistent with our common Christianity, and that those already members should be also required to withdraw therefrom."

The other resolutions were as below:

Resolved, That this convention, while recognizing the courtesy and fairness of the city press, wishes to correct an erroneous impression which will be gained from the report of the reception of Rev. W. D. Thomas, which occurred after the reporters had generally left the hall. We desire the public to know that Mr. Thomas was accorded the accustomed ten minutes which was extended to thirty minutes, and given full liberty to express his views, and was called to order by the chair only when he used insulting language toward the convention; and, when he had deliberately and repeatedly promised to renounce Masonry, under conditions which were perfectly fulfilled, he then refused to do so, and the convention by its recorded vote gave its judgment that he had so failed to keep his pledge.

The Congress of Churches met in Chicago, March 30, 1887, would appeal to you, dear fathers and brethren of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in the matter of the relation of your members and ministers to the Masonic and kindred orders; which are organized and administered in opposition to the Christian religion in the following particulars: and if you find this our representation to be true, we ask you on behalf of our common Lord and Saviour, and for the sake of the salvation of precious souls and the welfare of our common Christianity to require their separation from such fraternities and join with us in our alliance for the overthrow of these anti-Christian combinations.

Having heard the statements made by Rev. J. Augustus Cole, a native of Africa, a convert from Mahomedanism and a seceder from seven secret heathen orders, educated in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Arabic, English and a number of the African languages, and being a hearty and enthusiastic Christian, and having determined to found an institution of learning and a missionary station in Africa, free from the damaging influence of secret orders; therefore, resolved, as he moves among our churches for the collection of funds and arousing the Christian sympathy of the people, we will give him as far as practicable our encouragement and financial support.

Resolved, That this congress direct that its proceedings and discussions so far as can be reached, be published in pamphlet form for circulation, if means can be furnished to meet the expenses.

The report of the committee on address was then read and adopted as follows:

ADDRESS TO THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY AND CHURCHES IN THE UNITED STATES.

This Christian congress sends greeting: We desire to recognize with gratitude to God, the labors and testimony of the National Christian Association and those churches and denominations which have kept, or are endeavoring to keep, their communions free from "the unfruitful works of darkness," and cherish the hope that all Christian people of all denominations will soon stand side by side in this service of Christ against the secret lodge system.

We address ourselves especially to the Christian ministry. In the long and bloody struggle which freed us from slavery, many ministers of the Gospel shrunk from the movement in its early stages, because some prominent opponents of slavery broached unsound views concerning the inspiration of the Bible, the Christian Sabbath, and civil government.

We rejoice to assure you that this congress receives Christ as our Saviour, and the Bible as our guide; and that we believe that the Christian ministers of the United States, in sincerity, ability and integrity, are equal if not superior to the religious teachers of any other nation or age of the world; with the necessary exceptions, growing out of our common human frailties and the terrible power of Satan by which even apostles stumbled, and some of them fell.

We, therefore, respectfully call your attention to the truths and testimonies brought out by our harmonious and happy Congress of Churches and Christians; and fervently ask your co-operation with us in the high and holy work of purifying our court houses from secret oaths, and our families and churches from the deceptions and defilements of secret lodges.

We are well aware that there exists among you a widespread conviction that secret combinations of men, organized for the purpose of seeking special advantages for themselves in politics, in business, in labor, and in all the relations of civil society, are injurious and potent. The evil is increasing upon us, and shows no signs of self-destruction. If the power and baleful influence of these combinations are to be destroyed or greatly diminished, it must be by the united influence of those Christian people who see and feel the evil and the danger.

We are convinced that the favorable time has come to inaugurate a general Christian movement against this mighty foe of our nation's peace and prosperity. The great interest, unanimity, and unexpected dimensions of this Congress make it manifest that this is the opportune moment to press this matter upon the churches and the people.

We earnestly request all ministers in sympathy with our object to discuss the subject before their congregations, and all churches to investigate, pass and publish resolutions upon it.

We urge that conventions be held in counties and States to agitate the question, and that organizations be formed to co-operate with future congresses that may convene.

The publication of the proceeding of the convention was introduced by a proposition from Rev. S. B. Slaw of Michigan to undertake the work and guarantee that no one should be the loser by the investment. The final disposition of the matter was postponed.

A very hearty vote of thanks was given to President George and other officers, to the committee of arrangements, and to Profs. Excell and Nickle, Father Clark and their assistants from the Moody church choir, for their labors and generous aid.

Rev. N. Wardner of Syracuse presided at the last session Thursday evening. Prof. Nickle directed the singing and added much to the interest of the meeting by his judicious selections.

The final report of the enrolling committee showed 161 delegates present, 190 not appointed as delegates but in sympathy with the convention and participating in its deliberations; total 351. The fifteen States of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island, the District of Columbia and the territory of Dakota were represented.

Following this report Bishop Milton Wright, who has oversight of the United Brethren churches on the Pacific coast, was introduced. The topic of his address was, "The Influence of Secret Societies on the Churches."

Another collection was taken on the conclusion of the address which brought up the total to some $150. Considering the number present on these two evenings the amount is a very creditable one.

The closing address by Pres. Fairchild of Berea, was the longest of the convention, and was heard with careful attention. At its close a final item of business was presented by the committee of nominations for the permanent "Congress" whose report was thus adopted:

President: Rev. J. G. Carson, D.D., (United Presbyterian).

Vice-Presidents:

Rev. Halleck Floyd, (United Brethren).
Prof. D. McAllister, (Reformed Presbyterian).
Elder Isaac Hyatt, (Free Baptist).
Rev. W. L. Ferris, (Congregational).
Benjamin Trueblood, (Friend).
Rev. M. C. Ransee, (Swedish Lutheran).
Pres. P. Goebel, (United Evangelical).
Rev. Helveg, (Danish Lutheran).
Rev. William Morrow, (Presbyterian).
Rev. J. L. Barlow, (Baptist).
P. Keppel, (Christian Reformed).
Rev. O. Juul, (Norwegian Lutheran).
Pres. C. A. Blanchard, (Independent).
Rev. J. W. Morton, (Seventh Day Baptist).
Secretary: Rev. A. W. Parry, (Free Methodist).
Treasurer: Rev. J. P. Stoddard.

A short time was given to I. R. B. Arnold's calum light exhibition of the Masonic heathen originals. A closing prayer for the divine blessing upon the meeting and its deliberations and the benediction by Bishop Wright followed, and the congress of churches and Christians was ended.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A. J. Bell has been conducting revival meetings at LaGrange near Chicago, and many are confessing Christ. The movement seems to have reached into all the churches.

—Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost will continue to make his home in Brooklyn. [He has already received enough invitations for evangelistic work to occupy his time for the next four years.

—Mr. Spurgeon says of the Salvation Army: "If it were wiped out of London, 5,000 extra policemen could not fill its place in the repression of crime and disorder."

—Messrs. Munhall and Towner conducted meetings in Rev. A. J. Gordon's church, Boston, for three weeks in March, several churches uniting. Thence they went to Warren Avenue church for two weeks.

—It is reported that one of the missionaries of the American Sunday-school Union, in Iowa, has had over 300 inquirers in his meetings in country settlements the past year. A gentleman in Michigan recently heard the work of this Society presented, and after carefully investigating its claims, gave $800 to its support, intending to make it an annual gift.

—For several weeks there has been in progress at Franklin, Ind., one of the most remarkable revivals ever known there. In a town of less than 4,000 population there have been more than 500 persons added to the churches within the last few weeks. A deep and thorough work is being done among the students in the college, many of whom have already accepted the Saviour. One saloon-keeper has been converted, and others are obliged to leave the place because the business is so dull.

—The National Committee of the Young Women's Christian Association has been organized as follows: Mrs. John V. Farwell, Jr., Chairman, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. W. W. Vanarsdale, Secretary and Treasurer, Chicago; Miss F. C. Shipman, Assistant Secretary, Chicago; Miss Carrie Haigh, Chicago; Miss Grace Dexter, Galesburgh, Ill.; Miss Eva Gregg, Mt. Pleasant, Iowa; Miss Eunice A. Lyman, Topeka, Kan.; Miss Alice M. Warren, Olivet, Mich.; Miss Susan E. Cushman, Northfield, Minn.; Miss M. L. Dinsmore, Hastings, Neb.; Miss Nellie S. Knox, Westerville, O.; Miss Isabella H. Phelps, Ripon, Wis. There are in the United States nearly six hundred universities, seminaries, colleges and normal schools where young women are educated. More than seven ty-five thousand young women are in attendance at these schools. The fact that many college graduates do not become Christians after they leave college renders it important that the best methods be used to save the college girls. For this purpose the Young Women's Christian Association has been organized. There are now one hundred and thirteen associations in twenty States, and more than three thousand young women are identified with the movement. The association seeks to interest all its members in active work. Prayer-meetings, missionary meetings, evangelistic meetings and meetings for Bible study are regularly held.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburg:—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

The Army:—Surely the presence of a multitude of secret combinations bodes little good to the church of Christ.

Daily Appeal, Memphis:—The secret society business has become a craze with the colored people, and one by which they often become the victims of designing knaves.

Wesleyan Methodist:—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever revealed in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston:—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati:—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Baptist Weekly, New York:—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository:—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness:—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880:—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. . . . The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880:—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia:—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars. Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies. . . . The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago:—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshippers. . . . The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMBY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumby's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy" will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

Even his fallings lean to virtue's side.

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumby is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

IN THE COILS; OR— The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ill.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Register, (Philadelphia)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia).

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrecy, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh).

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' It is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, they will read it, till they see how it turns out."—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.).

A POLE STAR

In the heavens of civil and religious liberty

CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE,

A 16-page weekly journal, published by the

an organization whose object is "to expose, withstand and remove Secret Societies... and other anti-Christian Movements."

After writers from all parts of our own and from foreign lands and from the different denominations, contribute to its columns. The claims an advanced position among the advocates of Christian Education, Temperance, Government Reforms, Sabbath observance, and Bible Holiness, to which it adds a thorough exposition and critical analysis of Secret Societies, "holding out both the evils and the remedy." In brief, it is the paper having opinions on all practical living questions and the courage to express them.

It emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the Word and Spirit of God, and that Christ must be acknowledged KING OF NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the DIVINE WORD.

In addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc.

FARM NOTES.

SPRING FARM CLEANING.

While the wife cleans the house, let the husband clean the farm. If vegetable matter is left about the yard, its rapid decay during the damp, warm weather of spring and summer, will poison the air and affect the health of the family. If left about the barn, lots and fields, it will have a like influence on the farm animals. Hogs are doubly liable to be injured, for they not only breathe the fouled air, but nest in such litter. Farm cleaning will save loss from disease. The litter has great value as a fertilizer when properly applied. The intelligent use of this manure ensures better crops, and the farm is capable of a more thorough cultivation. And then how much appearances are improved. Make a bonfire of pieces of wood, brush, stumps, etc., not fit for fuel, and give the charcoal to the swine and the ashes to the fruit trees. Remember this work is not complete until those stumps and stones are removed which can be taken out with a reasonable amount of labor; until the trees about the house and in the orchard are pruned; until the old growth is taken from raspberries, gooseberries, currants, etc.; until the "underbrush" is cleared out of the wood lot; until all the ditches are opened and pools are drained; in short, until the farm is clean and neat. Conveniently enough, nearly all, or all of this work, can be done before the spring plowing is begun.—American Agriculturist.

COAL ASHES FOR VINES.

Twenty years ago I planted vines in my yard, where I had to do a good deal of filling in, and the material employed was principally coal ashes. Wherever the ashes came in contact with the vines we had the largest crop of the finest grapes I ever saw, the roots seemed to run riot in the soil to a distance of ten to fifteen feet, and were a mass of fine fibers. The grapes were in large bunches that crowded each other for room, fine, plump, thin-skinned berries, while fruit on vines from the same aged cuttings, from the same parent vines, planted in the natural soil, were late, hard and sour. My varieties were Concord, Catawba and Ives' Seedling.—Vick's Magazine.

EARLY PASTURE.

Early pasture, so serviceable on every farm, is to be secured by sowing grasses which start early, not by turning the stock on the grass as soon as it is high enough to be grazed. The grass must make a considerable growth before it is fit for food, and the more favorable the weather, the greater the growth required. Young grass has too large a proportion of water, and when eaten by animals, physics them while affording little nutriment. It is not uncommon to see animals turned on pasture early, lose flesh. The pastures also are injured. The ground is wet and soft, and the grasses, except possibly Blue grass, are impaired by the trampling they suffer. Grazed upon before they have made a good root, growth and gathered considerable vigor, grasses are slow to start up again, and their growth is feeble. Pasturing early, therefore, is extravagant. If the animals are kept on dry feed two weeks longer, they will continue to gain flesh instead of losing it. A patch of rye should be sown in the fall for early spring pasture.—American Agriculturist.

BEANS AS A FARM CROP.

"I should think," said the Doctor, "that the farmers on the new, cheap land of the Northwest would go into the raising of beans on a large scale." "When I was in Minnesota and Dakota last fall," said I, "the same idea struck me. The soil and the climate are favorable. But possibly there would be a difficulty in procuring the necessary labor to pull the beans." "If they should grow the crop on a large scale," said the Doctor, "they would soon have a machine to pull the beans, or, possibly, to thrash them where they stand. We ought to raise beans enough to supply the world. As matters now are, beans are grown on a comparatively circumscribed area, and any trivial cause may greatly enhance prices and thus effectually stop the foreign demand. Some years, beans are down to a dollar a bushel, and then up to three dollars per bushel. Of course, such extreme fluctuations seriously interfere with foreign trade. But let the Northwest take hold of the matter, and we should have a large area to draw from, and steadier prices and a larger trade would be the result." Beans are the most nutritious of all vegetables. They will keep from year to year. They do not need grinding into flour, like wheat, and moreover can be easily transported any distance. Let us have more beans—especially for export!—Joseph Harris.

FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND;

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and help as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a warning to the young, that sin and crime are shorn of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day, and revealed in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a life of death, now and in its future life to be absorbed.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

The letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the influence of a 'secret society' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'." The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1828, which has been the most widely published of all Anti-masonic documents. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow W. Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The triumphant oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christiania Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freemason and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hanna; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

The Christian's Secret

OR

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and wine of life, but whose effort results only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverently devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of the life, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

HOME AND HEALTH.

BI-CARBONATE OF SODA.

The product known as bi-carbonate of soda is "one of those things no family should be without," its manifold virtues rendering it very adaptive to household requirements. Every good cook knows its excellence in bread making, and many of us, doubtless remember the delicious soda biscuits our grandmothers prepared to perfection long before the beginning of the "rising" generation of baking powders. Prepared flour, so convenient to have on hand in emergencies, may be mixed at home, and with less expense than it can be purchased, (particularly by ladies living in the country remote from village stores,) and of really better quality than the packaged varieties. Mix two pounds of pure cream of tartar with one pound of bi-carbonate of soda; rub them together until all lumps are dissolved, then pass three times through a fine sieve. Add three teaspoonfuls of each quart of flour, and rub all together twice through the sieve. Use the best flour, and the result will be satisfactory.

A slight dash of soda renders all green vegetables more nutritious, tender, and easy of digestion, particularly cabbage, spinach and beans. A pinch of soda to dried beans, split peas, etc., makes "all the difference in the world," particularly in using them for soups. A very slight quantity takes from tomatoes the unpleasantly sharp "twang" leaving only an appetizing suggestion of acid. In preparing stock for soups or gravies, one-half teaspoonful of soda to every quart of water will extract all the substance from remnants of meat, bones, liver, etc., like magic. A little bit makes coffee very rich; and if the water be hard, will soften it sufficiently to render the coffee the veritable "cup that cheers."

Everything—the good temper, and general well being of the family—depends upon the cleanliness of the coffee pot, which in all orderly households is thoroughly washed and aired after using. It should be kept sweet by frequent "boiling out" with a generous pinch of soda in the water. (Let it come very gradually to a boil.) Death lurks in tannin, and tannin abides in the coffee pot of a slovenly housekeeper.

In sickness as well as in health, this same soda comes valiantly to the front rank in the army of useful things. Well do I recall the time we agonized over a poor little babe shrieking with colic. One of us walked the floor with it and patted its back; another dosed it with gin and patted its back; others did equally absurd and needless things and—patted its back! And still that child was not happy!

In the midst of the uproar, in walked a lady friend who "knew all about babies." "Stop hammering away on that child's back bone, and put a little bi-carb—just a speck—on its tongue," she said. The deed was done, the pain-racked child was relieved in a few moments, and the domestic "empire was peace."

Dyspepsia find that this same "bi-carb" carries "healing in its wings" if regularly used. It creates appetite, tones up the stomach and sweetens the system. Nausea and sick headache may be relieved by taking it internally, while its efficacy in neutralizing the poison of bites or stings of venomous insects is well known. It acts like a charm in the case of a snake bite. For hives, apply externally, and swallow a small quantity dissolved in water; also take a light laxative. Relief from the burning and irritation will quickly follow. If wet soda be immediately applied to burns and scalds, both heat and pain speedily subside. Other purposes are subserved by this great product, to all of which it would be impossible to specially refer; but that it is a real benefactor, in judicious hands, is a fact beyond cavil or question. Of course, it may often, like the cook's broth, be overdone or underdone, by indiscriminate usage; but the worthy housewife knows just when and where to leave it off, and the wise home doctor knows just how long to leave it on; and under such auspicious circumstances, it is indeed a necessary luxury for which we should feel devoutly grateful to the science of chemistry.—Belle E. Cable in Good Housekeeping.

To MAKE VINEGAR.—A first rate vinegar may be made by the following cheap and simple process: Boil a quart of shelled corn till about half done for three gallons. Put into jars or jugs and fill them with hot water sweetened with a quart of sorghum or other common molasses. Set in the sun and in two or three weeks it will be excellent vinegar.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is proved by J. O. Desburg, Past Master, City of No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, regalia, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Lecture on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving original letters of Mr. Adams' introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, chief aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Infidel? By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of the oaths and the consequences of those who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 1 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Babel Worship Illustrated. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp., $1.00.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bala. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be recognized by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church in particular. Paper covers; price 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness. adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Mah-Bah-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 869 pp., $1.00.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the statements of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cts.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with this Devil. This is an account of the curious trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. W. A. Morgan;" Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan; "Temple and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees" 304 pages.

In the Collis; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A. Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life is trampled and blased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over 1000 pages of the latest revelations, and is repeated in cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By F. J. Payne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 659, Chicago. This is a complete and up-to-date history of Masonry; the proper position of each officer in the lodge room, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidates, ceremony of initiation, the various manner of giving the grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmore and Webster and Freemasonry, The Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secrecy. This is a reprint of a publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who voted in favor of the resolution of the House of Representatives to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jeppha's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, and the Degree of the Benevolent Degree. 50 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tenacity of Freemasonry. With an appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and Dialogue on the necessity of initiation, the Lodge, 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; paper, 50 cents. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Knight of the East, Knight of the West, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; 50 cents per dozen. Paper covers, 50c; $4.00 per dozen.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. L. Post. With engravings showing the lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonry, the candidate takes out a million horrible oaths. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A full and convincing argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers; 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and aims, by David McNeill, Pres. J. H. May, Sec. Edward Bernard. Post. $1.00. 50c. per doz. $5.00. Paper cover, 15c. per doz. $1.50.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Spencer. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it is and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the same, from the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. 25c. each; per doz. $1.50.

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. Composed of "Temple of Honor Illustrated," "Adoptive Masonry Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange Illustrated," and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshipping Freemasons in the Christian church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, and COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in this title, bound together in cloth. $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Exempted and Rebeled (Knights) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, covering the entire field from the oldest standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Book" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of the order, and is furnished in a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Oddfellowship und Eranntnis der Wahrheit," 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies. by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leechburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against the character of secret societies, and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Temples of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the ritual, including the degrees of Love, Parity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor of the Grand Lodge of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to disfellowship members of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of churches, appointed to investigate the charges against Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other reason than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the names of many of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable persons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney, a member of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Smith, Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges and was afterwards re-nounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

A Masonic Conspiracy. Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louise Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. A. Spencer and Elder U. W. Wilson, a Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, in 1874, against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The President Thursday directed the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians on the Warm Spring reservation in Oregon. This is the first action taken under the Indian land severalty act, which was passed by the last Congress. By the last census there were 859 Indians on this reservation.

President Cleveland on Friday appointed Charles S. Fairchild, late Assistant Secretary, to be Mr. Manning's successor as Secretary of the Treasury, and Isaac H. Maynard to be Assistant Secretary. The President also appointed Martin V. Montgomery, now Commissioner of Patents, to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to succeed Justice McArthur, retired.

Secretary Fairchild's public debt statement issued on Friday shows that the debt was reduced during March $12,808,467.

COUNTRY.

The bill to indemnify owners of property for damages occasioned by mobs or riots passed the Illinois Senate Thursday—32 to 12.

The Crosby high license bill passed the New York Senate Thursday by a party vote, the Democrats opposing it, and now goes to the Governor. A veto is expected from him.

The committee appointed by the Illinois House to consider the feasibility of purchasing the Lincoln homestead, met Mr. Robert Lincoln's agent, to see upon what terms the house could be purchased by the State. The committee were given to understand that Mr. Lincoln would not give the house for a money consideration, but would convey it to the State provided the State would forever keep it in repair. It is generally understood that the former home of Abraham Lincoln will soon become the property of the State of Illinois.

Senator Streeter's bill prohibiting the selling or giving to minors of tobacco in any form passed the Illinois Senate Wednesday.

The Governor of Missouri has signed a bill which places St. Louis under the operation of the Downing law. This statute demands the closing of beer gardens and saloons, and prohibits the running of street cars, the publication of newspapers, and all kinds of traffic on Sunday.

Passes on the Pennsylvania Company's lines expired at midnight Thursday, and through trains during the day were crowded with dead-heads. Nine-tenths of the travelers on Thursday carried passes.

Quarantine against cholera, which has reached the Isthmus, was instituted Thursday at El Paso, Texas, it being feared that trains from Mexico may bring it into the United States.

Reports have been received tending to confirm the dispatch that the sealing steamer Eagle was wrecked on the Newfoundland coast, the vessel going to pieces on a reef. There were 260 men on board, and it is believed that all perished.

While a boiler was being tested Thursday morning at Erie, Pa., a fue-plate gave way, the escaping steam terribly scalding four men. Edgar L. Sturtevant, inspector for the Hartford Steam Boiler Insurance Company, and two others are not expected to survive.

Dr. James Hodges, who exploded a bomb during a Patti concert, was found guilty at San Francisco Thursday of assault to murder. Hodges stated that he proposed to end his life while Patti was singing, so he could be her page in the spirit land.

John Godfrey Saxe, the poet, died Thursday. He had been practically a recluse for the last ten years, the many family bereavements which he suffered undermining his reason to some degree.

B. F. Bergen, special agent of the general land office at Washington, who was sent out last year to investigate the alleged frauds of the California Redwood company in Humboldt county, reports that he has unearthed the most complete system of fraud ever known. Two hundred witnesses have been examined. Mr. Bergen says that his report will undoubtedly result in the estoppel of patents to lands worth $3,000,000.

The temperance people of Burlington, Iowa, have filed in the district court a petition for the removal of the sheriff for negligence and maladministration.

A train about to be placed on the Lake Shore route between Chicago and New York is to be equipped with a bath-room, barber-shop, library, and electric lights, and possibly heated by steam.

In court at Sioux City, Iowa, Wednesday, Bismarck corroborated the testimony of Leavitt, stating positively that Arensdorf killed Dr. Haddock, and, with the aid of counsel, dramatically portrayed the manner in which the deed was perpetrated. Mrs. Haddock, who was in court, fainted at this juncture and was carried out. Her sobs and groans excited the deepest sympathy.

A big building strike is imminent at Cincinnati, where the carpenters will probably join the iron and stone workers in a demand for shorter hours and better pay.

The magnificent Hotel del Monte, erected at Monterey, Cal., by the Southern Pacific Company at a cost of $350,000, was totally destroyed by fire. Three hundred guests were rescued, but most of them lost their effects.

FOREIGN.

Three persons who were concerned in the attempt to kill the Czar March 13 last were hanged Thursday. Twenty more officers in various branches of the Russian service have been arrested in connection with the attempt last Tuesday to assassinate Alexander.

A wholesale merchant of St. Petersburg, reputed to be worth millions, has been shot and killed by a man to whom he refused to give 80,000 rubles toward the nihilist fund. The murderer has been arrested. Other Russian capitalists are fearful of suffering a similar fate. They are receiving letters threatening them with immediate death if they do not comply with demands to furnish money for "the common cause."

A dispatch from Vienna April 1 says: "While the Czar was walking on the terrace overlooking the lawn at Gatchina Palace a shot was fired from behind a bush. The bullet whistled close to the Czar's ear. A second shot was fired from behind another bush, but without effect. A sentinel near immediately fired upon the first assassin, and it is reported, killed him on the spot. The second assassin tried to escape, but was arrested. He proved to be an officer of the army."

The French Cabinet has agreed to the adoption of a system of betting on races, a portion of the profits from the sale of the privileges to be devoted to the encouragement of horse-breeding or charity.

The trial of the fifteen anarchists charged with being implicated in a plot to burn the city and blow up the imperial palace of Schonbrunn has been concluded. Thirteen were convicted and received sentences ranging from six months to twenty years. The other two were acquitted.

At Ottawa, Ont., the thermometer registered 10° below zero Thursday and there were from four to five feet of snow on the ground. Throughout Lower Canada and New Brunswick the snow was last week of great depth—30 feet in some cuts. On the Inter-colonial railway some 1,500 passengers were snow-bound and suffering.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 50c. Cloth, 75c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self-Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Helffenstein. Paper covers, 15c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false prop of sinners are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 15c. This little book points out the certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

Mr. Powderly made a speech before his Harrisburg meeting Thursday in which he rejoiced in the defeat of the anarchist ticket last week in this city by over 28,000 votes. But the leading candidates on that ticket were of Powderly's lodge and the whole ticket was supported by the order and its organs here: so that he puts himself on the side of the capitalist against them. That is for once, at least, the right side, if we omit the Prohibition vote which is not large enough yet in Chicago to elect the issue. The labor party in politics has undeniably been led by anarchist sympathizers, and they will not be easily put aside, although a movement is on foot which may split the party, in the effort to reorganize it on a legitimate labor basis. The demand is, "The red-laggers must go." There will be a sore rending when that devil is cast out.

The testimony in the Haddock trial at Sioux City closed Saturday. The arguments of the lawyers will occupy several days and the charge of Judge Lewis will probably not be given before Friday of this week. Mr. Marsh, who has managed the prosecution, has turned public opinion wonderfully to him, and has won not only the commendation of all good citizens, but has changed the opinion of a large class who have not believed in the theory of Arensdorf's guilt. The positive testimony of Leavitt is confirmed by one or two other witnesses and supported by such circumstantial evidence as renders it almost invulnerable. The defense nearly broke down in proving an alibi, Arensdorf himself not agreeing with his testimony before the coroner.

In the Sioux City trial, Leavitt swore that he witnessed the shooting of Haddock by Arensdorf, and that he promised, and did go away to avoid giving testimony; and that Arensdorf asked him, "Can I depend on you as a brother?" and that he answered, "Yes." What was meant by the term "brother," is explained by the fact that they were both members of the Knights of Pythias, and had each taken the following oath: "[I, —, in the presence of these true and tried brethren, do most solemnly declare and swear * * * that I will ever and always relieve a distressed brother; that I will warn him of any danger that I may know to threaten him, and will fly to his succor and aid whenever and wherever I am convinced, by eye or ear, that he is in need thereof." Arensdorf and Leavitt understood this to be an obligation to protect a murderer, and so used it. Other Knights of Pythias will doubtless interpret it in the same way, as, in fact, they must so interpret it, if the words mean what they say. Such an order is a perpetual menace to good government.

The telegraphic hints from Rome that the Knights of Labor organization would be put under condemnation seem to have been astray. Some days ago the press was given the copy of a letter from Cardinal Manning approving of the order, and speculating glibly whether he would not be a good member of the order. But a circular letter from Cardinal Taschereau, Archbishop of Quebec, was read in the Roman Catholic churches of that city on the Sabbath, which informs them that the Pope has suspended the sentence of February, 1885, requiring the Catholics to renounce the order. He also authorizes the priests to absolve the Knights of Labor on certain conditions, to which they will conform without difficulty. Thus at length Powderly and his Romanist companions have succeeded, and if Cardinal Gibbons can work with them successfully the whole order will form a great feeder for the church of Rome.

The wholesome economy of the New Jersey legislature in postponing the McClellan monument business has unhappily few imitators among our budding State politicians, who, since they have seen a man of moderate talent step from sheriff to governor and then to President, imagine that a niche is waiting in the temple of fame and immortality which can be filled only by themselves. Men with such exalted views can afford to be generous in erecting monuments to the dead with the people's money. For their own turn may come in time. So our Illinois legislature voted $50,000 for a Logan monument and are considering an appropriation of $5,000 for a statue of Gen James Shields. The character and abilities of this gentleman, who filled various offices in Illinois and was Senator in Congress from three different States, are handled with some severity by the authors of the Lincoln history in the Century. Shields was a Freemason! Does not that account for it?

The popularity of the President's late appointments in the Treasury Department, as noted in our Washington letter, have a special significance when we remember that Hon. Isaac H. Maynard, the new Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is a well-known opponent of the liquor traffic. In 1883 Judge Maynard was nominated by the Democratic party of New York for the office of Secretary of State, and was the only man on the ticket defeated. He was sacrificed, says the New York Witness, because of his well-known temperance principles. The liquor-dealers of the State banded together, and succeeded in defeating the Judge and electing his opponent, his vote falling behind the ticket. The hostility of the liquor element in the Democratic party to their candidate for Secretary of State was used as an argument by the Republicans to induce Prohibitionists to remain in the Republican ranks, but the fact was not forgotten that the German saloon-keepers in that campaign came out boldly in a hand-bill recommending his Republican opponent as a man "free from bigotry and intolerance," and concluding with these words: "Every German can vote for him as they would for a friend."

The lecture of Mr. Ragan before the Chicago Y. M. C. A. in Farwell Hall Thursday night on "The heart of America," attracted a large audience and was of great interest, especially as he furnished a large number of views of the scenery of that region.

He spent some time in Salt Lake city, and his observations on Mormon polygamy were interesting. The Endowment House, which is a comparatively small building, was erected, not for a place of assembly, but for the celebration of mystic rites. The great temple costing $4,000,000 which has been many years in the course of construction, is built for the same purpose. Instead of having one or more large halls for meetings, it is made up of small rooms for secret initiations. "The strength of Mormonism," said the speaker, "is in its secret ceremonies and its appeals to the superstitions of the ignorant." In other words, its strength is the same as that of heathenism everywhere, and is fully exemplified in its prototype, Freemasonry. It does not seem improbable that God in his providence is suffering this iniquity to successfully defy, for a time, the authority of this nation, that the people may be led to see the abominable nature of the underlying principle of sworn conformity to unknown covenants, that constitute the essence of the mysteries that darken our land like the locusts of Egypt.

MORAL COWARDICE A DEADLY SIN.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

Reforms are God's method of eradicating the noxious weeds of Satan's planting (Matt. 15: 13). And he who does not know that the devil will not suffer his works to be destroyed without a desperate fight, has a very important truth to learn. In this conflict with the powers of darkness God has a right to, and will have bold, daring veterans, who are not afraid to "pledge their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor" in the conflict. Let him who doubts, read the 8th verse of the 21st of Revelation, where he will also find mentioned a vast army of thoroughly Satanized rebels.

At the head of these, as chief captains, stand "THE FEARFUL." It is significant that in close companionship with these fearful ones, are "THE UNBELIEVING;" as if cowardice were the legitimate offspring of unbelief.

The deadly, damning sin of cowardice is, that it calls in question the veracity of God, who has in times and ways without number declared that "no weapon formed against the faithful shall prosper." What greater insult to God than to refuse to enter this conflict, lest he will not keep his word. Not very indirectly does cowardice say to God, "You are a liar." Horrible!

Cowardice in the presence of fundamental reform is high treason in the kingdom of righteousness. It is a challenge of the wisdom of the ten thousand times ten thousand reformers of all ages. Let me introduce you to these monumental standard bearers, that you may know the company you are in, and the footprints you follow. God has placed the signet of his approbation upon these noble men by passing their names and deeds down through all the generations of the past. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was the first reformer (Jude 14: 15); Noah, the righteous; Gideon, the brave; Elijah, Ezra and Nehemiah; Daniel, the greatly beloved, and the three holy Hebrew children; John, the forerunner, and the whole bench of the apostles; Wickliffe and Huss; Jerome of Prague and the German and Swiss reformers. Was there ever a grander man than Rumbold, who declared, "if every hair of his head were a man, he would venture them all in the Protestant quarrel." Listen to Margaret Wilson, the martyr yet in her teens, half dead by strangling, when commanded to abjure, cried, "No! I am Christ's! Let me go." Think you not there were hallelujahs in heaven when the waters passed over her for the last time? I see Argyle sleeping like an infant an hour before his martyrdom. Such is moral courage. Twelve years' imprisonment did not diminish the courage of John Bunyan. "Release me to-day and I will be preaching to-morrow," he cried.

"The fanatics of yesterday wear a halo to-day." The fanatics of to-day can bide their time. Who now, the wide world over, denies a tribute of praise to Clarkson or Wilberforce; to the defenders of liberty in Great Britain and the United States, or to the noble army of early Abolitionists?

So profoundly do I revere the memory of these noble men that I have the likenesses of scores of them hanging upon the walls of my study. But for the faith and courage of these men the doom of Sodom would have fallen upon the world long ago,—the elite of the moral universe of whom God is not ashamed. In the presence of these courageous defenders of truth and righteousness, cowards stand branded with everlasting infamy.

To know what God would have us do in the presence of evil, we have but to study half a dozen or so of the first chapters of the Acts of the Apostles. To know what can be accomplished by moral courage, behold Martin Luther wending his way to Worms though "devils might be as thick there as tiles upon the houses;" and by his courage upheaving the foundations of hoary wrong. Or, listen to Cromwell's Ironsides, victorious in a hundred battles, shouting for joy whenever they came in sight of the enemy, rendering the name of England a terror to all Europe.

How infinitely unlike to the life and character of the Son of God is the cowardly spirit! He framed into a few sentences words so searching and burning that he knew would scatter his cowardly followers like chaff before the wind. He hated shams. He came to do his Father's will; and said, I do always those things that please him. And he taught his disciples that the highest possible honor was fearlessly to suffer and die for the truth. What of liberty and virtue there is in the world has been preserved by moral pioneers, who caught his inspiration, and, however they may suffer and be vilified, the approbation of conscience and of God is reward enough. The few are enlightened that they may deliver the many from darkness, and herein lies the duty for its courageous performance. The priests' lips should not only keep knowledge, but diffuse it abroad as well.

"The Christian ministry missed a great opportunity," said Philip Brooks, "when it failed to be brave and strong on the question of anti-slavery." It should, in the future, take its place at the head of all specific reforms. And the Christian ministry to-day is missing another great opportunity, by failing to be brave and strong against Freemasonry, that last born brat of forlornest hell, with its Satanic wiles, its murderous deeds, its "devil worship," horrid blasphemies, butcher-knife oaths, and superlative selfishness, demanding and deserving the execration of the moral universe.

He who calls us to courage in the conflict with this hydra-headed monster is the Infinite One, the High and Lofty One; higher than the kings of the earth; higher than the heavens, in the primeval fullness of his uncreated self-existence, dwelling in the radiant bloom of eternal strength and justice, loveliness and holiness; stronger than all the serried battalions of Satan, and demands of us a recompense upon his almighty strength that will divest us of all fears. Hear him, Deut. 33: "The eternal God is thy refuge; underneath are the everlasting arms. The heavens cannot fall upon you; the earthquake cannot swallow you up." Finally, when God's flaming chariots come thundering down from the skies, cowards will be found on the same plane with his declared enemies, and will share the same doom.

ANTHONY BURNS AND JOHN BROWN AS FACTORS IN THE SLAVERY CONTEST.

REMINISCENCES OF HON. S. C. POMEROY.

The disagreements existing between the Northern and Southern States had been multiplying and intensifying year by year. The North had yielded some things, and the South insisted on still more. The men conducting public affairs concluded that concession and compromise were the only methods producing harmony, and statesmanship was deemed to triumph when some compromise was effected that seemed to promise peace. The power which slavery had acquired was exerted with great unanimity and concentration of effort. While the North could be divided, the South could be counted upon as a unit; and both of the political parties kept slavery uppermost.

Finally two things began to be insisted upon, and these demands were pressed:

1. They wanted more vigilance and activity manifested in the execution of the Fugitive Slave Law; and

2. They insisted upon "their rights," as they called them, in all the Territories.

The contest for the acknowledgment and enforcement of the Fugitive Slave Law came to trial first.

This trial was forced upon the North, not so much for the importance and value of a slave caught and returned, as to make the North feel that they, too, were bound to support the institution, whoever owned the slave; and to support it wherever the jurisdiction of the United States extended. To this end was the contest waged.

The foundation for all this was laid in the action of Congress on the "great compromise measures," as they were termed, of 1850. There had always been on the statute an old Fugitive Slave law, as stringent a law as the framers thought could be justified by the Constitution. But at this period they demanded more, and a new law was enacted. This excited the first resistance the North manifested. But they were not at all united upon this resistance.

I remember that it was the very day of the repeal of the Missouri compromise and the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill (May 23, 1854) that a Virginia slave-holder by the name of Suttle applied to Judge Loring of Massachusetts for warrant, under the Fugitive Slave act, to arrest and seize his slave, Anthony Burns, in Boston. The United States Marshal arrested Burns with his warrant from Judge Loring, took him to the old Court House, and there held him under an armed guard. The next morning he was brought before the Commissioner. Two lawyers, Thomas and Parker, appeared for the slaveholder.

Soon as it was known, Wendell Phillips and Theodore Parker rushed for the Court House, and with some difficulty obtained an entrance. Theodore Parker, in his history of the affair, says: "I got a chance to speak with Burns, who sat in the dock, ironed, between two of the marshal's guards."

Richard H. Dana, Jr., though not employed, interposed to make a remark, and protested against the haste, and asked that counsel might be assigned to defend Burns, and begged for time to examine the case and prepare for trial.

After a hard fight, both parties using strong and forcible words, the case was adjourned to the 27th. Then the news spread, and the excitement increased, and an immense meeting assembled in Faneuil Hall. It was proposed that Dr. Samuel G. Howe should go, in broad daylight, and demand the release of Burns; and if refused, "take him, at all hazards!"

This meeting was called to order by Samuel E. Sewell, who called Geo. R. Russell to the chair. I was there, and shall never forget his speech. I quote a few sentences. He said: "We have made compromises until we find that compromise is concession—concession is degradation!"

Dr. Howe said, "God wills that all men should be free, and we will as God wills!" He added, "No one man's freedom is safe unless all men are free." Wendell Phillips said, "I protest against squatter sovereignty in Kansas and kidnapper sovereignty in Boston!" Frances W. Bird said: "We have no remedy but to fight." John L. Seip, whom I shall never forget, said, with arms extended, "Let us remember, if we go from this meeting to that Court House, that we go from the cradle of liberty to the tomb of liberty." Theodore Parker said, "If we allow Burns to be returned, we are vassals of Virginia. She may kidnap our mothers in this city of the Puritans! There was once a Boston; but now it is only the northern hub of Alexandria."

At that moment cries on the street were heard that the "Court House was attacked." A heavy piece of timber had battered in the west door. Through that hole a negro made the first entrance, though badly beaten over his head. Higginson, Webb and Lewis Hayden then struggled through. The writer was there. James Batchelder, who had volunteered as a guard for the marshal, was killed!

At this time the marines from the navy yard, soldiers from Fort Independence, and the militia of Boston, rushed to the scene—and all Boston was subdued.

That was "anniversary week" in Boston. The New England Anti-Slavery Committee was in session, of which I was a member; and this proceeding inspired the eloquence of men who did not need much to arouse them: and such speeches as Lyman and Edward Beecher, Prof. Stowe, Wolcott and others made, would have awakened a valley of dry bones.

I saw the U. S. revenue cutter, Morris, which President Pierce had ordered there, take on board Anthony Burns, and I now believe that event did more to arouse hostility to slavery than any previous scene in history. Burns went to slavery; Massachusetts went to freedom. Such was the disgust felt against U. S. Marshal Devon, that he subsequently went to Virginia, bought Anthony Burns and freed him!

Judge Loring, too, felt the weight of public indignation. He had just been elected a professor in Harvard College. The Board of Overseers and the Senate of Massachusetts had to confirm the election, and Judge Loring found himself rejected. After this the Governor removed him from his office. But by this time Buchanan had become President. He sent for Loring, and appointed him Judge of the Court of Claims at Washington. The U. S. Senate confirmed him. Here he remained as judge till death took him.

From this period events seemed to conspire to keep the subject of slavery in the eye and ear of the American people. As all roads in Italy "lead to Rome," so all things now led to this contest. They brought on the war, and these men were the early actors. Willing actors, or unwilling, they acted their parts all the same. The Fugitive Slave code and the Kansas code combined to the same result. The one followed in the hasty footsteps of the other; and as the outgrowth of both, John Brown appeared at Harper's Ferry. He hated both the Fugitive Slave law and the Kansas slave code, but loved freedom for all men, and it was that which inspired him to strike a blow at the institution in the Old Dominion. The value and force of that blow could not be determined by its immediate results.

I shall never forget my interview with Brown while he was leaving Kansas, and will remember what he told me of the family of slaves he had in his wagon on his "way to a free country," as he said. Then he said further that while he was on the Kansas border a slave boy came to him in the night time and told him their whole family had just been sold "to go to Texas." Old Brown sent back word by this boy, "Tell them all to meet me on the Kansas line to-night at twelve o'clock." That family and five other persons did meet him, and he never left them until their feet were planted upon the soil of Canada, where the foot of the pursuer could not follow.

This made a great excitement in Missouri, and the governor offered a reward of $3,000 for Brown's arrest, and President Buchanan offered $250 more. Oh, how unlike Lincoln, who struck off the shackles of the bondman! This man offered government money to put them on!

This offer of Buchanan's was a most unparalleled outrage, but it helped on the pending crisis. People who could not before, now saw the General Government was allied to the slave power, and helping it forward.

The day I met Brown he had telegrams in his hands announcing the offers of rewards. I said, "What will you do if the Government pursues and overtakes you, for the rewards if nothing else?"

The old man said, "Oh, I will send them their long reward."

John Brown had the most implicit confidence in the idea that the colored people would flock to his aid, so soon as he raised his flag of freedom and pronounced their deliverance. He had gathered this from the aspiring ones he had helped on their way. If he had been told that the colored men all over the South would remain at the old homestead, support and protect the defenceless women and children while their masters were away, fighting to destroy the nation, he could never have believed it. I remember of his saying to Frederick Douglass, when in Rochester, N. Y., he urged him to go with him to Harper's Ferry, "Come with me, Douglass. I don't want you to fight. I will protect you with my life. But I want you to be there when the bees swarm, and help them into the hive."

This shows what he expected, and how sorely he was mistaken. I have heard him talk of the Seminole War, of its long struggle, and how a few men had held at bay all the forces of the United States. Seen from the standpoint of to-day, there was never the slightest chance of his success. But after Governor Wise of Virginia had visited him in prison, and held a long conversation with him, the latter said, "John Brown is not a mad man. He is a man of clear head and courageous fortitude. He is humane to his prisoners. Though a fanatic, he is firm, truthful and intelligent." John Brown closed his interview with Governor Wise as follows: "You people of the South had better prepare yourselves for a settlement of this question, which will come sooner than you are prepared for it."

Prophetic words, boldly spoken while the scaffold was in full view! On the second day of November following, he with six of his followers, only a little below him in fortitude and pluck, were all sentenced to be hung—and all were hung! Four white men and two negroes, with their trusted leader, all sealed their devotion to the cause with their lives. Cope-land and Green were the two colored men.

The Harper's Ferry excitement then began to subside; but in relating the causes that led to the Great Rebellion, this occurrence was an important item, and made an important page of the history.

THE CONGRESS.

ADDRESS OF REV. JULIUS GRUNERT, D. D.,

OF THE GERMAN EVANGELICAL SYNOD OF NORTH AMERICA, PASTOR AT URBANA, IND.

TRANSLATED BY PROF. H. A. FISCHER.

The speaker introduced his subject by speaking of the tendencies of the order of Jesuits and other secret lodges, declaring that they were a pair of brothers whose common parent is infidelity. He then continued nearly as follows:

Let us, however, to avoid digressions, and to meet the purpose of this gathering, concern ourselves with infidelity as it presents itself to us in the lodges. But if we wish to speak of infidelity in detail, we must at the outset mark the boundary where faith ceases and unbelief begins. Faith and unbelief, each of which presents a number of phases, are really founded on two opposite life currents, or, as we are here dealing only with the moral life proceeding from a free self-determination, on two tendencies of the will mutually opposing each other. The activity of the will is the sphere of accountability, and the volition of the creature in the presence of his Creator, whether or not he will submit himself to his Creator or assert himself before him, this determines him either for faith or for unbelief.

Let us, however, found our consideration on facts.

1. Our consciousness teaches, as our opponents will admit with us, the existence of a moral law as the universal law of human life.

2. It is also a universally admitted fact of consciousness, that the foundation for the existence of the moral law cannot be in itself, and it, therefore, is founded on, and points to, the only self-existing, eternal God, its Creator.

3. The essence of the moral law is formally the power of free self-determination, by virtue of which man can distinguish between good and evil, and decide for one or the other; materially it is the moral life, which man shall form out of himself to a moral world, in which truth, righteousness and love reign, as traces of the divine image, as the God-created powers of life.

4. In this activity and supremacy of the moral law, as the gift and command of the Creator, consists the essence of man, his ability, his virtue, his righteousness, his salvation. By this man is distinguished from all other creatures, in whom no such power of self-determination is found, and, therefore, no morality, neither sin nor virtue.

5. It is also a fact that the reign of the moral law in man, which, as the will of God, was intended to shape and organize the moral world, and man an instrument of God, has been broken; that man has abused the power of self-determination given him by God, has decided against God, and has thus created for himself his own, i. e., an evil will, which by endeavoring to assert self has produced a moral world of ruin; and having turned man away from the fountain of life, has, in the form of selfishness, established the reign of death. God's will with its demands, our self-will with its self-seeking, the law of the Spirit and the law in our members, conflict with each other in every human heart, and fill it with pain and unrest.

Now the question is, how can self-will or the evil will in man be broken, and the authority of the moral law be restored, the will of God become supreme, so that man may become an organ of God, a child of God?

The endeavor of secret societies to restore the moral world in man in his own power, by making him an organ and member of their league, is itself self-willed and, therefore, immoral. Secret societies do not go beyond the moral law as a law of life, rest on a deistical foundation, and thus deny the uninterrupted government and progressive revelation of a personal deity, and pretend to restore the supremacy of the moral law by impressing on the mind an image of morality by precept, example, and sacrifice. They recognize the Bible as a text book of truth and wisdom, but in the same way they value Plato and Cicero and other books, in so far as they pretend to teach the truth; they pretend to demand from their members a moral life, and by their example to raise mankind to such a life; they pretend, through the offering of brotherly and Samaritan love, to regulate the evils of the world, and so create an alliance in which truth, righteousness and love shall dwell. But they fail to see that their truth, righteousness and love are only human ideals, products of fallen man, and that when men attempt to help themselves and others with mere human ideals, it is just as foolish as if one should try to pull himself out of a morass by his own hair. They fail to see that human life-powers created by God and corrupted by man's guilt, can only be restored by the Creator. They have nothing to say of that which God has done in the economy of salvation, of Him who alone can give righteousness and power, of the sacrifice of the Lamb of God who bore the sins of the world, and creates in us a new life.

Our whole consideration has its focus in this truth: the power of the moral law, created by God, but broken by man's guilt, can only be restored by God. This restoration of the moral law (which as a self-determining, organizing power, is the will of God and man's true essence) God has given in his Son Jesus Christ, who made the world, and who has affirmed himself to be the eternal Son of God, having eternal life in himself, and who, by his teaching and sinless life, by his suffering and death, by his resurrection and the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, has proved his testimony concerning himself to be true, and evinced himself as the one who alone can forgive sin and bestow eternal life.

"There is one God and one Mediator between God and man." This is the landmark between faith and unbelief.

It is a fact that the supremacy of the moral law, that God's will has been broken, and that in every man, an evil, selfish will has asserted itself. Now, whoever is willing to break and entirely give up his own will, in a complete surrender of his entire being to Jesus Christ, in obedience to the Father, and the discipline of the Spirit, he receives power to be reconciled to God, to become a child of God; and, as the self-will of man is broken, and God's will, his true being, in the daily renewal and sanctification of the Spirit, is enthroned, man is free, for only those whom the Son makes free are free indeed.

Now it is clear that if secret societies wish to restore the moral arrangement of the world (sittliche Weltordnung), and a moral life, by modifying and regulating the self-seeking, self-will of man, by confining the self-determining power of the moral law to their ordinances and laws, which, indeed, have no power and can give no life,—then, in the sight of God, the evil, selfish will of man remains, and man remains bound by the chains of selfishness and sin in some form or other, and, therefore, is not free; and this slavery is more extensively and intensively ruinous, because of the union of many in a league, throwing around itself the appearance of truth and righteousness, and pretending to establish the reign of love and peace. The lodges are, whether they bear mainly a social or mainly a hierarchical impression, schools of infidelity. But infidelity, practically carried out, is revolution and anarchy. For, as faith, the power of self-determination for the will of God restored to us in Christ, is the shaping, organizing power, the centralizing, unifying, constructive principle; so unbelief (selfishness, self-will) is the disorganizing, leveling and destructive principle, the power of ruin, as which, it manifests itself in regard to the ordinances of God, family, church and state. As in the beginning unbelief denies the personal, active existence of God, the author of all life, and man's personal accountability to him, so it undermines and destroys all authority on earth; and the unbeliever, in the darkness and arrogance of his selfish nature, presumes to make himself a world-reformer, a god on earth. Organizations of unbelievers break the will of the individual and make him a slave of their ordinances and institutions, and to the present time break the will of God for the sake of their own commandments. Even if they appear under the mask of brotherly love and freedom, they, nevertheless, stir up the evil fires of anarchy, destroy the fear of God and piety in the family, the sanctity of the law, the comfort of the Gospel. While they lay equal claims to the progressive emancipation from God-ordained authorities with the children of promise, with the believers whom the truth makes free; they, at the same time, endeavor to stamp their seal on all civil institutions and popular systems, until this double life current bursts the bands of national unity, and the bitter fruits of revolution and anarchy appear.

[The above is a translation of the main portion of Dr. Grunert's address, subject to all the limitations and defects which must always attach to translations. After having thus shown that the churches and lodges rest on foundations diametrically opposed to each other, the speaker concluded by arguing that the church can have no concord with this Belial of unrighteousness; that no man can consistently adhere to both church and lodge. The translator regrets very much that all the members of the congress could not have heard this clear, philosophical exposition of the religion of secret societies.—H. A. F.]

THE LODGE AND THE CHURCH.

ADDRESS OF REV. W. H. FRENCH, D.D., PASTOR FIRST UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CINCINNATI.

We are accustomed to ascribe a purpose to every work and a motive to every action. It is impossible to view even the simplest structure without considering the fact that there was purpose in the making of it. A beam is cut from the forest, hewed and squared, a mortise and tenon are fitted, two billets of wood are found one upon the other and fastened, and we, as instinctively, say there is evidence of purpose. Nor can we see the actions of our fellow men without instinctively attributing some motive, good or bad. The keen scenting of the observer sees purpose everywhere, and motive. It is a law of intelligence. This has application to associations of men, whether formed by the divine command or wholly voluntary.

Men have purpose in forming them and motive in going into them, whether good or bad. It may be asserted of institutions that are divine in their origin that they are adapted to the end for which they were formed, and never go beyond them, and also that between divine institutions there can be no conflict. The church and state are of divine authorship. Government, civil and ecclesiastical, are of divine origin. These two institutions exist together. They have distinct ends to answer, and hence the completeness of their harmony.

The Lodge is an association that is wholly voluntary. The claim to have a divine original were so preposterous as to meet no favor. It is a claim that is wholly gratuitous and contrary to the teaching of all authentic history. It may therefore go beyond the aim and purpose of its originators; may be productive of evil while some purposes of good may have been designed and some good ends sought. Man makes mistakes; God makes none.

"My theme is 'The Lodge and the Church,'" and my purpose is to inquire of the influence of the Lodge upon the work of the church. Is it, as civil government, a handmaid and helper; or is it antagonistic, hostile, the foe of the church? Does the Lodge promote moral reform? Does it advance the moral and spiritual interests of men? Does it work in line with the church in the promotion of man's highest interests; or does it antagonize it? I assume as universally admitted that the purposes of the church are right. I do not design to arraign the Almighty so much as a question of its right and adaptation to an end worthy of its infinite Author. To antagonize it is warfare upon the throne of God—rebellion against his most righteous government.

Masonry is a religion. It claims to be a religion. It even claims universal adaptation to man—not as the Christian religion and the church, suited to all classes and climes and centuries; but adapted to all religions, open to receive Jew and Gentile, Barbarian and Scythian, and mass them in one conglomerate without leavening them with the leaven of righteousness. It makes no claim to Christianize. It rejects the Corner Stone, elect and precious, upon which the church of God rests. While, therefore, it is a religion it is not Christian. "As the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out," so is the Lodge Christian with Christ left out. Rejecting the only foundation of the church the antagonism is fundamental.

The oath which is imposed upon the applicant for membership in the Lodge and upon the person who is being initiated in the different degrees of Masonry is contrary to the spirit and genius of Christianity. While I have referred to Masonry more particularly, as the great parent of all secret associations, my remarks have application to all such secret oath-bound associations. They all impose an oath of secrecy and obligation to obey a code of unknown laws.

Let us consider for a moment the object which the church is seeking to accomplish with respect to God himself. First. What object had God in gathering a people, organizing them and giving them laws and ordinances? It is manifestly to bring man back to his allegiance to God; that God's throne might be established and the rebellious subjects made to bow to his reign. Fundamental to this is the raising in the minds of men exalted views of God himself. This is shown in the word of God and its declarations of God's majesty and glory, as exalted above all gods, as clothed with light as with a garment, as sitting King upon his throne. It is shown in the appearances which he made to men, such as were calculated to inspire awe and awaken a dread of his excellency. As when he appeared to Moses and the priests and elders and "there was upon his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone;" and to Isaiah, "upon a throne high and lifted up and his train filled the temple." And so it appears from the commandment, "exalt ye the Lord our God and worship at his holy hill;" and again in "beauty of holiness bow and adore." This is the work which the church is organized to effect. How does she do it? By teaching people God's character and to reverence his name and word and works, and by preserving his ordinances pure and sacred. The one ordinance to which I refer now is that of the oath. How is it to be used? An appeal to God is only justifiable when the matter of the oath is of sufficient importance, and when it is right. When one gives his oath that he will perform a certain deed he should know what that deed is or he is guilty of trifling with his Maker: and he is in danger of being ensnared by his oath. In either case the effect must be to lower the ideas of God's majesty, to cultivate irreverence and destroy the sense of obligation. This were to counteract the church's work and defeat its aim. Here then appears the opposition to the church which the Lodge offers at its very threshold. That oath that binds him who swears it to "conceal and never to reveal" that which he shall afterwards learn, that obliges him to yield implicit obedience to a code of unknown laws and the requirements of the Lodge that may be composed of unscrupulous men is ensnaring; and to make a solemn appeal to God in such is to trifle with our obligation to God and ensnare the soul.

Who executed the vengeance of the Lodge upon the head of poor Morgan? The Lodge. But some members of it were ensnared by their oath and felt themselves obliged by its terrible penalty to execute the Lodge's decree. Who took the life of the noble Blennerhasset, riding upon the highway, unsuspecting that a foe lay lurking in the way? The young man with his rifle by his side seeing the noble form was unnerved and about to yield. His mother beside him pressed her cup to his lips, saying, "Drink this." Emboldened by the nerve-daring potion he raised his gun and the noble Blennerhasset fell. Who slew him? The Lodge. When one grasps his sword and smites to the ground a fellow mortal, is it the sword that slays him? The young man was the sword. The Lodge wielded it; and the blood was upon the Lodge, though the young man was far from guiltless. These facts prove that the oath of the Lodge does ensnare and no man with a proper sense of the sanctity of an oath can take it. To yield to it tends to lower the sense of obligation to God.

Besides this the sacred mystery of Masonry as it has been revealed is so trifling in itself that he that has appealed to God and imprecated a curse upon himself if he shall ever reveal it must feel a sense of intense mortification when he learns it. The effect of this trifling is seen in the manner in which the oath is administered in our courts and the consequent utter disregard of it by those to whom it is administered. To profane it breaks the third commandment and lowers the impressions of God's majesty and works against the very object the church seeks to obtain.

The form of the oath is also a consideration and the sanction given it. Before a court, civil or ecclesiastical, an oath is administered with uplifted hand; the witness swears that he will testify truly "as he shall answer to God." For the truth of what he utters he is willing that God shall be the judge and shall avenge it, if wrong. Who does not feel that in such an appeal there is a dignity and majesty, and such an obligation imposed, as will elicit truth if there is the fear of God in the heart of him who swears? But the Lodge oath adds to this to give it a higher sanction. The miserable bond under no less a penalty than to have his [dead] body quartered and the mutilated carcass buried by the sands of the sea, etc. The oath is degraded and he who swears it is hurt by it. The mind is drawn away from the consideration of God's judgment to the miserable consideration of the penalty inflicted by human hands—I had almost said demon hands. This lowers one's reverence for God and so defeats the work the church would do.

Christian governments recognize the importance of maintaining a due reverence for God. The constitution of my own noble State of Ohio forbids the profaning the name of the Father, Son or Holy Ghost. This is evidently recognized as necessary to secure the ends of government—the promotion of intelligence, virtue or morality and religion. Profanity is against the public interests. It is so as it diminishes regard for God and so for his authority and law. The oath of the fraternities is ensnaring, is an appeal to God in a cause not worthy of it; is sanctioned by a penalty that is inflicted by human hands and yet placed as binding above ordinary oaths because of that brutal penalty—all of which I submit tend to trifling with a sacred ordinance and profanation of God's name, to treat lightly that name before which Seraphim with veiled faces cry "Holy, holy, holy." This reverence for God cannot be weakened without hurt. It lies at the foundation of loyalty to God's government which the church seeks and the Lodge counteracts.

II. The practices of the Lodge are adverse to the work of the church, hostile to its aims.

One great aim of the church is to promote obedience to God. It aims to teach men to obey God and bring them back to their allegiance to him. This it attempts in the only way in which obedience can be taught, viz., by giving laws and enforcing obedience to them. Every law which remains a dead letter upon the statute book is an educator in lawlessness. On the contrary enforced law is a sovereign educator in loyalty to government. It is upon this principle that the law of God is given and the worship of God appointed. The ordinances were put in the church, and that the church may learn to obey God exact conformity was required. When, therefore, the drunken priests Nadab and Abihu offered strange fire which God had not appointed, fire came forth from the Shekinah and consumed them. When God was giving law for his worship, and the people of Israel, waiting for it, grew impatient and made the golden calf, they were judged and put to shame. What would have been the effect of leaving this act unrebuked or of its acceptance as a well-meant service? Simply to establish for all time to come the option of the worshiper to obey the divine command or to act his own will without regard to the command. The lesson of its prompt and terrible judgment was the peril of transgression and the daring to institute a symbol in God's worship. The very essence of worship is obedience to God. All other service is sin; "for sin is the transgression of the law." Can we place our sins upon God's altar and ask acceptance? The church therefore labors in God's way to teach obedience—loyalty to God's government.

Now comes the Lodge of Masonry and declares, (for this is its authoritative declaration, see Mackey's Manual of the Lodge, p. 57.) "Speculative Masonry, now known as Freemasonry, is, therefore, the scientific application and the religious consecration of the rules and principles, the technical language and the implements and materials of operative Masonry to the worship of God as the Grand Architect of the Universe." Israel in the plain before Mt. Sinai's rugged, cloud-capped summit did no more idolatrous and rebellious work in making the golden calf than is this deed of Masonry. It exalts the rules of Masonry above the Word of God, and appoints its implements, its compass and square, as symbols in the worship of God. In other words it sets the Bible and its teachings aside; the commandment of God aside—and institutes its own service and worship in a way that God has not commanded. This is both transgression and a lesson in transgression and places the Lodge in antagonism to the Christian church as really and directly as Buddhism or Brahminism or any other false religion.

The claim of Masonry is that it is a religion. The claim is that it is an institution of God appointed to transmit the miraculous works of God (see Traditions of Masonry by A. T. C. Pierson, p. 13). That is practically to assume the place of the Old Testament church; and yet, with such arrogant claim, it rejects the name of Jesus Christ and exalts the law of nature to a supreme place.

The ends sought by the Christian church are not carnal and sensuous, they are spiritual. They are higher than the merely literary, grander than the merely moral, more exalted than the intellectual, and purer than the formal. The church teaches obedience to God not as a cold form of Chesterfieldian politeness, but an obedience that emanates from the heart. It goes to the fountain and source whence all actions come, and effects there the work of reformation, that deeds pure in purpose may be brought forth as well as outwardly conformed to law. It aims to give back to man the image which he has lost, and restore him to the divine favor.

The only method of grace is given to the church. Jesus Christ himself has declared, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." The claim of the Lodge, at least practically, is to give all that is needful for salvation. Else what mean the oft-repeated declarations of members of these associations, "The Lodge is all the church I want, 'is all the church I need,' 'If one cannot be saved in the Lodge he cannot be saved anywhere,' and yet in the Lodge, in the presence of Jew or Pagan, the lips are sealed against the utterance of that name through which sinners approach God's presence. It teaches a false trust, a Christless confidence, and lures poor sinners away from the only path of life. The Lodge, therefore, sustains a relation to the Christian church as really antagonistic as Judaism. "He that is not with me is against me." So does the observance of its forms of worship, in a serio-comic style, beget a spirit of formalism, and leads to the observation, that a man will not long be a good Mason and good church member.

Antagonistic as the church and Lodge are, it is passing strange that churches cognizant of this should fellowship them. To-day, in the church, receive the symbols of his righteousness and declare only through the blood can souls be saved, only through this precious name approach can be to God. To-night, in the Lodge, where they dare not utter his name. "I will die with thee," to-day. To-night, "I know not the man."

These are a few of the ways in which the Lodge antagonizes the church: but a few. They furnish enough to teach us to shun the order and "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." The Lodge being hostile to the church, the opponent of the church in all her spiritual and heavenly work, is hostile to all the interests of man. The foe of the church, it is hostile to the state. That which will make men godless, that which will lower the sanctity of the oath, that which teaches man transgression, can only be evil in its effects upon society, and becomes the foe alike of religion and of liberty. To no institution are we indebted for our civil liberties, for our unequalled form of government, for our civilization, as to the church of God. All over our institutions, literary and punitive, educational and eleemosynary, and upon our halls of judgment hitherto, is and has been written the name of Christ. From foundation to turret stone is stamped that name above all names. To cast off this now, through whatever influence, is to undo what the church has already done. It is to overthrow our highest, grandest, noblest works, and return to the bondage our fathers fled. That which leads away from God makes war on all the interests of man. In the hands of the Lodge neither religion is safe, nor liberty.

The discourse of Rev. Mr. Winship, Secretary of the New West Commission, in the First Congregational church of this city last week was mainly on the Mormon problem and was of great interest. The important fact developed was the impotency of law alone to destroy this iniquity. Unlike the liquor traffic, it is sustained not simply by lust and avarice, but very largely by the mistaken but most sincere convictions of the Mormons. Perverted conviction is not less powerful than that which is based on truth, and the way to meet it is not by simple expression, but by presenting something better. The experience of the world has been that no religion, however absurd, has been effectually suppressed by legal enactments. The amended anti-polygamy law is doubtless right, and ought to be strictly enforced, but the greater work is to teach the Gospel of Christ in its purity and to enforce its application to the great sin of Mormonism.

—A revival is in progress among the pupils of Oxford Female College, Ohio. Of the 120 pupils, almost all have consecrated themselves to the Lord Jesus.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MICHIGAN NOTES.

WILLIAMSTON, Mich., April 7, 1887.

Since my last I have visited Chicago as a delegate from the Wesleyan Conference of this State. The meeting was similar to others held by the National Christian Association in years past, save that a larger percentage of representative men from various religious bodies were present.

The present week was ushered in with great excitement. Monday morning the polls opened with as eager multitudes waiting to exercise their elective franchise as ever gathered to cast a ballot. Some, indeed, appeared indifferent, but for the most part the voters seemed anxious. In several instances men staggered to the boxes and deposited a vote for the amendment, exclaiming, "When it is out of reach I cannot get it;" or, "I shall be glad when it is not to be had at all," etc. At present the indications are that from henceforth Michigan will be in line with Maine, Kansas, Iowa, and the rest of the prohibition States. By the time this reaches your readers we shall know definitely. If the amendment did not carry, it will not be because godly men and women did not work and pray for it. At all the polling places in every hamlet and city women stood with kindly yet anxious faces, with ballots in their hands to give to those who were ready to vote, and with ready arguments to convince the skeptical and hesitating. Free lunches were served all day to those who voted for the amendment. Saloon-keepers, brewers and distillers have abundant reason to tremble. Prohibition has come to stay, and efforts in this direction will not cease until the United States together are freed from the slavery of rum as the shackles were broken from four millions of our colored brethren in the South.

The Ida Lee case in Brighton dragged heavily through the justice court. From the time of the discovery of the dead body (and some boldly say before the death of the girl) a concerted attempt has been made to shield the criminal from receiving his just deserts. A portion of the facts were given to your readers in my last, but there is more of the same character. There is not, and has not been at any time, any doubt as to the guilt of Dr. Waite. As your readers are aware the first attempt of the benevolent order of Odd-fellows to hide all signs of Waite's guilt proved a failure. The second post mortem examination brought to light all their hidden things of darkness and made farther concealment impossible. But the charitable society show themselves to be equal to any emergency. When their man is fairly caught they look about them for means by which to assist their distressed brother. To the consternation of the uninitiated, when Waite is arrested he is arrested on the charge of willful and malignant murder. Everybody knows the charge cannot be sustained. Had the charge been, "Death by an attempted abortion at the hands of Dr. Waite," he would have been convicted. Every ounce of evidence sustained this last charge, but the prosecution know that the first charge cannot be sustained, and the jury in rendering their verdict will be instructed to render a verdict in accordance with the facts so far as they go to prove that Waite willfully and maliciously murdered Ida Lee. Of course they will not bring him in guilty of this under the circumstances. He may, however, be committed for trial, but as is readily seen the indictment has a flaw in it, placed there, without doubt, by a fraternity whose object was to aid and defend a brother whether he be right or wrong. This is not as plainly expressed in the Odd-fellows' as in the Masons' covenant of agreement, but it is not at all singular when the child manifests in its ways the peculiar characteristics of the parent.

As this writing progresses the success of the amendment to our constitution becomes more doubtful. It is firmly believed by honest men that there has not been a fair count. It is sad to see the leading secular journals of the State glorying over its defeat.

It may be well to state here that owing to the fact that both the President and Secretary of the Michigan Association visited the Congress at their own expense, as did some others of this State, and farther owing to the fact that on the 17th of May the original U. B. church hold an anti-secrecy convention at Castleton, Barry Co., and owing to some other circumstances it has been thought wise to defer the proposed Spring convention, which was to have been held at Spring Arbor, until later in the season, perhaps until fall. In the meantime let all true followers of Jesus pray and labor without discouragement. Jesus will be here presently. Let us work till he comes.

Secretary M. C. A.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE SUNDAY NEWSPAPER.

The sale of commodities in this city, on Sunday, is now restricted to drugs, milk and newspapers.

If the Sunday papers are not prohibited it matters little to the majority of our citizens (especially the merchants) whether the stores are kept closed or not, because of the benefit derived from the spare time the public has to peruse the enticing advertisements. By means of the Sunday newspaper many of our leading merchants do, virtually, more business on that day than any other day of the week. During the week days they reap from their Sunday investment. The Boston Sunday paper is an unrivaled advertising medium. Many professors of religion, who would appear shocked should the opening of their stores on Sunday be suggested to them, pay hundreds of dollars to Sunday publishers, reaping as they anticipated a direct benefit on Monday. About one-half of the sixteen page Sunday paper is occupied by advertisements, from the church service notice to the dime museum bill. The opening of every store in the city could not possibly be so pernicious in effect as the sale and reading of the Sunday paper, by which the Sabbath is not only broken but the mind of the public is led away from sacred meditation to worldly thoughts and desires.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, the evangelist, recently paid his disrespect to these publications in the most unmistakable terms. It is to be hoped that some of our timid clergymen, who apparently fear the criticisms of these ungodly sheets, will follow his brave example. Certainly, the Sunday paper is a curse, which, alas! church members, to a large extent, help perpetuate, support, encourage. I say church members, for I sincerely believe, and am logically certain that no real Christian will read the unholy thing.

CARS HEATED BY STEAM.

The Boston and Albany Railroad Company will, probably, be recorded as the first road to successfully heat its trains by steam. A few days ago, the 4:30 p. m. train from this city for New York was furnished with complete steam heating, and electric lighting apparatus. The steam is supplied from the locomotive, which is scarcely missed, so far as speed is concerned. The Julien storage batteries used for lighting are charged by the Western Electric Light Company. The electric connections are made in the railroad yard near Columbus Avenue. The estimated cost per day for each car is about $2.12.

Doubtless, the White River Junction disaster, and later, the Bussey Bridge catastrophe, just on the outskirts of the city, have at last awakened our railway officials to the dangers constantly threatened by the old method of lighting and heating trains.

UNIQUE FAREWELL SERVICE.

Perhaps one of the oddest, at least the most unusual farewell service witnessed in this city took place at the Warren Avenue Baptist church, when Dr. L. W. Munhall closed his very successful evangelistic engagement among the Baptists of this city. All the young converts present were directed to stand hand in hand in the two center aisles and in front of the pulpit. The older Christians were then requested to stand along the side aisles and across the back of the auditorium, also clasping hands. The unconverted remained in their seats, curiously watched, and watching the strange performance.

The doctor, meanwhile, stood on the platform, giving orders like a commanding general, while Mr. Gifford, the pastor, and Dr. A. J. Gordon, pastor of the Clarendon-Street church, were down in the ranks acting as faithful lieutenants, and they all displayed not a little knowledge of military tactics in placing their soldiers, after which all were commanded to sing

"Blest be the tie that binds."

This finished, the older Christians were ordered to pass, one by one, in front of the young converts and shake the hand of each. This was done with much heartiness. Everybody was then requested, at a given signal, to wave their handkerchief as a sort of adieu and Amen.

Although something unusual to an aristocratic Boston audience, it was grand, sublime, after all, to see that vast and cultivated assembly of pretty, blushing young ladies, and bashful young men, and middle aged and old, men and women, arise and clasp hands and join in singing the old and beautiful hymn of Christian love and fellowship. It was a scene never to be forgotten, and gave one a faint idea of how the early Christians must have appeared when they consolidated their hearts and possessions. We need more scenes of this sort. "Let brotherly love continue."

D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Apr. 7, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—It was my privilege to preach in the Sixth Presbyterian church of this city, Rev. John Rusk, pastor, on National Reform, last Sabbath morning. This young pastor is doing good work up in the East end. There were 337 scholars in their Sabbath-school. They have over 400 enrolled. Their church is comparatively new. The auditorium was quite full. In the evening I preached in the Scotch M. E. church, Covington, Ky., Rev. Wm. F. Taylor, pastor. This is a congregation of 350 members. National Reform was entirely new to them. A prominent lady in the church said to me, "We never heard the like of that here before. The scheme is so grand I can hardly allow myself to believe it is possible to realize it. And yet you proved it from the Scriptures." The pastor insisted that I return and give them another sermon.

On Monday afternoon, at the Presbyterian ministers' meeting, Prof. E. D. Morris, D. D., read a paper on "Pre-millennialism and our Church Creeds." It was an able effort. He clearly showed that it was not the faith of the church as expressed in her creeds and confessions, either in the first or second Reformations. Of course the merits of the question did not come up. Apropos to the convention of Chilists held some months ago in Chicago, we would like to call the attention of your readers to an excellent work by Rev. David Brown, M. A., of the Free Church of Scotland, on the second coming of Christ. It is divided into three sections. In the first division he states the facts respecting Christ's coming in nine propositions, making his position, that it will not be pre-millennial, as it seems to us, impregnable. The celebrated passage, Rev. 20:4-7, taken by so many Chilists as a basis for two resurrections, one of the righteous dead before the millennium and the other of the wicked dead after the millennium, he treats at length. He gives nine arguments showing that the first resurrection is not literal but figurative. There are two resurrections and two deaths referred to in this passage and in each there is a contrast. The second death is of the soul, the first death is of the body. The second resurrection is of the body, the first resurrection is of the soul. It is a spiritual rising.

The Sam Jones meetings were removed to Music Hall Sabbath night. His farewell meeting was held Tuesday night. He did not receive such an ovation as last year. Halstead thinks it was because he took up with the reform ideas of Drs. Hays and Lockwood. Others think it was because he gave some of his old sermons. But these explanations do not explain, for Moody can give the same sermons year after year, and they are as fresh as ever, and the two Drs. referred to are more popular since they became pronounced reformers than before. Perhaps the novelty of his style is wearing out, and so he is losing the locks wherein lay his strength.

On Wednesday evening I lectured in the Union M. E. church of Covington, Ky., Rev. Charles F. Giffin, pastor. The lecture room was well filled. This is an old and substantial congregation. Their pastor is a strong man. He was raised over in this city. He has had successful pastorates in Brooklyn, N. Y., New Haven, Conn., and Baltimore, Md. He was in the last named city nine years, in charge of an Independent Methodist church, endowed to the extent of $400,000. But it was too lonely for him to be outside of church organization. He "became homesick," as he expressed it. A year and a half ago he was appointed to his present position. He has the finest parsonage in the M. E. body.

Cincinnati is to have a new city building. It is to cover the entire block between 8th and 9th streets, and Central avenue and Plumb street. They have appropriated $700,000 for the building. It is expected that twice that amount will be expended.

On Saturday evening I am to lecture in the Female Seminary of Oxford, Ohio, Rev. Faye Walker, president. He says the audience will be his own pupils, the students from the Miami University and the citizens of the town. The Seminary and the Sanitarium are Bro. Walker's own enterprise. They are very successful. Oxford is known far and wide as the seat of the Miami University. Ohio has had two State institutions from the first; one at Athens, nominally under the control of the M. E. church, and the other at Oxford, substantially Presbyterian. The Legislature gave each a township of land. The Athens University has since been incorporated with the State Agricultural College at Columbus. The Oxford trustees leased their land at such a low rate that it does not yield them an income equal to what the tax would be were it taxable. So the University was closed for a while on account of lack of funds. Recently it has been opened. But it is not prospering as in its palmy days of thirty years ago. It seems to be drifting toward secularism.

J. M. FOSTER.

MEMPHIS LETTER: WITH GOOD NEWS FROM EAST AND SOUTH.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Apr. 2, '87.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It has been some time since the readers of the Cynosure have heard or seen anything from me. Some, I have no doubt, have long since thought I had quit the field, but not so, I am still endeavoring to throw hot shells into the ranks of the Secret Empire, and I praise the name of the Lord that many have been made to denounce the same.

One dear young brother, by the name of Gray, in Dew, Freestone Co., Texas, had been swallowed up by the lodge iniquity (he is a graduate of Oberlin and a minister); he was master of the lodge, wore his hat and sat in the east "to beautify and adorn the lodge"; but he was aroused, alarmed, awakened, and when he saw how he had been swindled out of his money he went home, procured his double-barreled gun, hunted up the "Most Worshipful Grand Master" (who had only a few weeks before initiated him into the nonsense of Masonry), and at the point of the gun he demanded and the M. W. G. M. gave him back his money, and then tried to get the white people to arrest him, but it failed to work. Then the M. W. G. M. tried to arouse the whites to assail him on account of political assertions, but it was also abortive. You will remember my recommending that he be sent the Cynosure some time ago.

I have just concluded a controversy through the columns of the Boston Advocate with a Rev. Green of Providence, R. I., a minister of the A. M. E. church. He and Rev. Biddle of Worcester, Mass., opened the controversy on "Church Members and Secret Societies." I pitched into the fray. Bro. Green was for, and Bro. Biddle objected to the unholy alliance, yet he said they were right enough, but not for Christians. Bro. Green said they were ordained of God and were essential to man's salvation. They were and are both of them strangers to me, but I could not stand that assertion, and uninvited I plunged in the fray to defend a cause dearer to me than life itself, the cause of the Christian religion. I sent Bro. Biddle a few books, "Masonic Outrages," one or two copies of the Cynosure and our Living Way, and shortly after my first article appeared in the Boston Advocate.

Bro. Biddle writes me as follows: "When I first began this controversy I was not opposed to secret societies, as such, but your letters to me, the Living Way, and the books you sent me have opened my eyes completely, and I have openly severed my connection and am preaching a gospel of complete separation."

Hence we have it: Texas on the west, Massachusetts and Rhode Island on the east are being awakened to this iniquity, and I praise God and give glory to his name.

I am trying at home to have a clean people for God. I have succeeded in getting nearly every male member of our church to quit the use of tobacco. The question of prohibition is before us in all its glory; and, as I often assert, I was born a prohibitionist. I do not cease to cry aloud on that subject. Our church is so strongly opposed to liquor that two months ago they excluded a member for repeatedly coming to church smelling of liquor. We had prayer-meeting for Michigan last Wednesday and we hope many will pray for Tennessee.

I regretted exceedingly my inability to attend the convention in your city this week. But since our batteries have been opened against secret societies, our supply of finance has been materially cut off for two years. Mr. Brinkley and myself have devoted our time to the Living Way without one single cent for our labor, oftentimes taking what salary we get from our churches to keep the paper afloat. We are trusting in God and have the consolation of knowing "that it will all be over soon." Pray for us.

R. N. COUNTREE.

KANSAS, THE BATTLE GROUND FOR FREEDOM.

GALENA, Kans.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The great moral cannon is roaring here to-day. Women, both white and colored, are voting in our city election for the first time. They are assembled in an upper room—hall (with prayers, I trust), from which they go in small squads to the polls, and modestly hand in their tickets. I am impressed that the whisky question is about settled in this great State. Blessed thought!

I was recently asked by a Worshipful (?) Master to give the lost word of the third degree. Whereupon we went into a dark, solitary room, when I gave it upon the five points to his entire satisfaction, and yet I never saw the inside of an assembled lodge!

Lodge cliques and tricks are strong in this city. I think I can do some good by cultivating Masons for a time. I am getting my game in good range, so that should I decide to shoot, somebody will have to flutter, while I would lose my business interests here, which are considerable.

Prohibition is boiling over here now. We are voting for the principles set forth by St. John. We call it "voting for St. John."

JAMES SPRINGER.

SALOON AND LODGE MUST GO.

MOLINE, Ill., April 3, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We enclose you a local paper with its severe strictures on the Knights of Labor and their secret methods of slate-making. The prohibition element here, which is now quite strong, after monthly meetings all winter and the lecture of Gov. St. John and others, have placed a municipal ticket in the field. The result will be a division of city officers among each of three parties, Prohibitionists, Republicans and Labor candidates. We are making great progress in western Illinois in temperance at least. We hail the coming deliverance of the Iowa river towns on the Mississippi from the curse of rum.

Your congress of churches and Christians is bound to awaken slumbering public sentiment on the subject under discussion. Other associations of a mutual benefit nature are springing up, without the secret oath-bound conditions, which are bound to weaken to a very large extent the secret fraternities.

Believing that the continued agitation of the temperance and fraternity question will result in the overthrow of the saloon and the lodge, we bid you go forward and pray for full and speedy success.

OBSERVER.

PITH AND POINT.

A CHRIST-DISHONORING ELDER.

I have had quite an interesting time with a Presbyterian elder in our neighborhood who is a much stronger Mason than Presbyterian. He became very much offended at father and others who opposed Masonry in a debate at our lyceum on secret societies last winter. He claims that all good men from Adam to John the Evangelist were Masons; that all the apostles were Masons; and that he as firmly believes that Jesus Christ was a Mason as that he is one himself, and that he can come as near proving it by the Bible as any one can that he was not a Mason.—E. S. BOGLE, Fredonia, Kans.

THE POMEROY REMINISCENCES.

I feel highly gratified to you for those articles "Reminiscences of S. C. Pomeroy." They bring afresh to the mind the times when our souls were filled with indignation towards our own Government at its course not only toward Kansas, but toward all those that espoused the cause of freedom. Let them be put in pamphlet form. In a late Cynosure was an article entitled, "Are Masonic Rites Heathen?" I would invite the author of that article to take the Bible and turn to Ezekiel 8:10, and see whether there is anything there analogous to Chinese debauchery; and then read the 15th and 16th verses of the same chapter, and see if there is anything analogous to what is going on in every Masonic lodge and then accept of the Lord's judgment.—O. TICHENOR, Waukesha, Wis.

ANTI-MASON, ABOLITIONIST, PROHIBITIONIST.

When a boy of sixteen I was disgusted with Masonry. In 1828 I commenced taking the North Star of Dunville. It was edited by two brothers, seceders from Masonry. I read this until I came to Wisconsin, and when I heard that in Chicago there was going to be an Anti-masonic paper I was glad and sent my two dollars two weeks before the first number was in type; and its weekly testimonies and my brother's connection with the Morgan affair, and my connection with grand juries and otherwise proves secretism to be a child of darkness and should be sent back to its native place. I have poor success in getting subscribers, but where I thought the paper would do good have subscribed for ten or twelve and sent off all of my own.

In 1826 I joined the Colonization Society in Boston, but soon found it was only a quietus for anti-slavery so I seceded, and when the underground railroad was built I took stock in that and it paid well, but was too far east to do a heavy business.

In 1840, in the town of Fairlee, Vt., they nominated two rum-sellers for the assembly; but could I vote for a rum-seller? I said, no! But I went five miles to vote against them, and as there was but one vote difference between them my vote and one with it stopped the election of either. Fifty-two years ago I found what our Saviour said Nicodemus needed, and it has been my joy and consolation ever since, and I shall soon come down to the shore where I shall hear the songs of the redeemed on the other side. I have had several long talks with our Masonic Methodist preachers, but get no satisfaction; they will neither own nor deny anything definite, and for fifteen years I have neither supported them nor heard them preach. Am I right?—JOSIAH SHAW.

PRAYER-MEETING OR LODGE.

They initiated one into the lodge last night,—prayer-meeting night, two Mason members absent, one there I know. All lips are sealed except a few who take the Cynosure and in that way try to enlighten the people. But, oh, how slow to learn under the pressure of this secret influence! Like the saloon, secrecy brings blasting and mildew over God's bright heritage. I see it and feel it but am powerless only as I can circulate the Cynosure and the book, "Two Opinions." I put one into the temperance library which was read by some I know, and whenever occasion presents itself I speak out my sentiments sometimes greatly to my hurt, but the Lord is my shield and buckler, the horn of my defence in the maintenance of right against wrong. Every day I pray for the speedy overturning of Satan's kingdom and it must and will be done according to the teachings of Holy Writ. I have no doubt as to the final result and am much encouraged by the advanced and rapidly advancing public sentiment on these two great moral questions, the fall of the lodge power and the liquor traffic, the two giant sins of this great and mighty nation, and the curse of curses the wide world over.—MRS. ANN PALEY, Lanark, Ill.

FROM THE WIFE OF A MASON AND INFIDEL.

Masonry thrives here more than anything else; the society is so wealthy that they are going to build a temple. I have not united with any church here; have been invited to unite with Congregational and the M.E. churches; but there is too much Masonry and formality in them. Since coming to Kansas I have realized in my own heart the words of David, "I am a stranger in the earth." But I do not feel that I am a stranger to the Father and the Son and the blessed Comforter. A majority in this age can accomplish great evil seemingly, but in the age to come what a change will then appear, when their eyes shall be opened to see the evil they have done.—E. H.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON IV.—April 17, 1887.—Joseph and his Father.—Gen. 47:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Honor thy father and thy mother, which is the first commandment with promise.—Eph. 6:2.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Joseph an example of filial affection. vs. 1-7. Joseph is one of those rare characters in whom all the virtues seem to meet. The frankness of Scripture in relating the faults and failings of its noblest character renders more noticeable the absolutely unsullied record of Joseph. It must be remembered also that he passed through the severest possible test to try what was in him—to-day in a dungeon, a slave and supposed criminal—to-morrow the prime minister of Egypt, idolized by a whole people and receiving almost royal honors from the populace. But he comes out of it all the same pure and simple soul as when a shepherd boy, dreaming his strange dreams of future greatness, and too ingenious to see what would have been apparent to a more subtle and secretive nature that it was the part of prudence to hide them in his own bosom. But no gem in his princely diadem shines so bright as the filial affection which he shows for his aged father. As he brings in the old shepherd into the royal presence of Pharaoh, and, what was probably far more trying, before the eyes of proud and supercilious courtiers, he seems conscious of only one feeling,—joy, that he can so honor his aged parent and repay with the devotion of his whole being the one who had loved him so tenderly if not very wisely in the long gone days. Honor to parents is a virtue very dear to the heart of God. Of all the commandments this alone has a promise attached to it, and Paul, urging the duty of obedience on children adds: "for this is well pleasing to the Lord." The universal tribute of admiration which humanity pays to filial love is one of the traces of his divine image. Some tell us that this is an obsolete virtue with American youth. Heaven help our country if this be so. It is the saddest possible omen for America's future. A generation which does not honor parents will have no reverence for what is venerable in its country's institutions. It will turn out neither patriots nor statesmen.

2. Jacob's interview with Pharaoh. vs. 8-12. The morning of Jacob's life was shadowed by the great wrong done his only brother; its noontide had been largely given to the pursuit of gain; its evening was clouded by family troubles. If it be true that we live in deeds not years, well might he say, "few and evil have the days of the years of my life been." He had not attained to the years of his fathers for he had not attained to their virtues. We think we honor the nation's forefathers when we eulogize their memory. But it is a truth often forgotten that they were the reformers of their time. They battled with iniquities that in their day were what the saloon and the lodge are in ours. The Jacobs of these times, good men with weak faith would lay a heavy tax on the one and let the other alone, but so did not the Abrahams of old times. Self-seeking lives are not joyful lives. Faith, courage, self-devotion alone lead to the true Fountain of Youth.

[From the Truth.]

1. Joseph "took some of his brethren, even five men, and presented them unto Pharaoh." We are not told why he took five, but elsewhere we read that "the children of Israel went up by five in a rank out of the land of Egypt;" and to the leaders of the tribes, as they were about to go over Jordan, it was said, "Ye shall pass before your brethren marshaled by five." (Ex. 13:18; Josh. 1:14, margin). Five, therefore, was the symbol of Israel, an earthly people, in battle array. Lev. 26:38; Num. 10:9; Deut. 28:7-10.

2. These five men informed Pharaoh that they were shepherds, as were also their fathers, not being ashamed of a calling that made them unpopular; "for every shepherd is an abomination unto the Egyptians." Gen. 46:34; Zech. 13:7; Luke 2:8-18; John 10:1-16; 15:18, 19; Galatians 1:10.

3. It is still better to see that Joseph, the ruler of the greatest empire of earth, was not ashamed of them, as the Lord Jesus is not ashamed of his believing ones. Heb. 2:11; Matt. 12:48-50; John 20:17; Rom. 8:29.

4. "And Joseph brought in Jacob his father, and set him before Pharaoh; and Jacob blessed Pharaoh," the man of faith rising above the man of earthly distinctions for "without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better." Heb. 7:7; 1 Pet. 2:9; Matt. 11:11; Eccl. 9:4.

5. Jacob's touching testimony to the king reminds us that at best we are pilgrims on the earth, and that our years, even if they could be one hundred and thirty, are few and evil. Job 9:24-26; Ps. 39:4-5; Jas. 4:13, 14; Heb. 13:14; 1 Pet. 2:11.

6. Joseph gave his father and brethren a possession in the land of Egypt, in the best of the land as the king commanded. So Christ gives his people the best. John 10:28; Rom. 8:17; 1 Cor. 3:21-23; 1 Tim. 4:8.

7. And Joseph nourished his father, and his brethren, and all his father's household, with bread, as our Joseph nourishes us. John 6 33-35; Song 5 1; Isa. 55 1; 2 Tim. 3 15-17; 1 Pet. 2 2; Rev. 19 7, 9.

OBITUARY.

DIED on the 18th of March, at Wyoming, N. Y., Mrs. MARTHA SPAULDING OWEN, aged 63 years and one day.

She was the daughter of the late Timothy Spaulding, who was sent by the American Home Missionary Society in 1835 to La Porte, Ind., where he labored as a reformer in slavery, temperance and secret societies, where he died in 1839, from exposure attending an outdoor meeting, in the organization of an anti-slavery society. The family removed East, and Martha was afterward, in 1842, married to E. Owen, and moved directly to Elgin, Ill. She was afterwards with him in the Freedmen's Bureau in the war of secession, and in various pastorates in the State of New York. She was intensely active in life, but could tolerate no shams in religion or society, and was stricken down with paralysis while engaged in household duties, busy to the last, as she often expressed a wish to be.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburg:—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

Daily Appeal, Memphis:—The secret society business has become a craze with the colored people, and one by which they often become the victims of designing knaves.

Wesleyan Methodist:—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever revealed in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston:—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati:—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Catholic Review, New York:—It is becoming apparent that secret, oath-bound societies are, in principle, un-American; are contrary to the whole spirit and meaning of our institutions, and are therefore dangerous to the Republic.

Baptist Weekly, New York:—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository:—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness:—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880:—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880:—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia:—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies. The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago:—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshippers. The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

Samuel Adams:—I am decidedly opposed to all secret societies whatever.

HON. SOLOMON SOUTHWICK, New York:—Freemasonry must and will be banished from the earth, which has drunk so deeply of the blood of her martyrs.

HON. WILLIAM M. EVARTS, at a Yale alumni address, 1873, reported by the Hartford Courant: "He did good work to-day in speaking against the evil effects of secret societies."

HON. TIMOTHY FULLER:—"In a free country no secret societies can be required for the public good. Purposes which require combination and secrecy are just objects of suspicion."

VICTORY BIRDBEYE, Esq.:—Depend upon it, there is a screw loose somewhere! Organizations for purposes undeniably good, don't burrow under ground. They are willing to stand upright upon their merits before an intelligent community.

HON. WM. M. EVARTS, Yale alumni dinner, 1869:—Separate inclosures are found necessary, which they call, not separate pens, but "secret societies." Until Yale College outlives that folly, it will deprive its graduates of a good part of the education that you and I had the happiness to get there.

PATRICK HENRY, in Virginia debates.—Give us at least a plausible apology why Congress should keep its proceedings secret. They may carry on the most wicked and pernicious of schemes under the dark veil of secrecy. The liberties of the people never were and never will be secure when transactions of their rulers may be concealed from them.

JUDGE ENOS T. THROOP, in a sentence pronounced at Oanandaigua, N. Y.:—It is admitted in this case, and stands proved, that Morgan was, by a hypocritical pretense of friendship and charity, and that, too, in the imposing shape of pecuniary relief to a distressed and poverty-bound prisoner, beguiled to intrust himself to one of your number, who seized him as soon as a confederate arrived to his aid, almost at his prison door, and in the night time hurried him into a carriage.

From N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, Feb. 2, 1827.

HON. JOHN C. SPENCER, Sec'y of State, of War, and of the Treasury:—"In one word, I consider Freemasonry in direct hostility to the Government in all cases where it cannot control it—as demoralizing in its very nature, making bad men and citizens of all who adhere to its obligations—creating injurious distinctions in society—giving privileges and advantages to one set of men over others equally meritorious—exercising a most potent influence upon our elections, by secret, and, I fear, corrupt means, and altogether more dangerous to our country and its government than any standing army, however numerous it possibly could be."

DISRAELI, British Premier:—Secret societies are hurrying the civil governments of the world to the brink of a precipice over which law and order will ultimately fall and perish together.

GEORGE WASHINGTON:—Hon. John C. Spencer, in an address before court denied that George Washington was ever a Royal Arch Mason, and he said he had not attended a lodge for twenty years previous to his death, and that he virtually renounced the institution in his Farewell Address.

GOVERNOR SLADE, of Vermont, writes his conviction of Freemasonry, not merely of its uselessness, "but of its pernicious tendency—of its incompatibility with the genius and spirit of our free institutions, and of the duty of all, Masons not excepted, to unite in exterminating it from the country."

JUDGE PLINY MERRICK, Worcester, Mass.—It is true that a Royal Arch companion (to which degree I have been admitted and the highest office of which I have sustained) does swear that he will espouse the cause of a companion when engaged in any difficulty so far as to extricate him from the same whether right or wrong; and that he will keep his secrets inviolable when communicated to him as such, murder and treason not excepted. I know these most odious clauses are part of the obligation of that degree, for I believe that I received that obligation and know that I have so heard it and as high priest of a chapter have so myself administered it to others.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGARY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD.

EDITORS. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1887.

THE N. C. A. BOARD meeting reported in another column, is of greatest interest in that it promises a greater exercise of faith in God and his people. This reform needs to be kept very near the heart of the testifying churches and of every Christian who sees the iniquity of lodge worship. Too many bonds, mortgages and invested funds does not help strengthen such a happy and necessary relation.

THE PRESS ON THE CONGRESS.

Here shall the press the people's rights maintain,
Unawed by influence, uncorrupted by gain. —Barlow.

THE CONSERVATOR:—"The Inter-church Congress met in Chicago, March 30, 1887, in a large, fine hall in the Inter-Ocean building. Attendance at the opening session, large. Christians flowed together in great numbers from various States. The appearance of the men and women indicated character and ability."

THE UNION SIGNAL, organ of the W. C. T. U.:—"A congress of churches met in Chicago last week, to discuss the relation of secret societies to Christianity. It brought together about three hundred Christians, representing sixteen States; a large proportion ministers and educators; no less than eight college presidents among them. Bishop Wright of Oregon gave an admirable paper on the relation of secret societies to the church."

THE INTERIOR (Dr. Gray):—"The original idea was to call out the views of leading men not identified with the N. C. A. It was supposed that such men as Storrs, Crosby, Cook, Talmage and others" (who had endorsed the call with Dr. McCosh), "must be thinking about the subject and had something to say. This idea was abandoned because of the impossibility of gathering the eminent and busy men named, and others like them, into a convention. The congress became a bond of union between United Presbyterians, Covenanters, United Brethren, Free Methodists, Wesleyans, Lutherans, and Friends, with representatives from Congregational and Presbyterian churches. Some of the addresses were fair and judicial, others more impassioned. The demand was made often, and always cheered, that members of secret societies should be excluded from the churches. There is ample knowledge of Masonry legitimately before the public to show that it is a system of religion which offers to bring salvation to the soul without the mediation of Christ. But, there are sound and reliable Christians who are lodge-men, no doubt about that, and, therefore, we would not dis fellowship a man simply because he is a Mason." [Nor would we, but because under labor of love, he refuses to leave what Dr. Gray declares and proves to be "worshipping devils."—ED. CYNOSURE.]

THE BIBLE BANNER:—"The congress was a large body, notable for the dignity and manifest intelligence of its members—cultured men, college presidents and professors, legal men, and ministers of the Gospel. They believed that secret societies and the principles which call them into being are opposed to the work of God as voiced in his church and in the Constitution of free civil government; and we must say, that, so far as we heard, they seemed to give conclusive proof of this, from the philosophy of the matter and from the standard publications of the said secret societies. A fine address is to be sent to all great meetings of the denominations."

THE FREE METHODIST:—"Altogether, the congress marks an epoch in the history of this reform which is important. The delegates were representative men,—men of piety, education and refinement. They were, many of them, men of large heads and large hearts. An inspiration will go forth from this congress which will touch the American church to the remotest part of the Republic. Now, in a wider sense than ever before, will men feel that this is a common cause; that the truth must and will be potent in bringing to naught these systems of anti-Christ, and the glorious day draws near when Christian ministers will cease to worship Baal, while they minister at the altar of Jehovah."

THE CHRISTIAN WORKER (Friends):—"The 'Congress of Churches and Christians' which convened in this city on the 30th and 31st ult. was a meeting of reformers. Those present who were old enough were original Abolitionists, the most prominent of whom was President J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, who was known and honored by the leaders in anti-slavery battles forty years ago. He received a very kind letter from John G. Whittier, which was presented to the convention, expressing his sympathy for the cause which the congress was called to promote, and referring tenderly to the memories of other days. The delegates in the congress were men who are accustomed to study carefully moral questions, and, when they have found the truth, to plant themselves on it without reference to what others may think, or what may be the effect upon their popularity and position. In the old abolition days many in the ranks were Free Thinkers, Spiritualists, Free Lovers, and like ungodly workers, but in this convention there were no such elements. The leaders gave evidence of being men of sterling Christian character, many of them holding positions in the church and in Christian education which were guarantees of their intellectual, moral and religious worth. A deep spiritual influence pervaded the exercises throughout the entire conference. Those who think anti-secret agitators are blind or weak or ignorant or indifferent to truth, should read the addresses when they are published."

FIRE AND HAMMER, by Dea. O. M. Brown, of the First Church, Oberlin, Ohio:—"The first impression that was made upon the mind of the observing beholder was the class of men that composed the congress. It was evident that there was present some of the first-class minds in the land, and that the convention was composed of thinking men. But the most important event of the day was the address of President George, on the 'Relation of the Church to the Lodge.' He showed conclusively that as Christ was the foundation of the church, and that as it was built upon this foundation, and that the lodge was built upon a foundation that had no Christ in it, it having mutilated the Scripture, LEAVING OUT HIS NAME where it occurs in their Scripture initiatories, therefore, it was built upon another foundation than that of Christ. There could be no bond of unity between it and the church. The worship of the lodge is IDOLATRY; while that of the church is the worship of the true God. Therefore, the church should separate herself from all connection with the lodge, and show her disapproval of its idolatrous worship by refusing to fellowship its members."

Space fails to mention the American of Washington; the Free Press of Birmingham, Iowa; the Crank of College Springs, Iowa, whose editor was one of the assistant secretaries, and makes an excellent report, and the Wesleyan Methodist, which was ably represented by Rev. H. A. Day of Michigan.

The Wesleyan editor, Dr. Wardner, takes an exalted view of the congress of which his own excellent speech was an important part; and the Chicago dailies filled columns after columns, in their easy, touch-and-go neutral style, with our proceedings, and thus gave us a recognized standing with the myriad-mouthed American press. The reform has thus passed Bunyan's "Hill of Difficulty," but is still in the "Valley of Conflict." If we read aright the signs of the times, our next great effort must be to save the colored churches of the South from disintegration by the lodge. Shall we meet in New Orleans next winter? If so, say, "Aye," all at once!

THE RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE AND THE "CONGRESS."

The Telescope slurs the name as "high sounding," and says, "It is evident that there are two classes of opponents to secret societies in this country; those who are broad-minded.... and those who are narrow." The first class representing Joseph Cook, Dr. McCosh, etc., will never consent to work in the narrow treadmill line of those who represent the other wing.

Dr. McCosh has read the Cynosure. In the presence, and at the request of its editor he signed a strong endorsement of the congress written by the said editor. March 24, just before the congress met, he wrote a letter to the same person saying, "We effectively put down the Greek-letter secret societies in this college. Since we did this, we have better order, less drinking, and less combination against the Professors." And, closing this just and noble letter, he adds, "You may regard this testimony as my contribution to your most excellent cause."

This letter was published by the Christian Worker, the Cynosure and several dailies. But the Telescope does not notice it, but quotes its author as against us! Surely Christ is "set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be spoken against."

The Telescope was started and is sustained as the organ of "The United Brethren in Christ," and is issued from its printing establishment at Dayton, which published the History of the United Brethren church, 1868. This history, p. 191, contains the following rule, which has not, we believe, been repealed:

"In no way or manner, nor in any sense of the word, shall Freemasonry be approved or tolerated in our church: should any member of our church who may now be a Mason, continue to attend their lodges, or, as a Freemason, take part in their processions, such member, by such act, excludes himself from membership in our church."

When the General Conference adopted this rule, the Brethren church was about one hundred years old, and had near one hundred thousand members, and now the Telescope brands those who wish to live up to that rule as "narrow, exclusive," "tread-mill line," etc. In Deut. 27: 16 it is written, "Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother. And all the people shall say, Amen." But in this editorial the Telescope sets light by 100,000 fathers and mothers of the Brethren church, who were among the best, most spiritual and holy men and women on earth. "Woe to the world because of offenses!"

TESTIMONIAL.

The undersigned take pleasure in certifying to the good effect of a quarterly meeting of the DuPage county Christian Association opposed to secret societies, held in the chapel of Pro-Seminary, Elmhurst, Ill., at which we were present. The discussions were clear, candid and Christian, and we believe the cause of Bible religion and Christian education would be promoted if a meeting of this Christian body could be held in every church and educational institution in DuPage county.

F. J. T. FISCHER, M. D.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman left the Cynosure office for Washington Monday, where he will remain a short time with his family before again taking up the lecture work.

—For the information of some who will be inquiring for the published proceedings of the congress, it may be said that the N. C. A. Board considered the subject, but in an advisory way only, the business belonging properly to the committee appointed by the congress.

—Rev. J. A. Cole, whose presence in Chicago and addresses in the congress and several churches have aroused much interest for his African mission, left the city Monday afternoon for Keepville, Pennsylvania, where he meets the Wesleyan conference for that State.

—Walter Manning, son of David Manning, boot and shoe manufacturer of Worcester, Mass., had a narrow escape at the great fire in Buffalo, from the sixth floor of the "Richmond" hotel, being the last one to escape the flames on that floor, and losing everything save what he had on his person, at the time of the alarm.

—Through some oversight of the enrolling committee, the names of Captain William Wilson and his daughter were not put on the list of the late congress. He was appointed delegate from the First Baptist church of Menomonie, Wisconsin. It was a great pleasure to see this stalwart supporter of this reform once more at a convention of its friends.

—By a misunderstanding the poetry on the passage of the Red Sea by the Israelites on the first page of our last number was credited to Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit. The verses were not unworthy of his pen, but we regret that he was made to appear for the time being as a plagiarist. There is no doubt about the authenticity of the leading article. Our readers will recognize it immediately as having the genuine ring.

—Such letters as the following which are every few days reported at the Cynosure office, are positive evidence that the principles of our reform are widely though often quietly maintained. When the Lord shall turn the captivity of the church again as in the days of Jonathan, there will many a true Israelite come out of his hiding place in Mt. Ephraim to join the pursuit. This letter from New Hampshire says: "I am known throughout my State as a political Prohibitionist, and I am opposed to every evil thing, including Masonry and all secret orders. Although I do not know as I can aid you much, I would like to be kept posted as to a movement which has my heartiest sympathy and so make known to you my address. I would like to see a copy of your ablest organ."

—It has been asked why none of our "elect ladies" were not represented on the programme of the late conference. They would have had an able representative in Miss Flagg had it been possible for her to attend. Among the mothers and sisters who were present and took a deep interest in the meeting we noticed Mrs. John G. Fee, Mrs. C. C. Foote, Mrs. George A. Milton, Mrs. L. N. Stratton, Mrs. A. C. Hand, Mrs. E. A. Cook, Miss Mary A. West, editor of the Signal, Mrs. O. F. Lumry, Mrs. Prof. W. H. Fischer, Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, Mrs. W. I. Phillips, Miss Hurlburt, Lady Principal at Wheaton, Mrs. L. H. Plumb, Mrs. D. Gore, Mrs. O. Barnes and Mrs. B. Loveless. The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Wheaton had two delegates present, Misses Jessie Plumb and Mary E. Cook.

GO FORWARD—THE N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

The meeting of the N. C. A. Board on Saturday morning last was one of the most important meetings held for two years. Pres. L. N. Stratton was in the chair and brethren Hinman, Cole, Phillips, Stoddard and Kellogg were present beside members of the Board. It was voted to pay the amount needed to make up the expenses of the late congress which amounted with some later reported items to some $106. Bro. Gardner agreed to assume $10 of this sum, and $18.50 could be paid in Cynosure subscriptions. General Agent Stoddard reported as trustee of the William Leuty fund, and turned over to the treasury the papers representing the remainder of the fund in his hands amounting to $6,800. Nine semi-annual payments have been made to Mr. Leuty of $300 each, the last one just before his death.

In partial payment of George W. Clark's expenses in the South last winter the further sum of $30 was voted, making in all $55 paid for that purpose.

It was also voted to engage Rev. J. Augustus Cole of Western Africa for a three months' trip with Bro. Hinman after May 15 at $75 per month, he to bear his own expenses. He wishes to visit prior to that date four or five Eastern conferences of the Wesleyan church to further his project of an African mission.

At the suggestion of Bro. Hinman the General Agent was requested to correspond with Francis J. Davidson, now of Plaquemine, Louisiana, with a view to his undertaking colporteur work in that State. Reports from various parties are very commendatory of this brother's zeal and devotion for Christ against the lodge.

A proposition from the Illinois State Executive committee was also favorably received and J. P. Stoddard, H. A. Fischer and L. N. Stratton appointed a committee to complete the arrangement. It is that Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, who is yet engaged by the Illinois State committee, be secured for a wider field. He agrees to care for his own expenses and salary entirely and give one evening in every series of lectures to the ancient heathen systems as developed in Masonry and its off-shoots, provided only he is given the use of a large tent and seating outfit. This will cost perhaps $500, and can be sold at the end of the season if necessary. Large audiences can thus be reached in our towns and smaller cities. All who have examined the details of the plan are pleased with it, and a number have already promised Bro. Arnold to assist in purchasing the outfit.

Rev. Lewis Johnson of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, secretary of the National Convention at Knoxville, Tenn., having at that time offered his services to the N. C. A. as lecturer among the colored churches, the General Agent was instructed to correspond with him about beginning his work in June.

Prof. H. A. Fischer suggested another plan which may bring important results to the reform. It is that prizes of $50 each be offered for the best papers discussing secret societies and the labor question and secret societies and the temperance cause. His plan is to secure a wide competition in our colleges and seminaries, believing that the spread of information which would result among educated young people would many times repay the outlay. C. A. Blanchard, L. N. Stratton and H. A. Fischer were made a committee on this proposition to bring it to perfection.

The Board thus in one meeting has begun the arrangement to increase its agencies in the South by two lecturers and a colporteur, to secure the Arnold exhibition, and to widely extend the lodge discussion among American students. These enterprises will all be an expense. They will not, like a State lecturer, be largely self-supporting in respect to the N. C. A.; and while the funds now available may give them support for a few months or a year, if they are continued and enlarged upon as they should be, friends of Christ who love this cause will have to stand by with their contributions as they have all along with their prayers. This forward step is perhaps one result of the late congress, which has shown us that the reform churches have not lost interest in this work as their more than 150 delegates prove, but will cordially sustain every effort that promises success in breaking the power of the lodge.

REPORT OF THE N. C. A. AGENT FOR THE SOUTH.

TO THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE N. C. A.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I resumed my work as your agent for the South Sept. 1, 1886. Since then I have visited and labored in the District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Kentucky and Illinois. I have, by invitation of their presidents, addressed the students of twenty-four colleges and seminaries, and had in nearly every instance their hearty endorsement and commendation. In but two instances has my request to address college students been denied. I have also addressed more than one hundred congregations in churches and halls. Most, but not all, of these congregations were colored.

In four instances I have addressed meetings of pastors on the subject of the secret lodge system. The meetings were in Charleston, S. C., Augusta and Rome, Ga., and New Orleans, La. A large majority of the colored ministers of the South either are or have been members of secret societies, but almost universally are of the opinion that such societies are an obstacle to the progress and work of the churches, and that they absorb the time, money and attention of the people to the great injury of their pecuniary, moral and religious well-being.

In many instances I have found a cheerful willingness to give up their connection with the orders and use their influence against them, provided they do not have to meet them singly. There is everywhere a recognition of the power of the lodge, and comparatively few are prepared to make independent and open warfare; but there is a very general desire among the colored ministers of all the religious denominations in the South to by some means break the dominion of the lodge system, which is more than any one thing the incubus that hinders their progress. I have found but little difficulty in getting a hearing in the churches, and have had the satisfaction of finding that many ministers and others were convinced and were willing to "renounce the hidden things of dishonesty." I am satisfied that ere long there will be in the South a collapse of the secret lodge system. Their enormous exactions, their arrogance, wastefulness and manifest frauds, like the sale of indulgences in the sixteenth century, and the liquor traffic of to-day, are so grossly inconsistent, not only with Christian principles but public well-being, that sooner or later they must fall.

What has been said is true of the colored, but in a less degree of the white churches and ministry. Because the colored ministers and churches are poor they feel the waste and perversion of means and the consequent result of suffering and want to the pastors. This has wonderfully opened their eyes. As there is more wealth in the white churches they are better able to support both the church and the lodge, so that the evil is to them less obvious though not less real, and will ere long awaken a general protest.

My conviction is that we should follow up our work by the following methods: First, we ought to enlarge the circulation of the Cynosure and other reform literature. This will be found the cheapest method of bringing the truth before the ministers and churches, whether white or colored.

2. The lecture work should be vigorously prosecuted. There are multitudes that have never heard of our reform and who will, but for lectures, remain in utter ignorance of the fact that the objects they have at heart have the sympathy of and the earnest support of others. In numerous instances young men, who five or six years ago, while in college, heard this subject presented by your agent, are now in the ministry and are bearing faithful testimony against the lodge system. In scarcely any case have such students gone into the lodge. If they have done so, it has been only to come out again in disgust.

3. The N. C. Association ought to hold an anniversary next winter in the city of New Orleans, in which representative Christian men, both North and South, should be invited to take part. It is believed that such a convention would secure the sympathy and co-operation of the leading educators of the Southwest, and that the leading colored ministers of that city would gladly attend such a meeting.

And, finally, there ought to be earnest and united prayer that the reviving of the churches in this city and elsewhere may result in opening the eyes of the blind that they may see in all of its enormity the gross wickedness of the secret lodge system, and have the grace to repent.

H. H. HINMAN.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Since I last wrote you, the five gentlemen who compose the new Inter-State Commerce Commission arrived in the city, talked over preliminaries, visited the President, interviewed Secretary Lamar, received their Commissions, took the oath of office, inspected their temporary quarters, took possession of them, elected their chairman, and entered upon their new duties. So, what the country has long been clamoring for is now an accomplished fact. But while the new court will be able to remedy some evils in current transportation methods, it is pretty certain not to do so great an amount of good as is anticipated from it by all sorts of reformers who think that everything can be regulated by law.

The President of the Commission is Judge Cooley, a Michigan Republican. His election was predetermined. It was understood by the other members that the President wanted him to be at the head, and they acquiesced in his choice without discussion, admitting that the judge knew more about law and railroad matters than all the others put together. As the board is now made up and organized (it consists of three Democrats and two Republicans, one of which is chairman), when it fails to satisfy shippers, as it is almost certain to do, the Democratic House can divide the incoming growls with the Republican Senate, and the Democratic majority of the Commission can plead that the work was directed by a Republican chairman. To appoint a majority of Republicans on the Commission would have been a shrewd move on the part of the President, but the next wisest thing was to give the Republican party the management of it and the responsibility attached.

Probably no appointment of President Cleveland's since the fourth of March, 1885, has given more general satisfaction than that of Mr. Fairchild to be Secretary of the Treasury. It is in the direct line, too, of civil service reform—a promotion for real merit. The new Cabinet officer is very popular at the Treasury Department, as is also Judge Maynard, the Second Comptroller, who takes the place of Assistant Secretary. When their promotions were authoritatively announced these two officials were overwhelmed with congratulations. The rush was so great that Mr. Fairchild was forced to ask all callers to desist until a certain hour, when both gentlemen gave themselves up to hand-shaking with the hundreds of employees of the Department.

Mrs. Fairchild, the wife of the new Secretary of the Treasury, and the first lady of the Cabinet, is a quiet, cultivated lady, with retiring and gracious manners, one whom it will be a pleasure to regard as a leader. She is a niece of the late Governor Seymour of New York, and the family, being in mourning, have not gone much into society since they came here. They live in a rather modest house in the fashionable West End, and Mrs. Fairchild remarked that it was not until recently that they had decided to keep it, not knowing but that they would go out of office with Secretary Manning.

Notwithstanding the fact that the marble halls and corridors of the Capitol have been deserted by our lawmakers for a month, the guides about the building are doing a flourishing business. Visitors from all parts of the United States flock there every day by the hundred. Before the Fiftieth Congress begins its executive life, the Capitol and grounds will present a much grander appearance than they have ever before possessed. Great changes for the better are in progress. The amount asked for this purpose was $125,000, but Congress decided that the present condition of the Capitol approaches should be remedied as quickly as possible, and doubled the amount. The $250,000 thus placed at the disposal of the architect will enable him to have the work entirely completed during the summer.

Just beyond the beautiful plaza, which stretches eastward from the Capitol, excavations and preparations are being made for the erection of the new Congressional Library, where the largest and most valuable collection of books in the United States are to be stowed away. There are over 600,000 volumes, and it is commonly said that Mr. Spofford, the librarian of Congress, knows something about the contents of every volume in the library. A Congressman recently said, facetiously, "I don't read books, I read Spofford." If a Senator or Member wants a quotation that is difficult to find or is of obscure origin he goes to Mr. Spofford. If he wants the best authority on any subject, or, indeed, if he wants to learn anything that may be found in any of those thousands of volumes, he goes to the same source.

THE HOME.

NATURE.

"The bubbling brook doth leap when I come by,
Because my feet find measure with its call;
The birds know when the friend they love is nigh,
For I am known to them both great and small;
The flowers that on the lovely hillside grow
Expect me there when spring their bloom has given;
And many a tree and bush my wanderings know,
And e'en the clouds and silent stars of heaven;
For he who with his Maker walks aright
Shall be their lord, as Adam was before;
His ear shall catch each sound with new delight,
Each object wear the dress which then it wore;
And he, as when erect in soul he stood,
Hear from his Father's lips that all is good."

FILTHINESS OF THE FLESH.

BY REV. A. SIMS.

1. What does filthiness of the flesh imply? Evidently the words mean all avoidable or unnecessary uncleanness. It is distinguished from moral uncleanness because it has reference to the physical nature. Filthiness of the flesh is seen in having an unclean skin. It is seen in a head of unclean hair. It is observed in not keeping the teeth regularly cleaned; in allowing the clothing of the person, bedding and house to remain unclean. It also exists in the habit of tobacco using, which defiles the mouth, lungs, teeth, and the whole body. It is seen in the slovenly ways of cooking food.

2. Filthiness of the flesh is strongly condemned. In the same verse that commands us to be purified from "filthiness of the spirit"—which is moral uncleanness—we are also told to "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh." If one is obligatory so is the other. The Bible commands: "Keep thyself pure." We are even required to "abstain from all appearance of evil." We are told also, not only to have "our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience," but also to have "our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. 10: 22. One of the most striking features of Christianity is cleanliness; so much so, that it is commonly remarked: "Cleanliness is next to godliness." Under the Mosaic economy cleanliness was godliness. If some of the sanitary laws imposed upon the Jews were now obligatory, they would not only shame the uncleanness of thousands in Christendom, but they would greatly improve the health of all. Even the pots and vessels of the Jews generally were to be kept scrupulously clean. Does God expect or allow his people, under a more enlightened dispensation, to be less clean now than formerly? Even the Mohammedan religion forbids physical impurity. In their fifth commandment it is said: "Keep thy body clean."

3. The great evils of filthiness of the flesh. (1) It brings a reproach on the cause of Christ. Professors of religion, who indulge in this, present a repulsive appearance to the world, and give many people the idea, that to become religious, is to become slovenly and unclean. The world thus gets an unfavorable and false view of the religion of the Bible, and people are thus hindered in seeking it. We ought to make everything about our lives as attractive as possible, if it can be done without indulging in compromise or pride. The breath of some persons is so offensive, through neglect, that when they labor at the altar, or come near others, people of clean habits turn from them in disgust, thus hindering their success in the work of the Lord. (2) It injures the health. To retain health, it is necessary to be clean in person, in habits of living, in the house, and in all the surroundings. Physical impurity is one of the greatest known causes of disease. When an epidemic is raging unclean people and filthy houses are generally attacked; while those who are cleanly usually escape. A large portion of complaints, ill health, pain, weakness and death in the land, is directly caused by unclean habits of living. About three-fifths of all that people eat and drink is afterwards evaporated through the pores of the skin. Hence, the pores should be kept open by frequent bathtings of the whole body in water. Just contemplate this evaporation, seen and unseen, coming from every pore of the skin, all through the summer months, and sometimes in winter, too—being allowed to accumulate on the skin, and seldom washed off for months, or perhaps years! Many persons wash their hands and faces, but leave all other parts of their bodies unwashed. An examination of their feet, perhaps, would present an unclean sight. By continual neglect, the pores of the skin nearly close; and thus the impure matter, which nature would throw off in this manner, remains in the body, and forms the germs of disease and death. The health of many a family would be greatly improved by a more frequent use of soap and water. Long neglect, however, would require the scrubbing brush to remove uncleanness from some persons. There is poison enough about an old, decayed and neglected tooth to produce instant death, if it were conveyed to the vital parts. Unclean teeth cause diseased stomachs and offensive breath. They should be cleaned every night before retiring. Keep the house, yard, street and alley well swept. Burn all kinds of garbage. After using, rinse thoroughly all dish cloths, towels, etc., and thus avoid, as far as practicable, typhoid and other fevers. If old, abandoned, waste clothing is hanging near the cellar, kitchen, or shed, put it quickly into the stove. Keep the cellar, kitchen, pantry, and elevator as dry and as clean as possible. (3) Lastly, it injures the soul. God speaks of the body in connection with the soul as the temple of the Holy Ghost. Can we, without moral injury, defile that temple? Filthiness of the flesh—both directly and indirectly—injures the soul. 1. It does so in the manner above described, as it violates the revealed will of God, as seen in revelation and in nature. 2. Whatever injures the health of the body, to some extent, also affects the soul. When the body is afflicted with certain diseases the spirits are depressed. There is dullness and languor. Where disease is caused by avoidable filthiness of the flesh, as is often the case, such persons are chargeable with the double sin of injuring both soul and body.

Uxbridge, Ont.

A STORY OF SUABIA.

It lacks thirteen years of being four centuries since there was rejoicing one June day in a house on the southeast border of the Black Forest in Suabia. A little baby boy had come to live in that household. After a time the little boy received the name of Johann, or John as we should call it in our language. In that home, in beautiful Suabia, where the boy could look away at the dense fir trees that cover all the lower portions of the mountains in the Black Forest, and where he could, perhaps, see the snow that covers the summits of the mountains for eight months in the year, Johann Brentz spent the first few years of his life.

He was carefully taught by his parents, for they were religious people, and his father for twenty-four years was Schultheiss, or magistrate, of the little town of Weil, in which their house stood. But, although the parents brought up Johann to be very industrious and conscientious, yet they could not teach him the real truths of religion, for they did not know these themselves, because this was during the time before the Reformation, and Johann's parents still prayed to saints, and did not know that God alone is the one who must be worshipped. But Johann appreciated his good home, and the histories tell us that through all his life he took every opportunity of showing gratitude for having had such parents.

When he was thirteen years old, Johann was sent away to study at the University of Heidelberg, and there he found another boy two years older than himself. This boy was Melancthon, and the two with some friends began to study the Bible. Perhaps the two boys did not then think that one day they would both be teaching the Bible to their countrymen, but, a few years later, Johann went to hear Luther preach, and was so much interested in what was said that he went home and looked into the Bible to see whether such things were true. And when he found that Luther had indeed said only what was in the Bible, then Johann saw and believed the new truth with all his heart. One of the things that he did after this was to go home to his old father and mother with the good news, and one historian tells us that the parents received the news gladly, and Johann "saw them turn to Christ and the simplicity of the Gospel."

But after Johann resolved to spend his life in preaching the Gospel to the people of Suabia, he entered upon long years of persecution for Christ's sake. At one time he and his family only managed to escape from some soldiers, that were sent against the Protestants, by placing all the food in the house on the table and then slipping out the back of the house while the men were eating. Soon after, he and his family had to wander about in the forest on a bitterly cold night in December, and found no shelter till morning, when they took refuge in a little village where they thought the soldiers would not find them.

At another time a man was sent by order of the Emperor, Charles V., to Halle with orders to take Brentz and bring him back either living or dead. When this legate arrived in Halle he found Brentz, and tried to appear very friendly toward him, intending to invite him to his house and capture him there. But Brentz was rather suspicious of a man who showed himself so remarkably friendly on so short an acquaintance, and, at last, the legate began to see that he was accomplishing nothing by his hypocrisy.

So, calling the town council together, the legate told them that he had a message to give them from the king, and that each one of them must swear that he would not tell what the message was. Each man took the oath except one councillor, who, providentially came in late. No one noticed that he did not take the oath, for none of the other members of the council had observed that he was absent at the beginning, and he was with them when they all sat down.

Then the legate, having, as he supposed, taken oath of all present, told them that he had come to take the minister a prisoner, and threatened the town with the anger of the Emperor if the council did not allow Brentz to be seized. But the legate's wicked plan was to be foiled, for the one councillor who had not made the oath could not bear to have Brentz taken away to death—so, taking a card, he wrote on it in Latin: "Fuge, fuge, Brentz, citio, citius, citissimus!" "Flee, flee, Brentz! Quick, quicker, quickest!" and sent it to the minister.

Brentz was sitting at the table when the card was handed to him. He knew in an instant that his life was in danger. He rose from the table and walked out of the house and down the street to the town-gate. But not far from the gate he met the legate, who, not thinking that Brentz knew anything about his intentions, hypocritically spoke to the minister in a very friendly manner, and said: "To-morrow I hope you will come to me to breakfast."

"As the Lord will, for man proposeth, but God disposeth," said Brentz, who knew well what would happen to him if he should accept such an invitation; and, passing on, he left his enemy. Gaining the forest, Brentz hid himself among the thick trees, and there he stayed for several weeks, coming down cautiously at night to see his family in the village, and hurrying off to hide in the forest before day-break.

At last a kind-hearted man, Duke Ulrich, of Wurttemberg, heard of this poor minister and of the persecutions he was enduring, and determined to help him. Duke Ulrich did not dare do this openly, however, so he called his secretary and told him to provide a hiding-place for Brentz, saying, "Do not tell me where you place him or anything about him, so that if the Emperor insists on it I may be able to declare I do not know where he is."

So the secretary hid Brentz in a little valley among the distant hills, and while secreted there Brentz wrote an exposition of the Twenty-third Psalm. And although that little valley where he was hidden might indeed, for anything he knew, prove "the valley of the shadow of death" to Brentz, yet he could say, "I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me."

After a time Brentz seems to have come to the conclusion that he need not hide so secretly, and might go to the city of Stuttgart to live. There many of the people came to know and love the good man who tried to teach the truth to all who were ignorant of it. But after a time Duke Ulrich heard that the Spanish soldiers were coming to Stuttgart to take Brentz.

He called the minister and read him the letter of warning that had been sent by a friend, and then told Brentz that he must find some secure hiding-place once more.

Brentz hardly knew where to go. He took a great loaf of bread and walked out with it into the streets of Stuttgart. As he was passing along through one street he saw a door standing open, and felt, as he afterwards said, as though he heard "an inward voice" saying "Enter that house."

Brentz walked in through the open door, but saw no one. He went up stairs and no one appeared, and so he went on up one flight after another until he had reached the garret, and had seen no one in the house. From the garret he climbed into a sort of loft where hay and timber were kept, and there he crawled on his hands and feet until he got into a corner. And there, not knowing what would become of him, the poor minister made himself up a bed of hay, and waited to see what would happen. No doubt, in the night of anxiety which followed, Brentz prayed to Him who, when on earth, had "not where to lay his head."

The next day the Spanish troops that were sent to take Brentz arrived in Stuttgart. At all of the city gates sentinels were posted to prevent the minister's escape, and then the commander went straight to Duke Ulrich's palace and told him his errand.

Duke Ulrich told the commander the truth that he did not know where Brentz was hidden, and so could not deliver him up. Then the commander gave orders to his soldiers that every house in Stuttgart be searched.

So the Spanish soldiers went through the city, searching houses, opening chests and cupboards, running their lances into beds and opening stables and lofts and tossing about the hay and straw with their swords and spears. All that day, and for other days following, Brentz could hear from his hiding-place the sounds of the troops marching in the streets; and yet he slept on his straw bed and ate of his loaf, and perhaps he said to himself as David did when he was in trouble. "I laid me down and slept; I awaked, for the Lord sustained me. I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people that have set themselves against me round about."

At last it came the turn of the house where Brentz was concealed to be searched. He could hear the clash of arms as the soldiers mounted the stairs and went from one room to another. Poor Brentz, back in his corner in the hay, threw himself on his knees and began to pray.

But, while he was praying he felt a long blade or lance come up through the floor, just between two pieces of wood at his feet. The Spanish soldier beneath was trying to pierce that corner of the loft to find if anything was there. Brentz felt the cold steel, and then the blade was withdrawn, and he heard the command given, "March on, he is not there," and, while Brentz was thanking God for his escape, the Spanish soldiers poured out of the house, convinced that the minister was not near.

And soon Brentz heard the troops marching out of Stuttgart, for the commander had searched so thoroughly that he was sure that Brentz was not in that city. When Brentz felt certain that the Spaniards had gone, he came down in the evening and went to Duke Ulrich and told him of his marvellous escape from his enemies. And the deliverance house where Brentz hid stood for many years afterwards, and was for a while used as a place where Christians met to hold services.

After a time, King Edward VI. of England heard of Brentz and the persecutions he endured on account of his preaching, and King Edward sent him word that he might come to England and find a safe home there. But Brentz could not bear to leave his native country without the word of God. He said, "No, it was at home I first learned to know the Lord Jesus Christ; it was at home I first preached the glad tidings of salvation; it is at home I have suffered for the name of my Saviour, and I hope to serve him at home to the hour of death."

And this hope was realized, for Brentz lived and worked and preached and wrote his Commentary on the Psalms, till he died at the age of seventy-one in that same city of Stuttgart where he had been so wonderfully preserved from the power of his enemies, and of which he might have said in the words of those Psalms of which he was so fond, "Blessed be the Lord; for he hath showed me his marvellous kindness in a strong city."

Brentz begged his people to bury him where his grave might be seen from his old pulpit, and they did as he requested, since he said that he hoped that the sight of his grave would warn those who should preach after him in that place never to say anything contrary to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Martin Luther said of Brentz, that no man expounded the Holy Scriptures so clearly. Brentz was to Suabia what Luther was to Germany, the leader of the Reformation.—M. E. Bamford, in N. Y. Observer.

GIVING BY LITTLES.

The wife of a Presbyterian minister canvassed a part of the parish to obtain pledges from the people to give a specified amount for the conversion of the world. Among other places, she entered a shoemaker's shop and inquired of the old man on the bench if he would be willing to pledge $18.25 a year, in weekly installments, for the salvation of the world. He replied: "Eighteen dollars and twenty-five cents! No, indeed. I seldom have such an amount of money. I would not promise one-half so much." "Would you be willing to give five cents a day, or thirty-five cents each Sabbath, for the cause of Christ?" "Yes, and my wife will give as much more." "I do not wish to play any trick, nor spring any trap on you. If you will multiply five cents by 365 days, it will make just $18.25." "Don't say anything more to me about the $18.25. I am good for five cents a day. Let me take your memorandum." He pledged himself for thirty-five cents a Sabbath. He took the book to his wife, for she took in washing and ironing and so had an income. She cheerfully gave her name for five cents a day. Their daughter was a seamstress, and she wrote her name for four cents a day. Weeks came and months passed, and the shoemaker said: "I enjoy this, for I can give thirty-five cents a week and not feel it. It goes like current expenses; and then amounts to so much more than I ever gave before; it gives me a manly feeling. I feel that I am doing my duty."—The Christian Giver.

HYMN OF THE VAUDOIS MOUNTAINEERS, IN PERSECUTION.

For the strength of the hills, we bless thee,
Our God, our father's God!
Thou hast made thy children mighty
By the touch of the mountain sod.
Thou hast fixed our ark of refuge
Where the spoiler's foot ne'er trod;
For the strength of the hills, we bless thee,
Our God, our father's God!

We are watchers of a heacon
Whose light must never die;
We are guardians of an altar
Under the silence of the sky.
The rocks yield founts of courage,
Struck forth as by thy rod.
For the strength of the hills, we bless thee,
Our God, our father's God!

For the dark, resounding caverns,
Where thy still, small voice is heard;
For the strong pines of the forest,
That by thy breath are stirred;
For the storms, on whose free pinions
Thy spirit walks abroad;
For the strength of the hills, we bless thee,
Our God, our father's God!

The royal eagle darts
On his quarry, from the heights;
And the stag, that knows no master,
Seeketh there his wild delights.
But we, for thy communion,
Have sought the mountain sod.
For the strength of the hills, we bless thee,
Our God, our father's God!

The hammer of the chieftain
Far, far below us waves;
The war horse of the spearman
Cannot reach our lofty caves.
Thy dark clouds wrap the threshold
Of freedom's last abode;
For the strength of the hills, we bless thee,
Our God, our father's God!

For the shadow of thy presence,
Round our camp of rock outspread;
For the stern deities of battle,
Bearing record of the dead;
For the snows, and for the torrents,
For the free heart's hurling sod;
For the strength of the hills, we bless thee,
Our God, our father's God!

TEMPERANCE.

SATAN'S TRADE IN AFRICA.

Rev. J. Augustus Cole, author of interesting works on African secret societies, customs and religion, stopped a short time in England during January, 1887. He remained a week in Liverpool and made a daily memorandum of the shipping returns posted every day in that port as received from Madera, where all vessels bound for West or South African ports from Europe or America stop. During one week these bulletins of the cargos reporting at Madera contained the following amounts of liquor and tobacco. Bro. Cole vouches for the correctness of the list below, as he daily copied it. The valuation is his estimate and may not be strictly correct, but is under rather than above the truth.

THIS IS THE TERRIBLE LIST FOR ONLY ONE WEEK:

960,000 cases of gin.....	£ 240,000
24,000 butts of rum.....	240,000
30,000 cases of brandy.....	90,000
28,000 cases of Irish whisky.....	58,000
800,000 demijohns of rum.....	240,000
36,000 barrels of rum.....	72,000
60,000 hogsheads of tobacco.....	1,800,000
30,000 cases of Old Tom.....	60,000
15,000 barrels of absinthe.....	45,000
800,000 barrels of ale and beer.....	1,600,000
600,000 barrels of claret.....	300,000
500,000 barrels of port wine.....	100,000
40,000 cases of vermouth.....	3,000
1,800,000 boxes of cigars.....	270,000
	£28,116,000
	Equal to $140,000,000

ST. JOHN'S SPEECH IN FARWELL HALL.

[From the Daily Herald report.]

"In view of the fact that we are here to consider a great moral question," began Mr. St. John, "it will be eminently proper that we base what has to be said upon a Scriptural text. Let us take Matthew 18: 7: 'Woe be unto the world because of offenses, for it must needs be that offenses come, but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh.' We may as well supplement this text by saying: 'Woe to the city and the nation by whom the offense comes.' White or black, we have all the same rights, and it is unbecoming of a great nation that we should make faces at each other because of moral views which we hold. We Prohibitionists will adopt anything that will lead us to our desired end. If one wants moral suasion we will bid them God speed, but let those moral suasion fellows let us alone in our attempts to have legal suasion. There is brother Murphy holding big meetings in this hall every day. I am ready to go right into his wagon with him, but when the wagon stops that is no reason why I should fall out with brother Murphy. Neither is there a reason why I should not go on because the wagon stops."

People would claim that prohibition destroyed the industries of a State. Kansas in 1880 had $170,000,000 worth of taxable property. Under prohibition law this was raised to $500,000,000. Within the same length of time the population had increased by 600,000 people, and there was not a brewer, distiller or saloon-keeper in the lot. The population of the penitentiaries had decreased and 2,500 saloon-keepers had been driven out of business. Three thousand miles of railroad had been built under prohibition law, and if to-day an attempt should be made to abolish prohibition that attempt would be voted down by 100,000 majority. "There's Clay county," said Mr. St. John; "Clay county, Missouri, the home of the James brothers. Last year they had not a prisoner in jail nor a criminal case on the docket. Clay county had no saloons. Where is Cook county; enlightened Cook county? Perhaps in a hundred years it will catch up with Clay county, the home of the James brothers."

The 215,000 "soul and life destroying dramshops in the United States, with Uncle Sam as boss saloon-keeper," gave the speaker an opportunity to launch into the Federal Government as holding nine out of every ten shares of the capital embarked in the liquor business. He also condemned the action of the government through Rensselaer Stone, its Chicago Collector, in protecting the Shufeldt and Phoenix distilleries during the Haymarket riot time. Would the government protect a church? No, because the government did not receive 90 cents for every gallon of religion dispensed in the land. At that rate a church could not do better but keep a small still in the basement for cases of emergency. Would the government protect the humble home, the cabin of the widow? No, because the government protected only that which paid, and government did not derive revenue from the small earnings of the widow whose husband died for his country. Perhaps the Collector would permit that poor woman to move into the distillery and stay there till the mob went by. There were two big saloons in the nation's capitol building, and forty-eight different brands of liquor were sold there—a shame and an outrage upon the nation.

Mr. St. John denounced high license in most emphatic terms. "Within five blocks of the Halsted Street Mission," he said, "there are 325 saloons, 159 houses of ill-fame, 100 houses of doubtful repute, 19 theaters, museums, and other places of amusement, and—2 places of worship. How long would it take before the churches are drowned out by high license? The latter, as well as low license, taxation, and bell-punch had been tried, and now there was but one way—to strike down the liquor traffic and get on God's side of the question, and then the homes of this land would be victorious. Did the government talk about high license in stamping out polygamy? Did the government say: One wife free of charge; two wives, $100; three wives, $150; five wives, $250; ten wives, $400; and if a man marries a whole female seminary, $1,000? No; the government said that polygamy must be prohibited, and that settled it."

Intelligent discussion must be the medium through which the truth must come to the minds of the people, in reference to this terrible evil and curse of our land.

The license system has so strangled our virtue and benumbed our conscience, that we are hardly able to discern the signs of the times, or realize how easily we could annihilate the monster evil of liquor-selling from the community.

The drunkard maker takes the most stealthy and efficient means to secure votes as the most effectual way to establish and perpetuate his diabolical business. If we would secure our homes and country from this malignant and deadly foe, we must put forth an energy and vigilance that will overcome his desperation in this field of his choice, viz., at the ballot-box.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Evangelists, Moody and Murphy, conducted a gospel temperance, evangelical service at Farwell Hall Friday afternoon, at which special efforts were put forward to secure the conversion as well as reclamation of those who had signed the pledge, together with those addicted to drink who have not yet taken the first step toward leading a new life. Forty-five rose for prayers, and many signed the pledge at the close of the meeting. The work accomplished by Francis Murphy at Columbia Rink, Milwaukee avenue, has surprised very many of the workers there. The Norwegian and other ministers have joined with the evangelist heartily, and have translated his addresses, with a result that many have signed the pledge, and very many have been led to seek the Saviour. The services held by Mr. Moody for two weeks at Lakeside Rink on the South side have been well attended, and promise as great and blessed results as the work in other parts of the city. He will conduct the noon meeting in Farwell Hall this week. Mr. Sankey went, about April 1st, to Cleveland to aid Dr. Pentecost in the Music Hall meetings.

—The Fifth International Sunday-school Convention will be held at Battery D, in this city, June 1, 2 and 3. It is expected that about two thousand delegates will be in attendance. New York will send 144 delegates, Pennsylvania 120, and the British provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward's Island, New Foundland, Manitoba and British Columbia will be represented by from twelve to twenty-four delegates each.

—A telegram from Constantinople, March 30, says that a mob of Greeks the previous Sunday attacked with stones the residences of America missionaries in Smyrna. The American Legation here asked the Porte to send a man-of-war to Smyrna to protect the missionaries.

—Nearly two thousand women connected with different churches in Brooklyn have formed an auxiliary society with the hope of improving the condition of workingwomen through united Christian effort.

—In the Orthodox Friends church at Haynesville, Ohio—a village of about 800—Elwood Scott, an eminent minister of the Society, has lately closed a series of revival meetings, which resulted in 120 conversions.

—The theological students in Boston University (Methodist) have formed a sort of Salvation Army band, which marches around the streets with a cornet to gather an audience, and then holds services on the street or in a hall.

—The General Term of the Supreme Court in New York city has decided that the Young Men's Christian Association is a religious organization, and as such its property is exempt from taxation. Not long since the Bowery branch was assessed $1,200 for taxes. Payment was refused, and the association was sued for the assessment. The Court sustained the association, and the General Term, on appeal, has sustained it also.

—Twenty-five years of Christian work among the needy and deserving poor of New York city, says the Witness, has convinced the Rev. C. C. Goss that for want of means, and experience, or on account of timidity, they are unable to secure their just and lawful rights. For the benefit of such he has opened a Legal Bureau at the People's Mission, 99 Varick street. One of the special advisers is Judge Noah Davis. This will give many poor wives an opportunity of seeing if there is anything in the Civil Damage act.

—According to the last census, there are 20,938, 626 widows in India. The Hindoo widow is worse off even than when she was a wife. She is not allowed to wear any ornament, and is treated as an outcast and inferior by her husband's family, whom she is compelled to serve. Could the Christian wives and widows of America undertake any nobler work than to aid in sending and also in carrying the Gospel of liberty to these poor enslaved sisters, that their dark path may be made bright by the beams of the Sun of Righteousness, and their sad lives cheered with the hope of eternal glory?—Witness.

—The evangelist F. Schiverea, now laboring with God's help with great success in Hamilton, Canada, is a bold preacher of the truth "who is not," writes a brother to us, "afraid to speak against all kinds of clubs" of which the worst is the secret one. The Hamilton Times describes thus a sermon to men: "His address, which commenced after prayer and reading, was founded upon 'Be strong, therefore, and show yourself a man,' and he proceeded to prove that no lasting strength can be obtained from physical power, mighty intellect or moral worth, as they all completely fail in the hour of need. The only strength to be relied upon is the power of the Almighty, given to those who take the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. After many most striking illustrations, he dwelt fully upon the open and secret vices of young men and married men, and here great applause interrupted him. It was a scathing denunciation in the most passionate tones and manner of the modern vices of society, and when he stopped his rush of language for an instant the people broke out in loud applause and hand-clapping. It is very doubtful whether such a daring Christian speaker has ever appeared in this city. At the close of his address forty or fifty arose to signify their resolve to become Christians."

—A telegram to the Rev. Sam P. Jones at Cincinnati hurried him to the bedside of his co-worker, Small, at Atlanta, Georgia, who is thought to be fatally ill. When Mr. Small left Boston he was suffering with a severe attack of hemorrhoids, which has resulted in blood poisoning, and his physicians despair of his recovery.

—The Evangelical Missionary Society of Basle, Switzerland, has purchased the Baptist missionary settlement on Amba Bay, West Africa, and has surrendered the same to the German authorities in the Cameroons, England consenting.

—A correspondent of the Record says the Lord is greatly blessing the labors of Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan at New Wilmington, Pa. The whole region seems to be stirred up. The churches are packed nightly, and the power of God is present to heal. The evangelists go to Mercer, and possibly thence to Pittsburg.

LITERATURE.

WRITINGS FOR THE AGED. By Mrs. Jane Lee Weiss. Pp. 86. For sale by the author, No. 30 West 15th street, New York.

This is a collection of original poetry written at intervals during many years. There seems to be little reference in their subjects to the aged. One of the longest of these poems bears the title, "Great Men: Peter Cooper, etc.," which is very decidedly prosaic. It begins,

"All down the ages have been sent to us
Men, who were so endowed,
They could not choose, but stand above their race,
And far excel the crowd."

Further on we are told, "Our Washington loomed up without a peer." After he was through looming Napoleon appears, and finally we come to Peter Cooper, and are informed in glowing words:

"To graduate at Cooper Institute,
Is such a guarantee,
That all, who pass its classes, seem assured
Success in life to see."

Mrs. Wiese has a husband who is a Mason, and for his album her bright imagination transcribes a poem to the order. Whether it is fact or fancy that "Masonry has had its birth the universe to rule," and that "It has the world directed through its course;

Of all right action it has been the source,
And great pervading school."

our intelligent readers will be able to judge without further comment. The volume is mechanically a fine piece of work, however.

HOURS WITH THE BIBLE, or the Scriptures in the Light of Modern Discovery and Knowledge. From the Exile to Malachi, completing the Old Testament. By Cunningham Geklie, D.D. Price 60 cts. John B. Alden, New York.

The completion of this great work reviews the pitiable situation of the exiles in Babylon, and is especially interesting and instructive in the account of the vision on the river Chebar, and the remarkable prophecies of Ezekiel and his vision of the future. None can read the chapter on Queen Esther and not rise from the perusal with more exalted conceptions of the heroism and faith of this Jewish maiden. A cursory glance through these books is sufficient to convince one that they are calculated to give him a broader, deeper, truer understanding of Bible men, events and truths, and of the Bible as a whole. Every preacher and teacher should have them in his library; they will be found to be invaluable as helps in Bible exposition. It is indeed a superior work, meriting, beyond question, the high commendations it has already received from many sources. The publisher promises to complete the set by a seventh volume, which will contain an index, and a list of the Bible texts illustrated in the work.

The Century for April is a strong number. It opens with a fine historical and descriptive article on Canterbury Cathedral, the text being by Mrs. M. G. Van Rensselaer and the illustrations by Joseph Pennell. Upon this work Mr. Pennell has been engaged for many months and the illustrations printed in this article on the "Mother Church of England," as Mrs. Van Rensselaer characterizes Canterbury. The "Life of Lincoln" is this month devoted to the Kansas difficulties. Lincoln's opinions and positions in regard to slavery are fully set forth partly in extracts from his speeches. As this article will be of special interest to readers of the Cynosure it is reviewed at length on the editorial pages. Dr. Edward Eggleston continues his series of papers on colonial history by an article on "Church and Meeting House before the Revolution," the illustrations of which include a number of the most curious and representative church buildings of that period. Edward Atkinson, Esq., on "The Margin of Profits," considers the question whether capital is securing an undue share of the joint product of labor and capital. The paper in the war series is this month contributed by General D. H. Hill, and deals with "Chickamauga—the Great Battle of the West." Gen. Hill commanded a Confederate corps in this battle. Gen. Rosecrans lost both the battle and his reputation, while Gen. Thomas emerged from it a hero. The article is written with less ability and more apparent prejudice than usual in the Century war series.

Captain Glazier and His Lake is the title of a second pamphlet on the source of the Mississippi from Ivison, Blakeman and Co. Their interest in the case is partly explained by their extensive interests in the publication of school books, for the accuracy of which they are responsible, and for the truth's sake as well. The pamphlet is quite an exhaustive review of the subject, disproving the claims of Glazier entirely.

The April number of Dr. Pentecost's monthly, Words and Weapons for Christian Workers, reports his resignation and the resolutions of the council over which Dr. R. S. Storrs presided which separated him from the pastorate of the Tompkins Ave. church, Brooklyn. Dr. Pentecost tells of the revival in Norwich, Conn., in which he participated before coming to Cleveland. His editorial on "A Working Church—The Care of the Flock" will be read with profit by many elders. Dr. Pierson's brief but graphic biographical sketches take up Sir Matthew Hale in this number. Few are aware that this most eminent Chief Justice of England was eminent for piety and was the author of religious and devotional works.

The April 1st number of Science has a very interesting article on the "Cruelty of Old Customs," which narrates the efforts of an intelligent and educated native Hindoo woman to separate herself from an ignorant and degraded husband to whom she was married, without her will, when a mere child of eleven years. The conservatism of the natives toward their miserable marriage laws is strikingly set forth.

The English Illustrated Magazine continues in the April number the entertaining sketches of Irish travel under the title "An Unknown Country." The second part of "Our Fishermen" gives a careful sketch of a great British industry. Miss Stoker has a biographical study of the orator Sheridan and Miss Linley as shown by their letters.

A charming article on "Harrow on the Hill," beautifully illustrated, is one of the opening papers in St. Nicholas for April. American boys and girls may learn much of the school day habits of their English cousins from it. "The Drummer on Snow Shoes" is also finely illustrated, telling of the partridge of North America, a bird nearly related to our prairie hen. "The Story of the Merrimack and the Monitor," the first of Gen. Adam Badeau's "War Stories," is one of the prominent features of the number.

Building for April 2nd is in the fullest sense a Church number. There are several full page plans of eight different churches from five well known church architects, suitable for different denominations, together with suggestions for pews, desks and other church fittings. Besides which there are designs for city and country houses which offer excellent suggestions for parsonages. School house architecture will be made the special subject of an early number of Building.

Babyhood for April is particularly interesting and valuable to young mothers and to parents generally. Its leading article, on "Habitual Constipation and its Domestic Management," by Dr. Louis Starr, Professor of Diseases of Children in the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania, is a practical discourse on the causes, relief and prevention of this distressing condition so common among young children. "Sore throats" is discussed by Dr. Jerome Walker, who gives the methods of examining the throat, and its appearance in the several diseases affecting it, as well as the course of treatment to be pursued. Dr. Charles H. May tells graphically all about "Cross-Eyes or Squint" in young children.

The Phrenological Journal and Science of Health for April, opens with a sketch and portrait of Rev. J. Hyatt Smith. "Familiar Talks with Our Young Readers" treats of friendship and inhospitality. "Hereditary and its Limitations," "Primitive people of the Colorado," "Jacob Melton the great backwoods preacher," a strong sketch of a strong man, "Decay of Negro element in Civilization," "Animal Magnetism as a curative force," "Decline of population in rural Massachusetts" are articles that will be read with great interest.

Vick's Magazine for April will be read eagerly by owners of gardens and lawns, as the titles will suggest: "Gardening for Pleasure," "Early Potatoes," "Cultivation in accordance with Nature," "Rearing and Training Tomatoes." The flowers which have especial attention are the Canterbury bell, narcissus, violets, roses, etc.

The thirty-seventh annual catalogue of the University of Rochester, New York, gives a fine presentation of the educational work going on under the charge of President M. B. Anderson. The name of Asael C. Kendrick, professor of Greek, has long been a familiar one to American students. There are 159 students in attendance.

LODGE NOTES.

For a year past Rev. L. W. Brigham, who is chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows, has been engaged in looking after the Universalist churches of this State.

A strike ordered by the Knights of Labor at Hanan & Son's shoe factory in New York has been a failure, only 60 of the 500 men going out. The firm refused to recognize the Knights of Labor committee.

The Grand Chaplain of the Kansas Odd-fellows has been elected Chaplain of the Kansas House of Representatives. The world loves and honors its own.

The New York Herald states that a local assembly of the Knights of Labor has been formed, to be made up of reporters. Every morning paper in the city is represented. How will this affect their work?

The rubber-workers of New Brunswick and Milltown, N. J., threaten to abandon the Knights of Labor if they are not granted a charter for a National trade council.

T. V. Powderly recently refused a salary of $5,000 to act as correspondent for a syndicate of Western papers, and his salary was at once raised by the Knights of Labor from $1,500 to the amount offered by the newspapers.—Inter Ocean.

In answer to a brother, the Detroit Freemason says: "We would say we do not know how many degrees there have been promulgated that are called Masonic, because men have been in that business ever since Adam started that little lodge in the garden and Noah had his in the ark, and Jonah run one in the whale's belly."

The secret circular recently issued by General Master Workman Powderly, calling a special meeting at Harrisburg, was not sent to the representatives of 11,000 Knights, whose headquarters are at Pittsburgh. The omission has caused considerable comment in District Assembly No. 3, at Pittsburgh, since every other section of the State received the circular.

Chevet Pasha has issued an order containing the four following provisions, 1. It is forbidden for the Jesuits to open any new schools in the Ottoman Empire. 2. The Jesuits are not authorized to teach in any schools but those placed under the superintendence of the Turkish authorities. 3. All schools actually directed by the Jesuits are placed under the control of the state. 4. Stringent dispositions will be taken regarding the inspection of these schools.

MASON & HAMILIN PIANOS.—The new mode of piano construction, invented and introduced by Mason & Hamelin in 1882, is an assured success, tested and proved, many of the best judges having pronounced it "the greatest improvement in pianos of the century." By its musical tones of remarkable brightness and purity are obtained, and tuning is required less than one quarter as often as in the old system. An illustrated catalogue, fully explaining the improvements, will be sent free to any address.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that show like molten lava from the pen of the writer. It is a history of the day and painted in strong colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life of triumph, though wicked, but as a life of degradation, death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

HOME AND HEALTH.

FIRST FLOWERS OF SPRING.

How many know that one's own home yard can become a wondrous spectacle long before the shady covert of the woods sends forth the wild bloom? So early as the first of March, or even the last of February, we welcome the dainty snow-drop, modestly drooping its dainty cups, even while the snow lies heaped in shady nooks near at hand. Then the crocus, of various colors, puts forth a plea for recognition. Among the earliest blooming varieties of these bulbs are the small yellow with black stripes, quite unique. Then the large white, pure large yellow, purple, and a novelty among them is a certain red-blooming variety with slender pointed flower cups, distinct from the others. Then comes, almost at the same time, our glory-of-the-snow, a dainty white and blue flower only lately introduced. But chief among these spring beauties, and held as prime favorites, comes the marvelous bloom of a whole forest of scillas. Then, indeed, does summer seem to be upon the way, when the bees are wild with delight, and the blue and white mystery looks up laughingly and demands whether there was ever anything half so sweet or winsome, just at home. Borders of these are very attractive for the garden beds or set in little groups in the midst of the sod upon the lawn, where they do quite as well as elsewhere, and are sure to surprise somebody. They seed themselves, and increase very rapidly, and will bloom all through April and May. It is well worth the trial of flower lovers to invest in these earliest of spring flowers, so easy of culture and so delightful.—H. K. in Vick's Magazine.

PRESERVATION OF EGGS.—The sure and simple method of keeping eggs sound by smearing the shells with raw linseed oil has long been practiced. The oil forms a sort of film over the shell, thereby preventing the two immediate causes of decomposition—evaporation from and penetration of air into the egg. A recent experiment in point deserves notice. A dozen new-laid eggs were rubbed over with linseed oil, applied with the tip of the finger; another dozen were coated in like manner with poppy oil; two or more eggs were left in their natural state. The whole twenty-six were then laid close together, in three rows, on dry sand upon a shelf, where they were left undisturbed. At the end of three months they were weighed, and again at the end of six months, when they were opened. The two eggs left in their natural state, at the end of three months had lost 11 per cent of their weight, and at the end of six months 18 per cent, and were found to be half empty and half the contents rotten. The eggs coated with poppy oil in three months lost 3 per cent, and in six months 4 per cent of their weight. The eggs were still full, and devoid of unpleasant smell. The eggs rubbed over with linseed oil in three months lost 2 per cent, and in six months 3 per cent only of their weight, and when opened were found to be full, with the smell of fresh eggs.

Warm baths will often prevent the most virulent diseases. A person who may be in fear of having received infection of any kind should take a warm bath, suffer perspiration to ensue, and then rub dry. Dress warmly to guard against taking cold. If the system has imbibed any infectious matter, it will be removed by resorting to this process, if done before the infection has had time to spread over the system, and, even if some time has elapsed, the drenching perspiration that may be induced by hot water will be very certain to remove it.

A cheap and easily-applied bronze color may be made on iron work by painting with a thin paint about the color required, and when nearly dry, brushing the articles lightly with bronze powder on a rabbit's foot.

Soap that will remove grease-spots from cloth: Take of powdered fuller's earth one ounce, moisten with spirits of turpentine, add best potash two ounces, and work the whole into a paste with a little soap.

To clean alabaster, soap well, and wash with hot water. If stained, apply fuller's earth, pipe-clay, or whiting for three or four hours, then wash off. If very dirty and stained, first wash with nitric acid diluted with water.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition, and render the character of the teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. O. Doebner, Past Master W. C. No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page, pictorial representations of the lodge-room, chapter and priorat ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general questions written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1835. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of Freemasonry, and Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-Masonic works ever issued. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, civil as well as religious, of Freemasonry. By Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Rev. J. B. Blanchard, of the Mount Union College. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the high Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Oddfellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange," and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James W. Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second-class Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their costs a character, and the efforts for their suppression. By Rev. J. B. Blanchard. Containing the names of prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 5 cents each; per dozen, $5.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc. and the history of the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and convincingly, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Inmate. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Illustrated. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony of the Blue Lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp., 75 cents.

Freemasonry Self-Condemed. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement on reasons why secret order societies are not fellowships, by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness. adverse to Christianity, and inimical to good government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a second Master of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Master-Hab-Bone comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp., $1.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret tenets of the above named lodge, signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or member who will read this work will find arguments. 20 pp., postpaid, 40 cts.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhardt, Indiana, for refusing to accept a reverend Free-mason and his very able defense, presented by Mrs. Lucie C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and MURDER, and OATHS of 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed" by Capt. Wm. Morgan, "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan," "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. W. A. Morgan," "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan," "Times and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees," 304 pages, 50 cents.

In the Collis; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secretism in the various relations of every-day life, and showing how the church, the state, religious, professional and public life are trampled and blighted by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a dialogue, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Oddfellowship (old work)," "Members of the Council." This volume contains over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. The first part of the above work, "Light on Freemasonry," 416 pp., 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Hand-Book of Freemasonry. By E. B. Ryan, Master of Keystone Lodge No. 630, Chicago, gives the correct "standard" work of ritual of Masonry; the proper position of each member of the lodge, order of opening and closing the lodge, dress of candidate, ceremony of initiation, the proper manner of giving the signs, grips, etc., are fully illustrated and explained. First three degrees. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. "TALKS OF CONFRATES" The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Magic, The Washington Address, The Peculiarities of Webster's Denial to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The Uses of Secret Societies, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a republication of Governor Joseph B. Eitzen's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 28, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high and able men who were his opponents, and who were of the highest reputation, considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees known as Adoptive Masonry, including the explanation of the degree of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wise Woman's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 30 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of the lodge, communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 28, 1837, at their special request. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

FARM NOTES.

THE CARE OF LAWNS.—A farmer's wife has given the following hints for the improvement of dooryards and lawns, with her idea as to where the line of decoration should be drawn. Her ideal is a neat, tasty home, and nothing tells so much the character of the people in the home as the dooryard. She would have it neat first. She would not attempt to have it filled up promiscuously with all the shrubs, plants, and bushes which can be found. This soon grows into a thick-et, and there are incongruity and want of harmony and order, which looks as badly as no attempt to do anything. It is not well to attempt to do too much. The tasteful place must be neat, and the grass short and smooth. We cannot, on the farm, afford to keep a man to attend to the cultivation of the flowers and shrubs on the lawn. We must not over-tax the strength of the men or women in the work of caring for the yard and the ornamental features. It should be for recreation. She advised a neat grass plot, a tidy walk, and a relief of forest trees, with a very few or no evergreens. The flower beds and brick set on edge, and such arrangements that at best look well a small part of the year, and offensive most of the time, can well give place to neat, well-kept grass that looks attractive every day of the year. The flowers and roses we must have, but in the side yard and limit them to our means. Too many gay things in a doorway are like too much gaudy dress. It is not in the best taste. The first and last thing necessary is neatness. Whatever is done should be well done.

A few roses and honeysuckles in some nook or corner can be made a thing of beauty at little cost, the flower garden by itself, and rose hedge to screen the front from the back yard, or the ornamental from the business quarters. She had no admiration for great attempts at flower beds and rockeries in conspicuous places in farmer's dooryards. Neatness and simplicity, and not attempt, are to be aimed at in all the surroundings of the farmer of limited means.

The lawn-mower does not cost much, and if the yard is not littered up with too many things, the grass can be cut often, and kept as a beautiful feature at all times. The men, however, want to do everything with horses, and if the lawn is large, the horses can do the work easily; and by a little dressing up after the horse mow, the grass can be kept very neat.

DEPTH OF SOIL FOR ORCHARDS.—Writers treating of the cultivation of orchard ground seldom consider the character of the soil with respect to its depth a matter that cannot be ignored without, in some cases, seriously affecting the success of the orchard. A deep soil invites the roots downward, which, in favorable circumstances, penetrate to a great depth; while shallow soil with an obstinate subsoil, forces the roots to take a lateral direction, running near the surface, and thus exposed to all the changes and severity of the weather; in an open winter the ground freezing to a depth beyond the roots, thus seriously hurting if not killing the trees. There is no doubt that many of the dead trees, and the more numerous dead branches, we meet with, have been thus affected. The plough here cannot be used without harming the roots; hence such an orchard should never be cultivated unless in a very shallow way, which can do but little good; while in deep, loose or loamy soil, the ground may be ploughed the normal depth without any harm, but whether with benefit is not certain, as the roots in the depth find sufficient moisture without the aid of a ground mulch at the surface.

The best orchard I know is upon ground of this character; the plough when used seeming to have little or no effect upon the trees while good crops of beans and potatoes are raised. There never was any manure applied, the ground being deep and rich. On shallow soil manure is indispensable to success, and this furnished as top-dressing every year or two. Such soil should be kept in grass, which serves to a large extent as protection to the soil, sufficient manure being given to furnish plant food for both the grass and the trees. Manure cannot well be spent better than in this way, providing always that the trees receive the necessary attention.—Country Gentleman.

PLOWING DIFFERENT SOILS.—Though

many differ as to deep or shallow plowing, there are some points on which most farmers will agree. For example, wet lands should not be plowed deep until they have been thoroughly drained. Alluvial soils and deep, clay loams, where the surface and subsoils do not materially differ, can scarcely be tilled so deeply. Thin soils, however, should not be plowed below the available plant food. It takes twice as much manure to fertilize the land when it is plowed to a depth of ten inches, as when it is plowed five inches; yet, on the other hand, by plowing only five inches deep, the soil will be exhausted much quicker than when the plowing is ten inches.

STANDARD OF GRAIN MEASURE.—The National Board of Trade, at a late session in Washington, adopted a resolution that a uniform standard of grain measure for the United States and for other countries, especially for such as export or import wheat, should be established and strongly recommended the same. The Central system, current in Liverpool and the Pacific States of this country, representing 100 pounds avoirdupois, was approved and recommended for general adoption by this and other countries as a standard for grain measure.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,
The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,
AND

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

'Tis his failings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Index Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the admiration of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WOOD ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet, comprising a letter written by Mr. Wood, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. Wm. Morgan. The "founder" of the "Anti-Masonic" movement. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his name to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic' excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies'."

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Hope—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, and how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are hurried up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. It is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!
Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

ThurLOW Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-Masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of ThurLOW Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of ThurLOW Weed, and his affidavit.
5. Address of the President and Secretaries of the Convention.
6. Address by J. F. Roy, D.D.
7. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
8. Address on "Christian Fellowship" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "President and Secret Society" by Rev. H. L. Himmans; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

The Christian's Secret

A Happy Life

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and happy experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverently devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive benefit from its perusal."—Religious Telescope.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to advance the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to text."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught on the basis of the views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Secretary of the Treasury has decided that National bank depositors are not required to redeem trade dollars under the recent act.

The acting Secretary of the Treasury has issued a circular to customs officers and Commissioners of Immigration in regard to the enforcement of the act of February 23, 1887, prohibiting the importation of foreign laborers under contract.

The Lighthouse Board is arranging for the improvement of the illumination of the Statue of Liberty on Bedloe's Island, in New York harbor. The light to be placed in the torch will be one of the most powerful fixed lights in the world. It is intended more for the purpose of enhancing the grandeur of the statue than as an aid to navigation.

COUNTRY.

The Senate of New Jersey has passed a bill giving the suffrage to women in school districts.

The Illinois House of Representatives has passed a bill prohibiting the hunting or killing of prairie-chickens, quails or pheasants for the next five years.

The Illinois and Nebraska Legislatures adopted resolutions condemning the policy of the English Government toward Ireland, especially the proposed coercion laws.

The Pennsylvania House of Representatives adopted a resolution protesting against the enactment of the proposed coercion measures for Ireland, and extending sympathy to Gladstone and Parnell and their supporters.

In the Wisconsin Assembly bills were passed prohibiting the printing or circulating of split election tickets unless the heading designates them as such, but permitting voters to erase names on tickets and write in substitutes, also making it a punishable offense to kill birds for millinery purposes, and requiring liquor saloons in country districts to remain closed from 11 P. M. to 6 A. M.

The high license bill was defeated Monday night in the New Jersey Assembly.

A bill has passed the Pennsylvania Senate that the punishment for murder in the first degree may be death by the use of electricity.

Corrected returns of the Chicago city election give John A. Roche, Republican, for Mayor a majority of 28,229 votes. The total prohibition vote was only 378. The socialist vote was 23,000. There was no Democratic ticket and 20,000 voters who had registered did not vote.

Five negroes, accused of having murdered a boy, were lynched by a mob at Yorkville, S. C.

Dr. Nathan M. Thomas, a pioneer who established the first anti-slavery paper in the Northwest and helped to organize the Republican party, died Thursday at Schoolcraft, Mich., aged 84.

An unusually large crop of fruit, especially peaches, will be harvested the coming season in New Jersey.

A hurricane, accompanied by a heavy snow, has raged for twenty hours in the Upper Michigan peninsula. Trains in all directions are delayed.

The New Jersey House bill appropriating $5,000 toward a monument to Ex-Governor George B. McClellan was defeated in the Senate. Senator Triggs, the Republican leader, said General McClellan should not have a monument as a dead Governor while other dead Governors were not so honored. As to McClellan's services in the war he thought his status had not yet been decided.

At a meeting of the joint committee of the Truck Line and General Traffic Association in New York it was agreed to abolish forever the payment of ticket commissions by railway companies to the agents of connecting lines for the sale of passenger tickets.

Jumbo, the great elephant, it will be remembered, was run over and killed by a locomotive on the Grand Trunk Railroad. Suit against the Grand Trunk road is brought by the firm of Barnum & Hutchinson for damages of $100,000, at which figure they place the value of the deceased elephant for show purposes.

The Governor of Texas is being urged to sign the bill which has passed the Legislature suspending forced collection of taxes for the year 1886 on account of the drought. It is feared, however, that he will veto it. There is also an earnest demand for an extra session in case the drought continues so that a bill may be passed suspending tax sales for 1887 as well as 1886. There has been very little rain since September. The extreme dryness of the earth prevents cotton-planting except in the coast counties.

The special Grand Jury of Cook county, which has indicted the bootleggers, has sent a communication to Governor Oglesby suggesting that he make recommendations to the Legislature for the passage of a law embodying payment of county commissioners so that the positions could be taken by competent business men, and containing provisions for the punishment of appointees, employees, or agents who shall accept bribes or connive at giving light weights or short counts of articles purchased for the county. Over 300 indictments were found by the jury against the Cook county bootleggers.

The broken leg of a valuable brood mare, owned by Norman Barnard, of Avondale, Pa., was recently amputated and the animal is said to be doing well. This is the first operation of the kind performed in America.

Stages are being driven regularly across the ice from Menominee to Sturgeon Bay and it is not expected that the ice in Green Bay will break up before the first of May. The third crop of ice—fourteen inches thick—is being harvested.

At Sioux City Thursday John Aensdorf, on trial for killing Rev. Mr. Hadcock, gave his testimony, denying that he committed the murder and contradicting the evidence of Leavitt and "Bismarck." On the cross-examination, however, it was shown that his story, on essential points was contradictory of his sworn statement before the Coroner.

The new Director of Public Safety of Philadelphia has notified the police that they will be held strictly responsible for the enforcement of the gambling, prize fighting, and Sunday liquor selling laws.

FOREIGN.

The Strasburg papers report increased expulsion of French sympathizers and the vigorous prosecution of the searching of houses for compromising documents.

The Belgian Chamber of Deputies has passed, by a vote of 86 to 9, the bill permitting the Free Congo State to issue a lottery loan to the amount of 150,000,000 francs.

The Pope, in view of the Russian government complaints of the hostility of the Catholic clergy in Russia, has instructed the congregation for Ecclesiastical affairs to examine the question of Pan-slavism in relation to the church in order to be able to give instructions to the bishops in Russia without offending the Czar's government.

A heavy landslide occurred at Monte Carlo. Immense masses of rock and earth slid down and blocked the railway and carriage roads. Trains from Cannes and Mentone, well laden with tourists, had marvelous escapes from destruction, getting over the tracks just in time to avoid annihilation. The land fall was so great that it stopped all railway communication with Monte Carlo for twenty-four hours. The landslide was undoubtedly the result of the shocks which the promontory received during the earthquake.

A gigantic naphtha fountain burst Friday at Baku, Russia. Oil, sand, and enormous stones were carried to a height of 300 feet. An extensive petroleum lake has formed in the vicinity.

King's mill dam at Ingersoll, Ont., collapsed Monday morning, the rushing waters sweeping away a tenement house. Four persons were drowned and two are missing.

The Canadian fishery cruiser, Vigilant, chased and fired at an American schooner, which, however, outslaid the cruiser and escaped. The affair occurred off Beaver Harbor, New Brunswick.

THE SECRET ORDERS
OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Joseph Cook, the eminent Boston lecturer, came unexpectedly to Chicago last Thursday morning. He was invited to address the noon meeting by Mr. Moody, and responded in a brief and powerful address. After the meeting he enquired with much interest after the late congress, and desired especially to see one of the addresses in print. Saturday evening he lectured before a crowded audience in the hall of Wheaton College on "Law and Labor; Property and Poverty," an address full of eloquence, genius and power.

The citizens of Chicago have been indulging in unqualified self-congratulation at the defeat of the anarchist-labor ticket, but they only escaped the Scylla of anarchy to fall into the Charybdis of lodge-ry. It appears in the press reports that Mayor Roche is a Freemason and belongs to Washington Chapt'r. The "High Priest" of this chapter is no other than the successor of Edmond Ronayne as master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, the ex-detective Joseph H. Dixon; who, in spite of his Masonic standing was of no use during the Harrison rule, and was a few years since the subject of a white-washing investigation in connection with the County Hospital. This is the man who is to be made chief of police, if the reports are correct. And so we are like to have a lodge-ridden city administration for two years more, with all its possibilities of fraud and dishonor.

The announcement of a new trial for our Chicago dynamiters would hardly be received with more surprise and regret than the report from Sioux City of the disagreement of the jury before which Arensdorf was tried for the murder of Haddock. The case was given to them Saturday afternoon. At noon next day they reported disagreement, but Webster, the foreman, thought the majority might be able to gain over the one who stood out. But the honest farmer O'Connell, arose and expressed so sincerely and frankly and with such determination his convictions of the guilt of Arensdorf, that Judge Lewis saw he could not be shaken and dismissed them. We know something of the character of this jury. Judge Lewis in giving his charge, gave a rebuke to the juror Webster which is perhaps without parallel in the history of courts. It is said that the opinions of the jurors were known before the case closed, and that those of its members who wanted whisky had it in their pockets and drank it during the trial. O'Connell was approached by the friends of Arensdorf with the offer of a bribe, and this attempt may have succeeded better with the rest. The public sentiment underwent a remarkable change during the trial against the accused man. The reasons for this change are given by the Inter-Ocean correspondent: "The amount of perjury committed during this trial would be sufficient to stock a first-class penitentiary. The question to be determined is on which side rests the preponderance of lying, and only a moderate outfit of common sense is needed to decide it. The principal witnesses for the defense have practically impeached themselves. Their testimony taken together forms a crazy-quilt, every patch stamped with falsehood. It is the most incongruous and contradictory mass of stuff ever collected in a single trial. The contradictions are not merely the incidental differences which even the most truthful witnesses may show in their statements of fact, but they touch the essential matters in controversy." For such reasons as these it is evident that wrong has once more triumphed in Sioux City, and her citizens must make another effort to unfasten the fangs of the saloon tiger. They will learn to fight him with red hot irons.

JOHN BROWN'S KANSAS CAMPAIGNS.

BY THE PASTOR OF THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, TABOR, IOWA.*

In order to give a somewhat connected narrative, I will go back and state some things which are stated in the life of Capt. Brown by Redpath, and some things familiar to all, of a general nature.

When the "Border Ruffians" had prevented Northern emigrants from entering Kansas by the way of the Missouri river, a new route by land was opened through Iowa, via Iowa City, Quincy in Adam's county, Red Oak, Tabor, and Civil Bend or Percival, crossing the Missouri river at Nebraska City, and entering the Territory from the north. Dr. Howe, noted for his connection with the Boston Institution for the blind, with some others, first came through by this route from Kansas.

As Tabor in Iowa was near to Kansas, and its people thoroughly in sympathy with the Free State cause, it became a place where supplies were stored and prominent men stopped, such as Dr. Howe, Dr. Cutter, author of Cutter's Physiology, Senator Pomeroy, Col. T. W. Higginson, Capt. Chambray of Indiana, who fell at the taking of Fort Titus, Col. Dickey, Col. Eldridge, of Lawrence Free State Hotel fame, General, afterwards Senator, Jas. H. Lane, Captain Brown, Major Searles, Thaddeus Hyatt, and others.

Captain John Brown went to Kansas in the autumn of 1855. After losses sustained, insults received, abuses endured, murders of neighbors and relatives witnessed, and bloody threats repeatedly heard, he began his active warfare upon the minions of slavery, May 23, 1856. On the 24th A. M. Doyles, father and two sons and others, brutally assailed a Free State man at Sherman's store. The same day they visited the Browns' neighborhood, failed to find the men, insulted the women, and threatened to come next day and kill their husbands. That night following, the three Doyles, Wilkinson and Sherman were slain. The deed was charged upon the Browns, but they denied having a hand in it.

About the end of May, 1856, H. Clay Pate set out from Westport, Mo., with a large force armed and equipped to arrest Capt. Brown. While near Ossawatimie he seized John Brown, Jr., and Jason his brother, chained and drove them before his company, until meeting Capt. Wood of the U. S. dragoons he consigned them to his custody.

*A request for this very interesting account of John Brown's Kansas battles and incidents of his visits to Tabor, Iowa, was sent to Rev. Mr. Todd several months ago, but he never received the letter. Subsequent correspondence with President Brooks of Tabor College informed Mr. Todd of the request and he immediately responded, but too late for the special number of March 31st, to which this would have been a valuable addition. Mr. Todd was for many years pastor of the Congregational church at Tabor, and was, we believe, only some four years ago succeeded by Rev. J. W. Cowan, a former Wheaton student.—ED. CYNOSURE.

On Sunday, June 1st, while Capt. Brown was at church at Prairie City, six of Capt. Pate's men came up on horseback, four of whom Capt. Brown captured. All Sunday night Captains Brown and Shore with their men searched in vain for Capt. Pate, but on returning to Prairie City very early on Monday morning they were informed by two of their scouts that Pate's forces were camped on Black Jack, whither now they directed their march. On the same day, June 2, 1856, the famous fight at Black Jack occurred. At that battle a son-in-law of Capt. Brown was wounded, and in the end of July he set out to take him to Tabor. On the way he met, near the north line of the Territory, Gen. Jas. H. Lane with a company of emigrants. Leaving his son-in-law in the care of his brother, William Thompson, at Tabor, Capt. Brown returned to Topeka with General Lane. This was John Brown's first visit to Tabor, and was, of course, very brief, as he returned immediately to share in the defence of Lawrence, capture of Ft. Titus, skirmishes at Middle Creek and Sugar Creek, and engage in the memorable battle of Osawatimie on the 30 of August, 1856.

Still pursuing with varying success the conquest of Kansas for freedom, Gen. Lane on Saturday, Sep. 13th, 1856, had made arrangements and issued orders for the capture of a log fort at Hickory Point on the next day, when, too late to successfully countermand his orders, he received a copy of Gov. Geary's address to the people of the Territory on his assuming the reins of government, the perusal of which satisfied him of the good intentions of the Governor, and accordingly he at once left the Territory with about fifty mounted men and came to Tabor, Iowa, saying he wished to get out of the way and let the new Governor show his hand. In the latter part of September Capt. Brown with four sons set out for the East via Nebraska City and Tabor; was sick by the way and stopped several weeks at Tabor, reaching Chicago late in the autumn.

He returned to Tabor sometime in the fore part of the summer of 1857 and remained until late in the autumn, until he learned that the fall elections had passed off quietly in Kansas. Soon thereafter Capt. Brown relieved the people of Tabor of all the military stores that had been deposited there months before. These stores included cannon, boxes of muskets, sabres, Sharps's rifles, cartridges, boots and clothing. It was generally understood that Capt. B. was intending to raise and equip a company of 100 mounted men and drive out "Border Ruffians" in case they should meddle with the autumn elections. Col. H. Forbes was here in Tabor with Capt. B. most of the summer and fall of 1857. They seemed to be studying military tactics and practicing shooting at target with Sharps's rifles. A copy of the "Patriotic Volunteer" by Col. Forbes was presented to me, and also Capt. Brown voluntarily gave me a pair of boots as offset to the free storage of army supplies. I had twenty boxes of Sharps's rifles all one winter in my cellar.

We next saw Capt. Brown in Feb., 1859. He came to Tabor with twelve negroes and an escort of six or eight white men, well armed, the latter part of the week and remained over the Sabbath. One of the twelve had been born after they left Missouri, and this they had named John Brown. Capt. B. was entertained at G. B. Gaston's, the originator of all this settlement, and was afflicted with the ague at the time. A note was handed me by Mr. Gaston in Mr. G.'s chirography at the beginning of the Sabbath morning services, which I still retain and of which the following is a true copy:

"John Brown respectfully requests the church at Tabor to offer public thanksgiving to Almighty God in behalf of himself and company, and of their rescued captives in particular, for his gracious preservation of their lives and health and his signal deliverance of all out of the hand of the wicked hitherto. 'Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever.'"

The people of Tabor were eager to know how so many negroes were procured, and on questioning it was ascertained that a raid had been made into Missouri along the Osage river by Capt. Brown and his company; that they divided and part went up one side of the river and part on the other side; that the slaves were forcibly taken, and that in one case the master in reaching for his gun to defend his property they had shot and killed; that they not only took slaves but teams and wagons enough to enable them to travel comfortably, etc.

The propriety of this course was seriously questioned; and to learn the facts from Capt. Brown himself and give him an opportunity to defend his course a public meeting was called on Monday morning. In the meantime a resident of Missouri passing through Tabor stopped, and learning of the meeting concluded to attend. Capt. B. heard that such a person was present, and refused to make any statement unless said person would withdraw. Some thought he ought not to do what he was unwilling to have known and they refused to ask the stranger to withdraw. Capt. B. then withdrew and the meeting drew up and adopted an expression disapproving of the raid into a sister State, with which we are at peace and even to the extent of taking life. This seemed greatly to grieve Capt. Brown, and when he returned to Mr. Gaston's where he had been stopping and suffering from ague, he immediately sought for his armor and examined his weapons to see that all were in proper order, as if distrusting his friends and feeling that they had turned against him. He soon after left Tabor, and we saw him no more.

Wishing you success in unfolding John Brown's life and presenting it truthfully to the world, I am,
Yours respectfully, JOHN TODD.

THE LAST CAMPAIGN BEFORE REBELLION.

REMINISCENCES OF HON. S. C. POMEROY.

With John Brown's death the curtain falls. But the scene came on again in just three days after, for Mason of Virginia moved in the U. S. Senate for a committee of investigation. He wanted to know who were engaged in this "war on Virginia" at Harper's Ferry. Mr. Trumbull moved an amendment to include also the "invasion, seizure and robbery of the arsenal at Liberty, Mo." A long debate followed. It was closed by Ben. Wade who said, "You may treat John Brown as a common malefactor; posterity will not." Twenty-two Senators voted for Trumbull's amendment; thirty-two against it.

Mason's resolution then passed, and the committee was appointed, consisting of Mason, Davis, Colamer, Fitch and Doolittle. Men were summoned from all the Eastern States. But nothing was proven, which was not before known. Some men testified some would not, for generally they knew nothing to tell.

Thaddeus Hyatt of New York appeared as a witness. Though he had nothing to reveal, still he denied their power to compel him to testify: and a most convincing argument to sustain that view was prepared by Judge Sewall and Gov. Andrews of Massachusetts. But all to no purpose. Mr. Hyatt was sent to prison, and remained there from the 12th day of March to the 13th day of June. That day the Senate adjourned, and Mr. Hyatt was set free.

Theodore Parker was summoned also by Senator Mason's committee. But he was on the other side of the Atlantic ocean and could not be reached. But he wrote a glorious letter on the day of Brown's execution. I have been permitted to copy it. He closed by saying: "Fresh scenes of bloodshed will follow this." "But such is my confidence in our institutions I do not fear the final result." "There is a glorious future for America on the other side of the Red Sea." Prophetic words! Written only a few days before his death. America did cross the Red Sea, and all these outrages hastened the crossing, and deepened and reddened the flood tide.

This committee finally reported, "That owing to Brown's remarkable reticence he did not intrust his followers, or any one with his plan." So ended the great farce of investigating John Brown.

Only one year intervened between this and the impending war. I am tracing the steps leading to it, and one followed upon the other in quick succession. As soon as the defeat in Kansas became assured, the slave power became more desperate than ever. And all events transpired to one result. The one success in Kansas stimulated the free States to form plans and to organize their efforts for other victories. The border slave States became the fields for propagating slaves. The more southern States became the market places. The domestic slave trade exceeded by far the foreign slave trade in the period of its greatest prosperity. They were bought and sold even in Washington, the capital of the nation.

There will never be effaced from my own memory the scene I witnessed in 1856, when a Southern member of Congress, to raise money to pay his bills preparatory to leaving Washington, sold at auction the boy who had attended him all through the session. I saw the advertisement and attended the sale. The bidding was spirited. At last he was struck off to the hotel proprietor where he had served. I took that boy to the platform scales and weighed him! To my horror, I found human flesh in Washington brought five dollars and fifty cents a pound! "Great God!" I exclaimed. "Sold for money! Man 'made in the image of God,' 'little lower than the angels,' only—'crowned with glory, honor,' immortality and eternal life—sold at auction, to pay the bills of a dissolute master, for five dollars and fifty cents a pound!" I had opposed slavery before, now I abhorred it.

Yet 30,000 slaves were sold a year (as reported), and brought some thirty millions of dollars. Still there was a growing demand South for slave labor, which stimulated this border State production. As late as 1857, Gov. Adams of South Carolina advocated reopening the foreign slave trade. In his message he said, "restricting the slave trade was a fraud upon us!" And as late as 1859, a Southern commercial convention, at Vicksburg, "recommended reopening of the slave trade, and repeal of the laws making it piracy!" All this on the very eve of emancipation, and only one year before the election of Abraham Lincoln!

Kansas was to be soon admitted, a free State, into the American Union. On the 20th day of February a bill to that effect was before the Senate, and for several days discussed. Mr. Sumner was now there, having resumed his vacant seat, after an absence of four years. The same question was again up that was discussed when Brooks smote him to the floor. All this intervening time he had been in search of life and health. Now, for the first time after his recovery, he rose from his seat and for four hours he held up to view the "Barbarism of Slavery," and set before this nation such a picture of the monster as had never before been drawn. This cast a great darkness over the camps of slavery; but the tents of freedom were lighted. As soon as Mr. Lincoln was elected, all opposition ceased. As Kansas came into the Union four or five other States went out, and the great rebellion was inaugurated.

The proceedings of the previous year seemed to hasten the great revolt of 1861, more than any other ten years before that had done. The year 1860 was the great political year, the last one before the separation. The Democratic party hitherto had dominated for a quarter of a century, and had acquired such a prestige by their supremacy that they could not brook defeat. They were unused to it. This Democratic party, at that time was the home of all the traitors and slave mongers in the country, that had been left this side of perdition, or were awaiting a call to it; and I was always sorry they were not called before they had practiced their arts upon our poor soldiers at Belle Isle, Salisbury and Andersonville!

On the 23d day of May, 1860, this old Democratic party met in the city of Charleston, South Carolina. They were now at home. Charleston was the place of all others for them. When animals are prepared for the slaughter, we want the job done in the best-appointed slaughter-house, so the disagreeable work may be done with neatness and dispatch.

The period of compromises and concessions they saw had passed, and the "slave power," as we had learned to call it, was now master of the situation. Here at the day appointed, every State in the Union was represented. Mr. Douglas of Illinois was an acknowledged leader, and a moving spirit, and seemed to be sufficiently subservient to this power to meet with success. But it was soon found that he had once faltered, once hesitated, once deserted them, in this: the Lecompton struggle! They had lost Kansas through Mr. Douglas. And the man who had failed them once, might again. They would not therefore recognize Mr. Douglas, or have him for their standard-bearer!

Caleb Cushing of Massachusetts was made president of this convention. They might have done worse: they could not have done better. On taking the chair, he congratulated the country that the Democratic party had met. "The great party of the Union, whose proud mission it was to maintain the liberties of the people; to maintain the sacred and reserved rights of the sovereign States!" "To be perpetual sentinels upon the outposts of the Constitution," "to maintain the Union," "to strike down and conquer the branded enemies of the Constitution." All this he said. What a speech!—to be uttered in Charleston; to a Democratic convention, only six months before those same men struck down the Constitution and dissolved the Union!

This convention had a committee on resolutions and several minority reports. The resolution that voiced the sentiments of the majority said, "Congress had no power to abolish slavery in the Territories;" "no power to destroy the rights of slave property by any legislation whatever." At last they "Resolved, that persons and property on the high seas should be protected," meaning the protection of those engaged in the slave trade! Mr. Avery, of North Carolina, who reported these resolutions, said, "We demand of our Northern brethren, on this floor, that what we cherish shall be recognized." He denounced the popular sovereignty doctrine of Mr. Douglas, and said, "Southern men encumbered with slaves cannot compete with the Aid societies of the North." So Mr. Douglas must be laid by. Then the discussion went on, like a pandemonium. At last, after eight hours of struggle, Mr. Cushing cried out, "It is physically impossible for the chair to go on in a contest with six hundred men, as to who will cry the loudest." At last he said, "The chair begs leave to report that he knows of but one remedy for this disorder; that is, for your presiding officer to leave the chair!"

For over two days this was kept up. On the 28th of May, the fifth day of the convention, the scenes were wild, begging all description. On the 30th Ben Butler moved to substitute the old Cincinnati resolution of the four years previous. That was rejected by 105 yeas to 198 nays. Butler was now mad, and said he would "quit." Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Texas, Louisiana, the two Carolinas, all said by written protests they should retire from the convention!

These seceders met in a separate hall at Charleston, chose Mr. Bayard president (father of the present Secretary of State), and after four more days of discussion, adjourned to meet at Richmond on the second Monday of June. The other convention spent time in voting and speaking, but all to no purpose. They finally agreed to adjourn to meet at Baltimore on the 18th of June. During this recess, the same discussions were being had in Congress. When they assembled at Baltimore no change seemed manifest. The same angry words were used. But they voted, and voted, and Mr. Douglas received at last all the votes cast but thirteen, and was declared the nominee. Eight States withdrew before this vote was taken.

The other portion of the Democratic party met in June, elected again Mr. Cushing as presiding officer, and then in due time, nominated John C. Breckenridge of Kentucky for President and Joseph Lane of Oregon for Vice President. So now the great party which had controlled the country for twenty years was divided, separated, and bent upon its own destruction.

The election closed. The peoples' choice was registered on the 6th day of November, 1860. Mr. Seward, though he had been beaten for the nomination, made a most vigorous canvass for Mr. Lincoln. So did Chase, Hale, Adams, Giddings, Sumner, Wade, Stevens, Wilmot, Nye, Wilson and others. There never was before or since such a canvass before the American people. Mr. Lincoln received of the electoral votes, 180; Douglas, 12, (the votes of New Jersey and Missouri); Bell received 39; and Breckenridge, 72. The pro-slavery party carried eleven States only, out of thirty-three voting; but they saw clearly and comprehended the fact that they had lost power and prestige forever. For two generations they had shaped the policy of the government, made Presidents and courts, and even now, after this defeat, they held the Senate, the House and the Supreme Court. But in their madness they retired from chosen seats, and left Mr. Lincoln and his party in complete control.

Thus the Democratic party divided, and was conquered. They did what they could to divide the country. We soon had a "North" and a "South church," and all divisions upon these sectional lines meant the same thing. The conflict then threatened on all sides, and such an one as had no precedent in all the history of our race. They went in for slavery, and for separation, and at last for independence. I remember one time, Mr. Lincoln allowed Col. Jaquess, of the 73d Illinois regiment, to go to Jeff. Davis on a sort of self-constituted mission, and tender him a plan of settlement. Jaquess had great faith he could bring it about. Gen. Garfield and Rosecrans encouraged it also. The terms were:

1. Lay down your arms.
2. Acknowledge and secure the freedom of all your slaves.
3. Resume your places in the Union.
4. You shall have amnesty for all past offences, and pay for all your slaves, emancipated by proclamation!

To this Jeff. Davis replied: "Tell Mr. Lincoln, we are not now fighting for slavery." [This was September, 1863.] "We will have independence or we will have extermination!"

I have tried to trace the steps leading to the Rebellion. Perhaps I need say no more. When Milton finished his "Paradise Lost," he wrote "Paradise Regained." If it was only of equal interest, I would continue and give you my remembrances of reconstruction. But Milton's second work did not equal, I have thought, his first; and mine might not. We will see. I am very truly,

S. C. POMEROY.

BY ELDER N. CALLENDER.

This momentous question will bear repetition and close discussion. That we were a Christian nation in design and in origin, is ably argued and, we may concede, established, by our brother Williams in the Cynosure of February 24. I feel like thanking him for his very excellent article on that subject. "Once in grace always in grace," is presumed to be an orthodox notion; and perhaps it is when applied to persons regenerated by the Holy Spirit. We are not at all inclined to the discussion of this view of the subject here, however. The question is submitted to our brother, whether a nation or a people may not "fall from grace," though born and nurtured in the Christian faith?

This question is by no means submitted for controversy, but for further consideration by any one who will favor us with more light on this phase of the subject. Precision, either for or against, may not be looked for, but surely there is room for a query. A nation that licenses liquor to the expending of at least nine hundreds of millions of dollars annually, and wastes more than double that amount, as a necessary consequence of the traffic; sends from sixty to one hundred thousands annually to the drunkard's grave, yea, and to a drunkard's eternity; a nation that spends six hundred millions of dollars in a body and soul-defiling, yea, despoiling poison weed, and millions more in other ruinous drugs, is that a Christian nation? A nation hoarding up, or, extravagantly spending its thousands of millions of dollars, gotten from the bodies and souls of men, women and children, by the law (?) of the land—can a Christian nation frame laws to debauch and ruin its subjects by the hundred thousand, at an expenditure of a billion a year? It is alleged that the national laws sanction all this, and with how much truth all of us too well know.

Time and space would fail us in telling one-half the truth in this unwelcome and awful indictment of "a nation laden with sins." Think of the tens of thousands of heathen societies chartered by the Government. Nothing is more unchristian in this world than the lodges of this Christian (?) nation, and "they are legion." Does the Christian preponderate over the heathen element in this nation? "Weighed in the balances, are we not found wanting?" God, only, can weigh a nation and execute true judgment.

At what time did Israel cease to be God's people? When that people "crucified the Lord of glory," they cut themselves asunder from God, and became as Cain, a murderous, wandering, fugitive people, no longer God's anointed. Has this nation done a similar deed, and "crucified the Lord afresh and put him to an open shame?"

Self flattery is less safe than self-examination and accusation. An honest look at the leading characters in state and church will not harm us. Think of our halls of legislation converted into moral pest houses. The House of Representatives with its 360 spittoons! Both houses must needs have their places of inspiration to fit them for the responsible work of making laws for 60,000,000 people. Will these men succeed in degrading thousands of soldiers into national paupers? I see the G. A. R. is almost in "death throes" over the President's veto of the "Dependent bill," so-called. May it long enjoy its pangs. No man can feel a deeper regard than I do for the noble and self-sacrificing men, who, under God, fought to save this nation; and for this very reason I do not want to see them degraded by secret clans with sham titles, and by demoralizing pension laws.

It is hard to say whether it is better to be an optimist or a pessimist. Better to be neither, but when "principal men become men of no principle," in a large degree, at least, both in state and church, it becomes all classes to "watch and pray." Think of the great religious bodies called churches, manipulated by the Christless lodges. Are they Christian churches? Think of men, with their profane and lordly, regal and divine titles, leading and ruling the church. Look at the liquor and the lodge-bound press, both religious and secular. Are they Christian? Is this new a Christian nation, or a nation once Christian, now apostatized? Let us have the luminous side of this subject. What are the signs of these times? God help us to see.

THE CONGRESS.

ADDRESS OF REV. E. H. FAIRCHILD, D. D.,

PRESIDENT OF BEREA COLLEGE, KY.

I shall endeavor to speak rationally and mildly on this subject, giving to secret societies all the allowance consistent with truth and a good conscience. For violent denunciation I have little talent and less taste. Though always radical and aggressive by nature and by practice, my speech has no weight beyond the reason of it.

Secret societies are almost innumerable and exceedingly various, but may be divided into two distinct classes, according to their object. 1. Those which exist for a moral and benevolent object. 2. Those which seek special advantages for their members. The "Sons of Temperance" and "Good Templars" are examples of the first class. They were well meant in general, and have embraced many of our best Christian people. The charm of secrecy, it was hoped, would attract many and the secrecy would be convenient for operations requiring concealment. I will only say they always seemed to me unwise. 1. They divided the temperance forces, which was an element of weakness. 2. They created a taste for secrecy, an unamiable disposition;—open-heartedness, frankness, transparency are more excellent—also a taste for regalia, ceremony, show, a weakness which needs no cultivation. 3. They became vestibules to secret orders of the other class, which I regard as evil, viz., those which have for their object special advantages to their members.

If, in speaking of these I seem to have Masonry much in mind it is because it is the oldest, most extensive, and most influential for good or evil.

The objections to these organizations are of two kinds—incidental and fundamental. The chief objections of some are minor objections to others. So great and good a man as Lewis Tappan of New York, when asked for his strongest objection to Masonry, answered, "Tomfoolery." On this I will not dwell: there is enough of it, no doubt, but "tomfoolery" is not essential to the fundamental object of these organizations, and what is tomfoolery to some might be very attractive and impressive to others.

The chief objection of others is their barbarous oaths and penalties. Many of them are abominable, but they are neither essential nor unchangeable. If they were entirely changed, this would not change the essential aim of these organizations.

Others object to them chiefly on account of their false religion, a very serious objection. Such a society aiming to be universal, as it must be to accomplish its object, must have a universal religion, such as all can accept if any at all. Such a religion can not include Christ, for this would exclude the Jews, nor the Bible, nor the Sabbath, nor future rewards and punishments, for this would exclude infidels. It can not reject paganism, nor pantheism, nor polygamy, nor human sacrifices, nor profanity, nor any immorality. Such a religion is a delusion and a snare, or else tends to bring all religion into contempt. To those who have faith in it, it is a delusion and a snare; to those who have not and yet practice it, it brings all religion into contempt. To merely local societies this objection has less force, but if it were entirely removed the essential evil would remain.

My chief objections lie against the fundamental aim of these fraternities. That aim without which they would have no existence. What is that aim? Why is it evil?

1. Their aim is not charity; they are not seeking the poor and afflicted, to relieve them.

2. Nor is it reform, either moral, social or civil.

3. It is not religion. They have religious ceremonies as a means of holding their members together, but are not seeking to promote religion of any kind.

4. It is not good government: they exist equally in all governments without efforts to reform them.

But what is their aim? I will reach it through several illustrations.

1. I asked a young man who had completed his course of study and was going out into the world, why he joined the Masons. He answered, "I thought it would aid me in business and would give me friends wherever I went."

2. An old sailor was converted and sought to join the church but there was objection to him because he was a Mason. I visited him in private and asked him why he joined the Masons. He replied, "I found that some sailors when sick had care and attention which I could not obtain for love or money. I inquired the reason why and found they were Masons. When we stopped at foreign ports, among strangers, some found themselves among friends immediately, while others were avoided. The favored ones were Masons. We were warned by the captain to return to the boat at a certain signal; some returned in haste, others remained behind for another signal but were there in time. They were Masons. I thought if Masons had so many extra favors, I would join them."

3. Two young men of equal qualifications sought positions on the Northwestern R. R. The first was told there was no opening for him. The second the next day received an appointment. The first inquired of his friend how he obtained a position when there was none for himself. He replied, "I am a Mason."

4. At the beginning of the war of the Rebellion a friend of mine was a missionary in the Indian Territory, and sought to return to his home. He was arrested by the rebels as a spy and the prospect was he would be shot. He made the Masonic signal of distress and was released. He published that Masonry saved his life.

5. A surgeon in the army informed me that he saw so much partiality shown to Masons in the treatment of prisoners and in promotions that he determined when he went home on a furlough never to return without becoming a Mason.

6. A friend of mine was sought as a candidate for the legislature of his own State; to be nominated was to be elected, but others sought the nomination and his chance was doubtful. He was told that if he would join the Masons, he would surely be nominated. He joined them and succeeded, but told me it was the meanest thing he ever did.

7. Two rebel generals met in Virginia. One had prisoners chosen by lot for execution, the other, prisoners for exchange. Among those selected for execution were several Masons. They were released and an equal number of those to be exchanged were put in their place. One of the generals published this transaction as evidence of the excellency of Masonry.

8. Years ago, at a wheat-market in Indiana teams were obliged to wait several hours to be unloaded. Far back in a long line of teams was a Mason. He gave a signal, and a servant was sent to lead him a roundabout way to the market. In twenty minutes he was unloaded and on his way home. This was published in a Masonic paper in Louisville as proof of the advantages of Masonry.

9. In the city of Chicago I once met a former pupil. He asked, "Why are you in Oberlin pitching into the Masons so?" I answered, "Because the Masons are pitching into us. Are you a Mason?" He said, "Come with me to the hotel, I want to talk with you." We went to the Briggs House, I think. He said, "I find friends wherever I go. As soon as we have shaken hands we are like brothers. I shall not be able to pay any bills at this hotel. I am treated like a brother." "But," said I, "you are an editor and he expects you to speak a good word for his hotel." He said, "Yes, of course." "Masons," said he, "are true to each other wherever they meet. A man going over the plains to California got separated from his company and fell into the hands of robbers, who stripped him of all he had. He gave the Masonic signal of distress and they returned all they had taken and sent him on his way rejoicing." I said, "If they had been on a jury to try him for robbery or murder I suppose they would have treated him just as well." "Ah," said he, "that is a bad story. I shouldn't have told it."

10. I recently asked a Mason why he joined them. He said he had an idea it was a good thing, and he wanted to see what there was in it. Curiosity seems to have been the chief influence with him. He represents a large class.

These illustrations are sufficient and show that the object of Masonry is to secure special advantages over others equally worthy, in all the relations of life. Partiality in their own favor is the prime object of them all.

Many of these societies may have commenced for social purposes, and some, possibly, for religious ceremonies. They exist now to secure advantage over others of equal claims. There is no other excuse for their existence. If this object were given up they would soon cease to be. To secure this object some things are absolutely essential.

1. Profound secrecy. This is necessary to avoid imposition, and to avoid criticism in their exercise of partiality toward each other.

2. Solemn pledges to maintain secrecy and to faithfully perform their assumed obligations.

3. Severe penalties to secure obedience.

4. Partial interest in each other and partial feelings toward each other. These are promoted by their mutual pledges, by their sense of mutual dependence, by their frequent meetings, and by their secret communications and consultations, to which other neighbors and friends are not welcome.

To all these I have fundamental objections. They cannot be avoided. The object would fail without them.

1. Secrecy. Some secrecy is admissible and wholesome. Lovers may have secrets. Husband and wife may have secrets. Business partners may have a few secrets; but suppose a husband and another woman have secrets or a wife and another man: then how is it? Husbands and wives should have no secrets from each other, unless temporarily for an agreeable surprise. If there were no other objections to secret societies, this would be sufficient to deter me from having any connection with them. But wives often desire that their husbands should be connected with some such society. Yes; for the protection they expect, but there are better ways, more economical, unobjectionable. Suppose half the brothers and sisters of a large family should have secret meetings weekly or monthly from which all others were excluded, and no clue could be obtained as to their object. What would be the effect? Or, if a part of a church should have secret meetings and utterly refuse to communicate their designs to the rest. What suspicions and jealousies and heart-burnings would arise! If a part of a neighborhood has frequent secret meetings and persists in refusing all information as to their object, the result must be suspicion. The question would be raised, "What can be their design? Can any good come of them?" Suppose it should be ascertained that partiality to each other, in business, in politics, in all the relations of life, was their object, would that relieve the dissatisfaction? Such secrecy is wrong, dangerous, mischievous.

2. Pledges to conceal unknown secrets. Every citizen is bound to expose whatever he finds to be injurious to the community and keep himself at liberty so to do. He cannot, otherwise, be a good citizen. A true friend of man and of society cannot, understandingly, take such pledges nor keep them when taken. No man can be morally bound to do evil or to neglect the good. An oath is a promise to act in the fear of God. We cannot promise to steal, to kill, to conceal what ought to be revealed, in the fear of God. Such an oath is a contradiction, a promise to fear God and not to fear him, to reverence him and disobey him. It destroys itself. Those who are ensnared by such oaths should hasten to release themselves, and be free to reveal the truth and the whole truth that men need to know.

3. I object to the penalties to enforce such pledges. One so pledged is a citizen of two governments. One places him under oath to reveal the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth pertaining to violations of the law, and the other to conceal and never reveal certain things bearing upon the welfare of the community. I object to such citizens in the same government with me.

4. I object to all means and aims to promote special interests and special friendships among citizens entitled to equal regard and equal privileges in any community, in the family, in the church, in the college, in the neighborhood or in the universal brotherhood. Those who sustain such special relations are morally disqualified to discharge many of the important duties of citizens. A father, a brother, or any near relative should be excused and is excused from the jury when his near friend is on trial; he is not a competent juror in such a case. He may be honest and fully determined to be impartial but his feelings disqualify him for hearing and weighing testimony in the case. An honorable man would not consent to sit upon a jury in such circumstances. An honorable man would not consent to be tried with a near relative on the jury.

A member of a secret brotherhood, such as I am speaking of, is no better qualified to try his secret brother. A selfish man might be glad of such a jurymen. An honorable man would not accept such an advantage, nor give such an advantage. He would ask to be excused from the jury if a member of his secret brotherhood were on trial, and he is all the more disqualified because the relation is secret and his partiality is unknown. The same is true of a grand jury. Many have escaped indictment who deserved it, and many who have been indicted have received information before the sheriff could reach them. The same is true of the prosecuting attorney. As he is not qualified to prosecute his natural brother, no more is he to prosecute his secret brother. A judge is not morally qualified to try his own brother or son or any near relative, nor a member of his secret brotherhood. I recently read in a Chicago paper of a judge who tried three criminals for the same offense. The judge and one of the criminals were Masons. The Masonic criminal kept making signs to the judge in hope of securing special favor: the other two criminals were imprisoned for a year but the Mason for two years, because, as the judge said, he was a Mason and knew better. The object of the story seemed to be to show that a judge who is a Mason may be impartial toward a brother, but the story is a failure for it is manifest that the judge was influenced by indignation rather than by justice. The same is true of a constable or sheriff. Who would think of sending a sheriff to arrest his own brother. The keeper of a prison or jail has abundant opportunities to exhibit partiality and would be under strong temptation to show special favors to his brothers in a secret fraternity. They are equally disqualified to sit in arbitration where one party is a secret brother. So in all the relations of life; if two school teachers are seeking employment in the same neighborhood and one is a member of a secret society he will be most likely to be chosen if he has a secret brother on the school board. The same partiality is likely to be shown in choosing a preacher and officers of the church.

That this tendency exists is certain. It is idle to deny it, and wrong to ignore it. That it is evil and injurious is too manifest to need discussion. That it interferes with justice in all our courts is a common belief and there is no room for doubt upon the subject. It is inevitable, and would be if all were honest; for honest men are subject to the influence of feeling and interest. But all are not honest and for them such societies are a convenient arrangement for selfishness and dishonesty.

Again, the aim of these societies is inconsistent with true religion. It is antagonistic to and subversive of Christianity. A fundamental principle of true religion is "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This includes all neighbors. The tendency and aim of these secret fraternities is to make distinctions among neighbors whose needs and claims are equal. Such partiality Christianity forbids. The love required by Christ and his apostles is true benevolence, seeking the highest good of all. The principle of these fraternities is to care for those who have agreed to care for them because they are brothers. This spirit is often mistaken for true benevolence and tends to promote a selfish religion. Many do not see it; and it is all the more dangerous and subversive of Christianity because it is insidious and deceiving. It is a system with which Christianity can not combine. We can not show partiality to some and equal love to all. The essential aim of these organizations is wrong. No religion can sanctify it. I have no desire to see the name of Christ associated with it. It would profane that holy name and not even mitigate the wrong.

Many Christians, no doubt, are connected with these societies. So it has been with every national evil. The danger would be less and more easily removed if only sinners were involved. The Christians who are in it think they know better than outsiders the influence it exerts upon them. It is always so. Christians who attend dances and theatres and circuses are sure it does them no harm, but their Christian brothers know far better than they what they lose.

What position should the church take in regard to secret societies? It should be antagonistic to them as to every great evil enveloped in darkness, not easily comprehended, disguised with a halo of glory and beguiling unstable souls. She should "reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." We must not ignore it, we must not fear to combat it, but must expose it and warn our brethren against it, entreating and rebuking with patience and faithfulness. If possible we must save the people from these baleful influences. Should all persons connected with these societies be excluded from the church? I have but one rule on this subject. Treat every sinner as a sinner, and every Christian as a Christian. If I could exclude a Christian from the church for rejecting infant baptism, or for lack of immersion, or for singing uninspired hymns, or for any other error not involving sin, I could reject a Christian for being connected with a secret society.

In some places this subject has been so thoroughly discussed and is so well understood that there is no room for doubt and no cause for delay. In many places not one in a hundred ever heard a lecture or read an article in opposition to these societies. A uniform rule to exclude all who are connected with any such association would be absurd and unjust.

Of secret labor organizations I have time for only a few words.

First. They belong to the class of societies of which I have been speaking and are most emphatic illustrations of the selfishness which pervades them all. They seek not the improvement of the condition of laborers in general, but of their own condition. They are the worst enemies of all laborers outside of their brotherhoods. They often insist that none but union men shall be employed in the same shops with them. In strikes they seek to prevent, by contemptuous language, by threats and violence, all non-union men from accepting the labor which they have left.

Second. By their secret organizations and violent methods of operation they are fast losing what they most need and could easily obtain, the sympathy, counsel and co-operation of the mass of our people. Organizations for intellectual and moral improvement and for concert of action in promoting the welfare of the laboring classes, might be very useful and very popular. But arrangements which shut the public out of their counsels and then suddenly and frequently and recklessly bring damage and disaster on all classes of citizens by sweeping interruptions in production, transportation, trade and travel are rapidly combining the most influential classes of our people against not them but against their measures and their manipulators.

Third. It is a sad spectacle to see the laboring people so deluded as to commit themselves, soul and body, under bonds stronger than withes and cords, to an irresponsible set of men acting in secret, ordering strikes and boycotts, turning thousands of men out of employment for reasons unknown to them or to the sympathizing public, perhaps for no other reason but to make a show of their power, certainly for no better reason than to compel a party to a contract into submission to their dictation. God pitied the Jews who clamored for a king and warned them of their danger. So we should look with compassion upon a people who have committed themselves to a tyranny worse than that of a king or any combination of capital.

Fourth. Remedies for the labor troubles are numerous, and no teacher of political economy can be destitute of ideas upon the subject. But every radical, effective remedy must involve the utter destruction of all those secret combinations which now seem to be the great hope of the mass of laborers who work for wages. For secrecy in these matters there is no occasion and it gives no promise of good.

Few sayings of Jesus have more grand significance than the words, "In secret have I said nothing," and "What ye have heard in the ear in closets that speak ye upon the housetops."

Old Munich and its people.—Sausages and Beer, a beastly drink.—Woman's Rights.—An artist's paradise.—Priestly caricatures true to life.—Religion and Royalty.—Government railways.—Notes of Earth and Air.—A strange legal exemption.—Beggars and beer.

3 SCHWIND STR., MUNICH.

It is a week last Saturday since I got to Munich, and I am glad not to have any further to go this winter. I stayed from Saturday till Tuesday afternoon at a private hotel in the old part of Munich. It was an old building that seemed to have been built on in six or eight different parts. The hall down stairs went through the building into the court behind. Teams drive into it and it looks like the entrance to a lively stable at home. Up stairs it is cold and damp and all the smells from the last century seem to be caged up there. They had four meals a day with a meat supper at half past seven in the evening—but nothing for breakfast except coffee and bread, sometimes cake. The people here seem to live on sausages and beer. Almost every other door there is a sausage shop with its window hung full of sausages of all kinds, large and small, red, white, and nearly black. Some of them are tied up in loops with red ribbons. And every night about six o'clock the street is full of people, about half of whom are carrying a mug of beer. The Bavarians are most all fat and have cheeks of a red-purple hue. They have not a very intelligent look.

Right opposite my window on the other side of the street, there were two women sawing wood all day Saturday. They saw most of it here and we see them everywhere carrying it home on their backs. There are some women whose business is to keep the street railways clean. They march up and down the track with a kind of fork that runs in the groove of the track and takes the mud out. They dress in a man's coat and hat and look very much like men. Mrs. N. told me that the Munich ers give their horses beer, too, after they drink themselves. She says that is what makes them so cross, that they try to bite people who pass by.

There are whole families here who do nothing for a business except pose for the artists. They only get 37½ cents for three hours and a half. In Boston we used to pay never less than 25 cents an hour, and often 40 or 50. These models sit perfectly still always and never expect to be talked to or entertained in any way. It is quite a different matter from working from all kinds of people who must be amused all the time and never were in the least quiet.

The night before Christmas we went with a Mr. and Mrs. Maxfield to hear the music in the "Hof-Rapelle" at midnight. It is a service (high mass) that is always held there Christmas eve. The music was very fine, and the performance of the priests was something like a circus, I should imagine. Every one of them had the beer-barrel aspect that is almost universal here. Only one looked intelligent, and he was the young priest who did all the carrying about of candles and vestments for the others. The rest were precisely like those pictures of priests drinking wine, etc., that we see painted here and in Rome. It is easy enough to see where the artists found their models.

Three Sundays now I have been at the English church, but it does not seem very homelike. It is very high church and there is a great deal of ceremony. Perhaps I will like the Lutheran German better, but I am almost afraid to go there to sit in the cold all church time. There is a Wesleyan Methodist church somewhere if I can only find it. Nobody knows where it is nor whether it is German or English. The English church where I have been and the Greek church are the only ones warmed here. All the Catholic churches are cold and have stone pavement.

I forgot to say that I have seen considerable "royalty" already. The Prince Regent and Princess Therese sat quite near us in the Court Chapel Christmas eve. A great piece of pomposity dressed in uniform stood guard over the Prince and never moved a muscle during the service. When it was over he and the dozen priests all made elaborate bows towards the Prince Regent, as they did also when they came in. Yesterday I met Prince Alfons in the street and all the people around bowed and looked like so many petrified statues till he was gone.

Since I wrote to you the last time we have had a hard snow storm so that the mails were blocked up for a week, but now the tracks are open again. They say there is much snow here but it never stays long at a time. To-day is the "coldest day we have had yet, and the people here think it is very cold, though it is not down to zero and there is no wind. The air is nearly always so damp in Munich that after the sun goes down we can see the mist rising from the ground in every open square or park. The church spires two or three blocks away never look distinct as they do at home, but blue and hazy. All the water is so hard that as soon as it is boiled there is a coating of lime over the dish and top of the water. Nobody thinks of drinking it much unless it is boiled. A white pitcher filled with it will look a very blue-green at the bottom. This may be one reason why everybody drinks beer. The earth too has lime enough in it to make it look white, and if any of the mud from the street stays on a dress or any clothing long it eats the color out and leaves the cloth itself ready to tear away at the first strain. It flies and spatters about worse than our mud at home.

Everything has to be done here by law. The faucets in the whole city are made by one pattern, and every one of them leaks a stream continually, but if any one puts on a good one instead, he is fined 30 marks ($7.50) and made to change back to the old kind. Some officers walk in every once in a while, without knocking if they can, and look at every stove in the house, to see if it is safe. If anything is left on or near a stove that can possibly take fire, the owner is fined. Every German family has a dog, and every dog in Munich must be brought to a certain place to be examined twice a year. If they find anything unhealthy about one he never goes out of that place alive. The children dread to have the "dog-day" come.

Priests, beer and fleas seem to be the only things that are not regulated by law. They are free to go everywhere, and they do.

New Year's day Prof. Jakobides was here to dinner. That is all the celebration we had except that about twice as many beggars as usual rung the door bell and asked for a "bisle." It seems as if half the people are beggars. Nearly everybody will give them two pennies (half a cent) and for twelve pennies they get a pint of beer and a piece of bread. They sit in a beer house all the afternoon and start out again to beg their supper, after which they sit in a beer hall some more. Nobody knows where they sleep.

—Rev. J. N. Bedford of the Independent church at Lindenwood, Ill., passing through this city on his way to the Wesleyan conferences in the East, called at the Cynosure office for the first time. Bro. Bedford was a delegate from his church to the late Christian congress.

—The Lumbermen's evangelist, William F. Davis, came down from the pines to Chicago, February 22, to attend the Christian congress, not having learned of the change of time. He went on to Bay Port, Michigan, where he had engaged to discuss the character of Mormonism with a disciple of Jo. Smith. He was well prepared to show the harmonious relation of that infamous system with the lodge, and had unusual evidence that his views were correct when the zealous devotees of the twin evils brought two rails to the house the second evening to use upon the lecturer. But God suffered them not to accomplish their purpose.

—Rev. Henry Cogswell, well remembered by many of our Ohio readers, is now pastor in Fairfield, Iowa. He finds in that part of Iowa some strong sympathizers with the efforts of Christian people against the secret orders. He writes very cheerfully of his pastoral work.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

"ROMISH RAGS."

Long before this article will appear in print Easter will be forgotten in the minds of the masses. Easter flowers will have long been withered, and eggs digested. The pageantry and decoration of the day only will be remembered. It were better that the day be forgotten and the event alone remembered. Instead, the event is unheeded and the day cherished. The spectacular observance of Easter in this city, by Protestant churches as well as Roman, was virtually theatrical, and has been so for many years. The crowds were attracted to the Easter services for exactly the same reasons they were to the theaters the next day—for entertainment—gratification of the sensual in their nature. The day has been made a holy day by Rome, and Protestants in general have adopted it. God has ordained one holy day—the Sabbath, and no other. We are cautioned by the great apostle against observing holy days.

Some will plead that as Easter always comes on Sunday, no special day is set apart—the Sabbath is also kept. Easter Sunday is observed by the class I speak of pre-eminently as Easter Sunday, secondarily as the Sabbath, thus robbing the day of its oneness. The first Sunday after Good Friday is, first and foremost, Easter Sunday; the Sabbath is continued on the following Sunday. I do not infer by this that the Sabbath is willfully broken, but that the day is not observed as such. Its time is usurped by the observance of a Scripturally unordained and unrecognized anniversary, thus literally causing it to be neglected.

Some may consider this as "straining out a gnat and swallowing a camel." In this case if that is so, I would simply say, the gnat is monstrously large and the camel exceedingly small. The writer would be the last to prevent the world honoring our risen Lord, for he is worthy of all honor, but I believe that in the majority of cases the manner, the spirit in which this so-called honor is offered, is, according to the Word, an abomination in his sight. It seems as though the church, like Cain, insists upon bringing sacrifices before God in which he takes no pleasure. "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth," not in flowers and eggs, etc. The average churchman will as ardently defend the observance of these things as the most ignorant Catholic. If this statement is doubted, it can be easily tested. Bishop McNamara said truly that Protestantism has not yet divested itself of Romish rags. It has many slips from the papal plant which have taken root so deeply that it will require a Luther, or a Zwingle to eradicate them.

One only needs to walk along our mercantile streets to understand the reason why the merchants of the earth will mourn over the fall of Babylon the great, the city situated on the seven hills—Rome. "And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more. The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, and cinnamon, and odors, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men." Rev. 18: 11-13.

Such is the prophecy pronounced against Rome—the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her. Is it to be wondered at since she has created for them a market for the sale of so large an amount of sundry unnecessary merchandise? In regard to Easter, the merchants of these days are getting rich on pictorial mottoes (some outrageously punnish caricatures of a most sacred event), flowers, and real or artificial eggs. And their patronage does not come from Rome's dupes only, but from Protestant imitators; even from Puritan Bostonians and New Englanders.

We smile as the illiterate papist applies his holy water, counts his beads, and hangs his agnus dei about his submissive neck, but decorate our altars with emblems, and load our tables with eggs, the conception of which, as religious testimonials, emanated from apostate Rome. Enlightened as we claim to be, the poor Catholic has a better right to laugh.

Genuine appreciation of our Lord's resurrection must be of a spiritual nature, not material. The flowers laid upon his altar must be spiritual—faith and sanctification. The odor of any other is obnoxious to him. D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

APRIL 13, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—On last Sabbath morning I preached in the Morning Sun, O., United Presbyterian church, Rev. R. H. Hume, pastor. This is a strong congregation, made up of the Reformed Presbyterian congregation to which Rev. Gavin McMillan ministered, and the U. P. congregation. They quite fill up their large church. At 4 p. m. I preached in the U. P. church of College Corner, Rev. R. C. Finney, pastor. The student from Lane Seminary who is supplying the Presbyterian pulpit of that place was present and some of his members, as also a few of the Methodists. In the evening I preached in the Oxford M. E. church, Rev. S. A. Brewster, pastor. This was a union service. Rev. J. H. Nesbit, pastor of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. H. A. McDonald, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, were there with their congregations. Rev. Faye Walker was also there with his school. It was a grand audience.

On Saturday I went over the campus of the old Miami University. There are some fifty acres in it. It is certainly an attractive place. The buildings have been repaired so as to be quite as good as new. The chapel put up by Dr. Stanton is a perfect beauty. I have not seen its superior in any college. There are memorial windows to the several presidents: R. H. Bishop, 1824-1841; George Junkin, 1841-1844; E. D. McMaster, 1845-1849; W. C. Anderson, 1849-1854; J. W. Hall, 1854-1866; R. L. Stanton, 1866-1871. The college was closed for twelve years. In that time the income funds accumulated to the amount of $50,000. President McFarland, the present incumbent, has a faculty of seven professors and between sixty and one hundred students. Beyond this about half a mile is the Western Female Seminary in charge of Miss Peabody. There are 175 ladies in attendance. It is run on the Holyoke plan, and is eminently successful. Oxford has a population of 2,000. It is a place of beautiful homes and is as near paradise as one gets here.

On Monday afternoon the Evangelical Alliance discussed "Church Union." Rev. Dudley W. Rhodes, of the Protestant Episcopal church, led off in a speech of fifteen minutes. He maintained that all were agreed in three points in the letter issued by the house of Bishops, the Scriptures, the two sacraments and the Nicene Creed. As the historic episcopate, that had been maintained from the first to the sixteenth centuries, Calvin and the reformers wanted to take orders from the episcopate and were not permitted. Now the episcopate proposes to give them orders and they will not take them. Prof. John De Witt of Lane Seminary answered that Presbyterians, Methodists, and other bodies proposed reciprocity, interchange of pulpits, as a means of union. This the Episcopalians will not do. Should we accept of their proposal it would be virtually saying our ordination for three hundred years had not been valid. The discussion was dignified, courteous and good-natured throughout. It did good.

The Cincinnati Presbytery of the Presbyterian church met Monday evening in the Second church, Rev. Geo. P. Hays, D. D., pastor. Rev. W. S. Acomb of Loveland, retiring moderator, preached the opening sermon. Rev. A. M. Dawson, of Lockland, was chosen moderator. They had two morning, two afternoon and two evening sessions. There are sixty ministers in this presbytery. They are crowded with business. They gave me ten minutes, by a unanimous vote, to present the claims of the National Reform Association. Eight years ago they gave five minutes for the same purpose. There is progress. They are to be commended for turning aside in the press of business to give a hearing. We go about preaching National Reform. But to get it put into practice is quite another matter. Shakespeare in "Merchant of Venice" makes Portia say: "If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches and poor men's cottages princes' palaces." J. M. FOSTER.

SENATOR POMEROY, JOHN BROWN AND DR. JOHN DOY.

AN ERROR CORRECTED.

DETROIT, April 9, 1887.

In his article on John Brown in the Cynosure of March 31, 1887, Hon. S. C. Pomeroy says, "John Day was a citizen of Kansas, imprisoned at St. Joseph, Mo., upon the charge of running away slaves from Platte county, Mo., to Lawrence, Kas. John Brown and others visited him in prison, and at mid-day the doors of the jail opened, in a city of ten thousand inhabitants, and Day followed his friends down to the bank of the river into a small boat and was soon ferried over to a State whose laws made his offence no crime! John Brown remained with the jailer, to keep the peace, and prevent others from escaping," etc.

Friend Pomeroy has in some way fallen into an error in giving the above account. It was not "John Day" who was in jail in Missouri for the offence charged, but Dr. John Doy, formerly of Rochester, N. Y.; nor was he rescued by John Brown, but by his own son, John Doy, who took with him twelve stalwart comrades, and, crossing over the river in a dark night, rescued his father.

I was well acquainted with Dr. John Doy, both before and after the Kansas troubles; and while holding great meetings with him in New York and New England, have heard him relate before large audiences hundreds of times the facts and incidents connected with this episode as given below:

About the time of the breaking out of the border-ruffian war in Kansas, Dr. John Doy removed to that Territory from Rochester, N. Y. He was an ardent anti-slavery man, and while in Kansas he assisted many fugitives who were escaping from Missouri into Kansas to secure hiding places, thereby incurring the hatred of the border-ruffians of Missouri. On one occasion John Doy had taken a number of fugitives into his carriage, and was assisting them to escape into the interior. He was watched, waylaid, kidnapped, and bound by a band of border ruffians, and taken over into Missouri, where he went through a farcical examination, in the meantime being incarcerated in a close iron box, where he could neither stand up nor straighten out. After a form of trial was had he was sentenced to fifteen years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Just before Doy was to have been removed to the penitentiary his son, with a few chosen companions, crossed the river in a boat one dark and stormy night with a determination to rescue the prisoner. Leaving two or three of his companions to watch the boat, young Doy and the others proceeded to the jail, one of them personating a horse-thief, being bound with a rope. The party quietly surrounded the jail, and Doy and his "prisoner" approached and knocked at the door, which was opened by the jailer, to whom Doy stated that he had a horse-thief whom he wanted to have locked in a cell until morning; that they had been after him all day and had just caught him, and were very tired. The jailer readily admitted Mr. Doy and his "horse-thief," and as he took him through the hall to place him in a certain cell, they came to the door of Dr. John Doy's cell. They halted, and in a moment the disguises were thrown off, the rope was cast loose from the "horse-thief," and two pistols were leveled at the head of the jailer, one in the hands of Doy, and the other in that of his "prisoner." "Now," said young Doy, "what I want is my father, who lies in that cell. Unbar this door, take off his shackles, and bring him out and deliver him to us, or you are a dead man." The door was instantly unbolted, the shackles removed from his father's wrists, and he was taken out and delivered to young Doy and his men. "Now," said the fearless young leader, "I have a body of men with me to guard this prison until morning. Never one of you peep, or stick your heads out of this building until morning, or you are dead men." They then all went to the river's edge, got into their boat, and arrived safely in Kansas, leaving the doctor at his home.

Not feeling safe to remain in Kansas, and having borrowed some money to help him through these troubles, he went back to western New York where George W. Clark, who was acquainted with him before he went to Kansas and knew of his course while in that Territory, took him and traveled with him through western New York, then to Boston and through New England, holding meetings, where he related his experiences and raised money enough to pay the debts thus incurred, and to bring his family out of Kansas.

While in New England and on the morning following the close of their meetings in Old Concord, they were at the depot, waiting for a train to Boston, when the doctor obtained a copy of the Boston

Morning Journal and in it he saw for the first time the news of the massacre of his son John, who had so nobly rescued his father from prison. His father had urged him to leave Kansas, but the boy was fearless and determined to stand his ground. Some border ruffians ascertained where he was, crossed the river in the night, surrounded the house, and as young Doy sprang out, making for a little ravine near by, they fired, riddling him with bullets.

Dr. Doy afterwards removed to Battle Creek, Mich., with his family and died a few years ago. I visited his widow last year who was then still living at Battle Creek.

GEO. W. CLARK.

LODGE WORSHIP ON EASTER.

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 11, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—About sixty Knight Templars occupied the front seats of the First M. E. church of this city yesterday while the pastor, Rev. Dr. S. G. Smith, officiated as prelate. The services were conducted according to the ritual prepared for the occasion by the Masons. It contains the Ten Commandments, the Apostles' Creed, etc. As the First and Second Commandments were said and responded to by the Masons, saying, "Lord, have mercy upon us, and incline us to keep this law," one could not help thinking of their lodge symbol of a false god, and the heathen rites and ceremonies of sun-worship practiced in modern Masonic lodges, and how loathsome that worship is to God and his true people. And when the Commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," was said, and the Masons responded to it, "Lord, have mercy upon us, and help us to keep this law," it brought to mind the murder of Morgan and others, and the bloody murder penalties of the order.

The proud solemnity and grotesque vanity of these Masons may be accounted for in the fact that they are taught to believe that they are the conservators of the true religion, and that Moses and Jesus Christ got the religion of the Bible from the ancient mysteries, which mysteries they continue to practice in secret in their lodges. (See charge to the candidate for the degree they call "Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret," in the "Manual of Ancient, Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry," by Will Cunningham, edition of 1867, and notice what that "royal secret" is, for confirmation of the above statement.)

The pastor, or prelate, delivered an oration on the resurrection of Christ, which resurrection he wanted us to accept as a fact. He said nothing about the principles of his Freemasonry. Had he quoted his own distinguished Masonic historian, he might have told us as follows: "Now what is the result of this examination? That the disciples of Christ have surrounded his birth, life, and death with miracles which never took place, but which are, rather, symbolized under solar appearances. . . . In a word, that the Christian religion came out from the mysteries of initiation."—Reboid's Hist. of Freemasonry, p. 418.

How then could Dr. Smith expect his brother Masons to accept of the resurrection of Christ as a fact? Will the Dr. repudiate his Masonic historian? Then he must repudiate Masonry, for Reboid's History of Freemasonry has the sanction of the highest Masonic authority; and, besides, the rites and ceremonies practiced now in the Masonic lodges agree with what Reboid says in this particular.

My spirit was stirred to write the above for the Cynosure after reading that editorial in the Interior of the 7th inst., so misleading in a matter of such vital import to the eternal condition of the human family.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Death of Joseph the beginning of Israel's Trials. vs. 6. Well might the children of Israel weep thirty days for Moses, and devout men carry Stephen to his burial, making great lamentation over him, for immeasurably better off as are the righteous in exchanging earth for heaven, their gain is always the world's loss. When Joseph died Israel saw their tower of strength laid low. They had no longer a princely protector at Pharaoh's court, and instead of words of heavenly consolation from the warm lips of a loving teacher, that God would surely visit them and bring them up out of Egypt into the goodly Canaan promised their fathers, they had only the mute prophecy of his mummied corpse. When good men die it is always a loss to the race. Often their work seems to die, too, as in this lesson we are studying. No one steps forward to take their places. Centuries passed before Moses was born. Parents have a solemn duty to so train their children that humanity may never lack for leaders, or, what is quite as important—workers; men and women of common education and common intelligence, but so imbued with holy faith and courage that they can take up moral ideas and work them out in practical action. Such were the Pilgrim Fathers, the English martyrs, the Ironsides; and such were the men in our own day, who made Kansas a free State, and gave her that impetus which has kept her ever since in the van of reform.

2. Lessons Taught by Israel in Egypt. vs. 7-14. We are taught: (1) The perils of prosperity. The Israelites were safe while they continued an insignificant handful. It was when persecution ceased and Constantine made Christianity the state religion that it grew corrupt, and the true church of God went down into the Egypt of the dark ages. A reform is never in so much danger as when it grows popular. (2) The uses of adversity. The children of Israel needed to have their faith tried. Had they continued prosperous and happy in Egypt, what would they have cared for Canaan? If death and sickness and sorrow never visited this earth, how faint would grow our longings for that land where all tears are wiped away and the inhabitants no more say, "I am sick." In their bitter bondage the prophecy of the dying Joseph grew like luminous words of fire traced on the dark background of their lives of slavery, "God will surely visit you." His promises need the night of human sorrow to make them shine out. So all reformers need the discipline of discouragement to teach them to cease from man and lay hold on God. His great plan for humanity's advancement is broad enough to include all the "set-backs." The lodge and the saloon have, to-day, more hopeless bondslaves than were the Israelites. But there is hope for all such, and grandest encouragement for those that are laboring to break their chains. "God will surely visit you."

From Peloubet's Notes.

WHY GOD'S PEOPLE WERE PERMITTED TO BE IN BONDAGE. As a punishment for their sins. The Hebrews had doubtless greatly corrupted themselves in Egypt, and had become in their masses very like the people around them. This was in them a sin that could not pass unpunished. God cannot suspend his moral laws even for his own people.—J. Carr.

To wean them from Egypt; to make them willing to leave when God's time came. Otherwise they might have become so pleasantly settled in business, so encumbered with property, that, as many ages later in Babylon, they would not be willing to enter upon the hard and dangerous enterprise of journeying to Canaan.

The oppression would keep them separate from the Egyptians, prevent intermarriages, and preserve from the debasing contact with idolatry. It was the danger from the surrounding idolatry that was one great reason in the Divine providence why they were sent away from Canaan into Egypt.

Their oppression united them into one nation, binding them together in common sorrows, dangers, and hopes and plans. A common enemy makes a united people.

It turned their hearts toward the God of their fathers. It awakened religious feelings, hopes, and needs. The Egyptian gods were their enemies. Only Jehovah could be their help.

To fit them to be recipients of new instruction, laws, and institutions. They were as new material, without national forms or prejudices to be removed.

Their residence in Egypt would have a vast influence on their culture and civilization and literature. In working for the Egyptians they were compelled to use Egyptian arts and appliances, to study the great national works and the noble architecture on which they were employed; and to become acquainted with weaving, the working of metals, the homes, and the literature which was written upon bricks.

The land of promise was not yet ready for them.—P. NATIONAL WRONG—DOING THE SEED OF NATIONAL DISASTER. The story of Egypt's suffering begins with the story of Egypt's injustice.—Rev. J. Urquhart.

A nation may outgrow itself. 1. It will do so if intelligence and morals, with suitable institutions, do not keep pace with numbers. 2. Great prosperity is not always an advantage. It (1) excites jealousy; (2) tempts cupidity; (3) usually weakens by enervating.—Rev. J. Carr.

There are lessons to be learned in the school of adversity which will be learned nowhere else.

—Four weeks before Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's death, while talking with Dr. L. W. Munhall, who was at that time conducting a series of evangelistic meetings in Dr. Talmage's church, he said: "I rejoice at the great success you are having with Dr. Talmage's people. I wish I could have you in my church. I should like to see an old-fashioned Holy Ghost revival in Plymouth church before I go home; but I suppose I cannot. I don't think my people would stand it." As he thus spoke his eyes overflowed with tears.

BY THE PRESS.

Courant, Hartford, Conn.—The secret society fosters snobbery, and tends to create division among the best friends.

Springfield (Mass.) Republican.—We shall get over secret societies as we are getting over a good many other childish things.

Christian World, Cincinnati.—There is no use in denying that the leading secret societies are, in their practical workings, essentially deistic.

Our Record, Utica, N. Y.—We are confident that the great objects of equality, fraternity, and morality may be attained without resorting to the veil of secrecy.

Evening Journal, Chicago.—Assemble a party of young men together anywhere, with all restraint removed and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious.

Republican, Springfield, Mass.—There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness. . . . It is the meat of petty rather than large minds.

Advent Review and Herald.—And parents should avoid bringing their children in contact with the evil, and not send them to public schools where secret societies are tolerated.

Watchman and Reflector, Boston.—We have before spoken of the low prejudices and antipathies which this secret fellowship engenders toward those who are outside, and of the unworthy and vicious friendships which it creates among those who are within.

Daily Herald, Cleveland, Ohio.—If the "secrets" of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Malta, and the entire crop of secret societies could have sunlight let in upon them, we fancy the members thereof would be pronounced foolish boys of a larger growth.

London News, Madrid Correspondence, 1868.—The whole of this insurrectionary movement has been under the direction of a revolutionary committee, most of whom, I am told, are members of the Freemason's society (of which there are not less than forty-nine lodges, numbering 21,000 members, in Madrid), who have been for months arming the people in preparation for this outbreak.

Harper's Magazine.—As the larger portion of the Whig party was merged in the Republican, the dominant party of to-day has a certain lineal descent from the feelings aroused by the abduction of Morgan from the jail at Canandaigua. His disappearance and the odium consequent upon it stigmatized Masonry, so that it lay a long time moribund, and, although revived in later years, cannot hope to regain its old importance.

The Interior, Feb. 1877.—That Masonry is a religious system exceeding every other in the impressive character of its religious rites and ceremonies, and that it offers salvation through the practice of its rites and precepts, is an indisputable fact. If salvation can come to the soul through the channels of the morality taught by Masonry, then there is no need for the Christian religion. The objection we make to it is that it teaches salvation without Christ.

Utica, N. Y., Daily Herald.—The abominations of Know Nothingism are now conceded by all. The outrages of the secret society of Tammany, notwithstanding its endorsement by Gov. Seymour, are familiar to the American people and a disgrace to American politics. The excitement produced by the interference of Masons with politics is a matter of history. Everywhere and at all times, secret societies, so far as they dabble with politics, must exert a baleful evil.

Scientific American, New York.—Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is inducted, by sheer force of example, through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while, in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tact, if not open, instigation of his unscrupulous elders.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburgh.—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

The Army.—Surely the presence of a multitude of secret combinations bodes little good to the church of Christ.

Daily Appeal, Memphis.—The secret society business has become a craze with the colored people, and one by which they often become the victims of designing knaves.

Wesleyan Methodist.—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever revealed in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston.—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati.—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Catholic Review, New York.—It is becoming apparent that secret, oath-bound societies are, in principle, un-American; are contrary to the whole spirit and meaning of our institutions, and are therefore dangerous to the Republic.

Baptist Weekly, New York.—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository.—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness.—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880.—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. . . . The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880.—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia.—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies. . . . The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago.—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshippers. . . . The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGE-RY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)

Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.

Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfilidship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO THURSDAY, APRIL 21, 1887

THEODORE L. CUYLER.—The testimony of this eminent New York pastor against the secret orders was very forcibly given the other day at Dayton, Ohio, where he spent a few days visiting relatives. He visited the Telescope office and the editors express themselves as much honored. He also had an interview with Dr. Lewis Davis of Union Bible Seminary, to whom he said very significantly, as reported in the Christian Conservator: "I hope that our Telescopic brethren will not lower the standard in this struggle against the powers of darkness." We are the more pleased with this good word for a struggling and righteous cause, because it has been feared that Dr. Cuyler's nominal membership in the Good Templar's lodge sealed his lips on the lodge question.

POPERY, PROHIBITION AND LABOR.

When the good Dr. J. B. Walker (lately gone to heaven) wrote us from Benzonia, Mich., proffering to merge his paper in ours if we would oppose popery as well as secret societies, we replied, "The Jesuits, whose General or 'Black Pope' occupies a palace over against the Vatican, is the head secret society of the world, and the pope can do nothing against the Jesuits or without their General's consent."

Popery did not spring up till about the middle of the 5th century from Christ. There had been a "Holy Catholic church" 400 years before there was a pope. That "Holy Catholic church" is imprisoned by popery, and though the pope has not, as he claims to have, the key of heaven, he has the key of the prison in which the church of Christ or rather Christ himself is confined. But the "Holy Catholic church," though she lies in gyves and fetters, has the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, which the lodge, which is the "Image of the Beast," has not. The lodge has turned out the Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Ghost, to make room for its "Grand Architect" or usurping "god of this world." These first truths of popery should always be premised when we consider the Beast which has the horns of a Lamb and the mouth of the Dragon.

The celibate of the Romish clergy and the secret priest clads which are the social substitutes for families make liquor-drinking by priests as certain as the owning of women made adultery the sin of slave-holders. And Jeremy Bentham says of politics, "The known and certain consequences of a thing must be taken by a wise statesman as a part of the thing itself." Intemperance is therefore a part of priestism: and in spite of the illiteracy of Roman Catholic peoples, the masses know that priests drink, and hence the great and overwhelming majority of saloon-keepers in the United States are Roman Catholics. This fact makes the Romish church unpopular with the enlightened part of their people, and so contradicts the profession of superior sanctity that the progress of prohibition endangers the church. The prohibition cause therefore should be pushed, not only for its inherent justice, as the saloon system does no public good but only evil, but prohibition should be pushed because it is fatal to priestism, the grand foe of mankind.

The labor question is more complicated and difficult, and though popery is the most subtle of all combinations, as the serpent was of beasts, popery itself is stumbling on the labor question. Cardinal Taschereau of Quebec has a French and Irish constituency, both of whom will obey priests. Cardinal Manning has an English and Cardinal Gibbons an American constituency, both of which are less tractable to absolute power. Hence the pope's muddle with the Knights of Labor, who have the two main pillars of popery, absolute power and secrecy enforced by false worship: and besides their "Master Workman" is a papist.

The people will be enlightened and the devil is turning to the masses, whose kings and priests, even, are getting weak. Hence secret societies, since slavery is fallen, are the last hope of the devil who "deceiveth the whole world." Hence "the sun and air are darkened" by them (Rev. 9:2). But they are not the "Beast" but the "Image of the Beast," made not by churchmen only but by "them that dwell on the earth," the masses who make the lodges (Rev. 14:14). Cardinal Taschereau last September, seeing the Knights of Labor were Masons by another name, and their oath of secrecy conflicted with the confessional, consulted the pope, and the pope condemned the Knights, and Taschereau gave them the pope's sentence that they must quit their order on pain of excommunication, and his French and Irish papists acquiesced. But Manning and Gibbons bishops found the English and Americans sterner stuff to deal with. In short, the English and Yankees beat their priests, who went to Rome and persuaded the pope to stuspend the sentence pronounced by Taschereau, and on Sunday, April 10th, that prelate's circular was read in the churches of Quebec informing them that the pope had gone back on him, and suspended his sentence against the Knights of Labor. This would be fatal to anything but a false religion. That will hold. Worship! Worship! Ceremonies! Always more ceremonies! There is the hiding of the power of secret orders. When those people have gone through mass, or the little masses of the labor lodges, they are weak as frogs charmed by snakes, and nothing but the Holy Ghost applying the blood of Christ will take that weakness out of them.

Puck, in the late numbers of that witty and wonderful periodical, presents the pope's dilemma to the eye in its satirical pictures. The pope, in caricature, under his huge triple crown, with one hand stretched over Cardinal Manning presenting "The Holy Boycott," and the other over Cardinal Gibbons and "The Sympathetic Strike," says: "My children, we can work together nobly in America." And this will help open the eyes of the masses to sham holiness and utter disregard of popery for everything but its own power and priestly lusts. But, "Alas, leviathan is not so tamed." Patient, persevering "prayer and fasting" and the truth made mighty by the Spirit of God are the means by which "the strong man armed" is to be ejected by the meek conqueror, Christ.

It is amazing how slow good and enlightened men are to discern that sworn knighthood is a sham and a historic pest, and sworn obedience to unknown superiors is disaster to both labor and capital, while open labor unions, appealing to justice and relying on truth, and strikes, like war, as a last resort, will keep society improving, and law hold men together while the grace of God is changing men's hearts and fitting them for heaven.

THE "BORDER RUFFIAN" LODGES.

The authors of the great Lincoln history, now appearing in the Century, have come to the time of the Kansas-Nebraska bill discussion and the border war in Kansas, and in the April number of the magazine, give a succinct and comprehensive account of the "Border Ruffians," their origin, purpose, and something of their work. This history so corroborates the remarkably interesting sketches of Senator Pomeroy of the same period and struggle that we have transcribed from the Century several paragraphs and give an abstract of the whole.

Slavery was the first and constant cause of the difficulty. The balance of power between the free and slave States had been destroyed by the admission of California among the former. To restore its power in national affairs and especially in the Senate, the South first secured the repeal of the Missouri compromise. The second step was to secure control of the new Territory. The speeches of Douglas on the Nebraska bill had been the challenge which Seward accepted in behalf of Freedom. "We will engage in competition," said the great New York Governor, "for the virgin soil of Kansas, and God give the victory to the side that is stronger in numbers as it is in right."

The Massachusetts Emigrant Aid Company, headed by Hon. Eli Thayer of Worcester, of which Senator Pomeroy was the very efficient agent, sent forward its companies of settlers. But they came from afar, many from New England. On the Eastern Kansas border, separated partly by the Missouri river, and partly by county lines, was an ultra slave State, whose citizens found their peculiar property in slaves endangered already on the east and north by contiguous free territory. If Kansas should be free, the value of this property would soon be gone. Here then was a people ready for the emergency. Who should lead them? David R. Atchison, a Kentuckian, had risen quickly from an obscure politician in Platte county on the western border of Missouri, to be representative of that State in the United States Senate. On the death of Vice President King he had been chosen president of that body and so ex-officio the successor of President Pierce. When Congress adjourned in August, 1854, he hastened home to put in operation a scheme, doubtless concocted among the Freemasons of Washington, of which Messrs. Hay and Nicolay, the Century writers, say:

"Current reports and subsequent developments leave no doubt that this Senator [Atchison] being then Vice President of the United States [by virtue of his office as president pro tempore of the Senate,

Vice President King having died] immediately after the August adjournment of Congress hurried away to his home in Platte county, Missouri, and from that favorable situation personally organized a vast conspiracy, running through nearly all the counties of his State adjoining the Kansas border, to decide the slavery question for Kansas by Missouri votes. Secret societies under various names, such as 'Blue Lodges,' 'Friends Society,' 'Social Band,' 'Sons of the South,' were organized and affiliated, with all the necessary machinery of oaths, grips, signs, passwords and badges. The plan and object of the movement were in general kept well concealed. Such publicity as could not be avoided served rather to fan the excitement, strengthen the hesitating, and frown down all dissent and opposition. Long before the time for action arrived, the idea that Kansas must be a slave State had grown into a fixed and determined public sentiment.

Many circumstances favored the task undertaken by Atchison. The location of the State of Missouri, the bitter pro-slavery feeling, the money value of the slaves for the markets in the far South, the reckless character of the people long accustomed to border lawlessness, the rampant spirit of intolerance and the hearty co-operation of Stringfellow and a number of bold, bad spirits like him—with such a population and in such conditions the plot had every possible assistance. Atchison had much at stake in the desperate game. Personal convictions, party faith, political advancement and private fortune were involved; and he undertook the work with a daring yet confident energy. "When you reside in one day's journey from the Territory," said he in one of his public speeches, "and when your peace, your quiet, and your property depend upon your action, you can without an exertion send five hundred of your young men who will vote in favor of your institutions. Should each county in the State of Missouri only do its duty, the question will be decided quietly and peaceably at the ballot-box."

Meantime President Pierce had selected Andrew H. Reeder of Pennsylvania as governor of the Territory. It was published at the time in the Washington Union that Reeder in conversation with Southerners at the capital assured them "he had no more scruples in buying a slave than a horse, and regretted that he had not money to purchase a number to carry with him to Kansas." The Century sketch proceeds:

"Arriving at Leavenworth in October, 1854, Governor Reeder was not long in discovering the designs of the Missourians. He was urged to order the immediate election of a territorial legislature. The conspirators had already spent some months in organizing their 'Blue Lodges,' and now desired to be promptly put in possession of the political power of the Territory. But the Governor had too much manliness to become the pliant tool they wished to make him. He resented their dictatorship; made a tour of inspection through the new settlements; and acting on his own proper judgment, on his return issued a proclamation for a simple election of a delegate to Congress. At the appearance of this proclamation Platte county [Mo.] took the alarm, and held a meeting on the Kansas side of the river, to intimidate him with violent speeches and a significant memorial. The Governor retorted in a letter that the meeting was composed of Missourians, and that he should resist outside interference from friend, foe, or faction. Pocketing this rebuff as best they might, Senator Atchison and his 'Blue Lodges' nevertheless held fast to their purpose. Paper proclamation and lectures on abstract rights counted but little against the practical measures they had matured. November 29, the day of election for delegate, finally arrived, and with it a formidable invasion of Missouri voters at more than half the polling places appointed in the Governor's proclamation."

"The movement described above," say Messrs. Hay and Nicolay, "had been in active preparation for weeks, controlled by strong and secret combinations, and many unwilling participants were doubtless swept into it by an excited public opinion they dared not resist."

"On election morning the few real squatters of Kansas, endowed with Douglas's delusive boon of 'popular sovereignty,' witnessed with mixed indignation and terror acts of summary usurpation. Judges of election were dispossessed and set aside by intimidation or stratagem, and proslavery judges substituted without the slightest regard to regularity or law; judges' and voters' oaths were declared unnecessary, or explained away upon newly-invented phrases and absurd subtleties. 'Where there's a will, there's a way,' in wrong and crime, as well as in honest purpose and deed; and by more dishonest devices than history can stop fully to record the ballot-boxes were filled, through invasion, false sweeping, riot, and usurpation, with ballots for Whitfield, the pro-slavery candidate for delegate to Congress, at nine out of the seventeen polling places—showing, upon a careful scrutiny afterward made by a committee of Congress, an aggregate of 1,729 illegal votes, and only 1,114 legal ones. This mockery of an election completed, the valiant Knights of the Blue Lodge, the fraternal members of the Social Band, the philanthropic groups of the Friend's Society, and the chivalric Sons of the South mounted their horses and wagons, and with cheers, and salvos from revolver and rifle, returned to their axe and plow, society lodge and bar-room haunt, to exult in a victory for Missouri and slavery over the 'Abolition hordes and nigger thieves of the Emigrant Aid Society.' The 'Border Ruffians' of Missouri had written their preliminary chapter in the annals of Kansas."

As the result of this invasion Whitfield was hastened to Washington as pro-slavery delegate with Governor Reeder's certificate of election in his pocket, but Atchison remained to manage the next election which would be of more importance to his plot. A census of the Territory was taken early in 1855, and a population of 8601 reported, of whom 2905 were voters. The 30th of March, 1855, was fixed upon for the election of the Territorial legislature. Reeder made an earnest and honorable effort to secure a fair vote. He was rapidly being cured of his enthusiasm as a disciple of the Democratic dogma of "popular sovereignty." But his precautions were in vain. Election day came and with it an invading army of 5,000 members of the Border Ruffian lodges, organized and directed from their secret dens of conspiracy. "Riot, violence, intimidation, destruction of ballot-boxes," expulsion of judges, viva voce and repeated voting were incidents of that day. Subsequent examination showed 1410 legal ballots cast to 4908 illegal! The Governor was confounded, overruled by force of arms, and compelled to sign, under duress, certificates of election to all but about one-third of the claimants. Stringfellow and his Border Ruffian law-makers managed with a high hand. The Free State members were unseated by a farce, or bullied out of the body, which went on to pass such coercive laws as they pleased, one being that no one should be permitted to vote in Kansas who in addition to the usual conditions of age and residence refused to swear to support the Fugitive Slave law. Governor Reeder vainly tried to stem this overflow of lodgery, crime and usurpation. He resisted with some firmness and went to Washington to secure help from Pierce but was disappointed in finding little or no sympathy.

The conclusion of the article tells at some length of the action of the Free State party in forming a legislature at Topeka, and drawing up a constitution, and the final dissolution of the body by United States troops commanded by Colonel, afterward General, Sumner, who reluctantly obeyed orders from Washington. The article is doubly interesting, not only for its intrinsic value, but as corroborating the valuable historical sketches of Senator Pomeroy. It is accompanied by portraits of N. B. Judd, B. C. Cook, Lyman Trumbull and Owen Lovejoy, associates with Abraham Lincoln in Illinois, and of Eli Thayer and Governor Reeder. There are also pictures of the old Gillis House in Kansas City, the purchase of which for Free State headquarters Senator Pomeroy has so graphically described; also of two pre-emption houses on the town site of Lawrence. At one of these a thousand armed Missourians voted in March, 1855.

The Century's May installment of the Lincoln history promises portraits of Governors Shannon, Robinson and Geary, and the sub-topics will be "Civil War in Kansas," "Jefferson Davis on Rebellion" and the "Conventions of '56." These topics, it will be noted, have been before our readers in Senator Pomeroy's entertaining articles. The April Atlantic Monthly has a history of Colonel Jaquess's mission to Richmond, described in the present number.

CORRECTION.—An editorial bracket note near the close of Senator Pomeroy's article in this issue, puts the time of the peace proposition to Jeff. Davis as September, 1863. Edmund Kirke's story of this transaction puts the first visit of Jaquess to Richmond in June, 1863. The second, which was more formal, was in July, 1864.

—The Western Crank of College Springs, Iowa, has more turn in it than almost any of our Antimasonic papers. The last number has an able and well-considered review of the late convention by Dr. William Johnston, pastor of the United Presbyterian church in College Springs. Bro. H. W. Johnston, editor of the Crank, was one of the secretaries of the meeting.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The work of evangelizing the city of Washington has begun, and from the outlook will be vigorously prosecuted. The pastors of eighteen Protestant churches have discussed the subject fraternally and have agreed upon a means of systematic union work in every section of the capital which certain moralists have essayed to establish as the most ungodly in the world.

Washington is being made better in other ways also. An old law on the District of Columbia statute books makes it unlawful for any person to keep open any place of business for the sale of any article of profit on the Lord's day, excepting apothecaries, undertakers and barbers. The Commissioners have resurrected this law from its dusty tomb and propose to enforce it. In other words the cigar stores, news stands, ice-cream saloons, lunch-rooms, etc., will be closed.

It has been said in other cities that there was no artistic or musical atmosphere in Washington; that politics and society absorbed every faculty and interest. Washington does lunch and dine and visit a great deal, and "politics" do hang as a sort of Old Man of the Sea about its neck, but it is more than the political and social capital of the greatest Republic the world has ever seen. Every national interest centers here, and every phase of national life is represented here as is also the intellect and culture and patriotism of a continent. The great social whirl begins on New Year's Day and subsides with the advent of Lent. During that season, with the fashionable people and official entertainers, calls and visiting cards fill up the mornings. Calls, receptions and visiting cards crowd the afternoons. Calls, receptions and visiting cards jam the evenings and nights until next morning every day.

If every day were a week long and every week a month long there would still not be time enough for all the calls, receptions, visiting cards, breakfasts, luncheons, dinners and teas which constitute the occupation of a certain element of society here. But amid this social maelstrom one meets more famous men and women, statesmen, orators, soldiers and scholars, more people worth knowing and remembering, than in any other city of America, or than in all its cities combined. And, taken all in all, for its size, its cosmopolitan population, it may be said that Washington is a good city in point of morals. Still it has been so much and so long misrepresented that it will be very difficult to remove such a widely spread, erroneous impression.

Among our latest charities is the establishment of a "Home," the object of which is to protect and provide for young women who come here expecting to get work and fail to do so. A number of prominent ladies and gentlemen have organized themselves into an association for the establishment of this "Home" which will be the means of preventing untold suffering and degradation. Women come here seeking employment from every quarter of the United States. Of course many of them are disappointed.

Senator McPherson, of New Jersey, who has in Washington the reputation of being frank and honest in his expressions, views with alarm the tendency of the labor organizations to "dock by themselves" politically, as meaning serious injury to the Democratic party. He says that if the Labor party nominates in 1888 a separate National ticket as it did in 1884 it will make Democratic success extremely doubtful in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Indiana, West Virginia, and Virginia. He says the prospect of the success of his party in 1888 is not as bright as the leaders of the party could wish.

REFORM NEWS.

INVADING NEW TERRITORY.

CLINTON, Iowa, April 14, 1887.

Last evening's meeting in the Danish Lutheran church was a success. The attendance was good and largely of young men. They listened with close attention, and although the address was not in their native language, they were, I think, able to understand most that was said. I used charts and simple illustrations and talked to them rather than lectured. Rev. Pastor Grundtwig had given due notice, and meeting me at the train took me to his home, where I received every attention from him and his estimable wife.

As early this morning as it seemed practicable, we started to distribute literature and canvass the question of further meetings. We met on the streets several of the order ranking high, who were courteous and received copies of the Cynosure and other documents with thanks.

Our first call was on Dr. Blunt, a graduate of Wheaton, who holds to the principles of his alma mater on the lodge question, and is, as I was glad to learn, a successful practitioner in his profession. Rev. Mr. Denny, pastor of the Congregationalist church, we found quietly but intelligently opposed to the secret orders. Rev. Pastor Savage of the Baptist church occupied about the same position on the general question, but was inclined to make an exception of the G. A. R., to which he belongs. Rev. Burrell, of the Presbyterian church, was quite willing to talk. He is a young man of fine appearance and popular among his people, but it is quite evident that he is not "the stuff of which martyrs are made." Being outside the lodge he evidently intends to avoid any public discussion of the subject, although he sees and in his study frankly acknowledges the evils of the system.

Rev. James Trimble, Episcopal, declined to converse on the subject, and when asked if the Knights drank wine from a human skull, he appeared deeply moved, but declined to deny or affirm. I regretted not meeting Rev. Mr. Ward of the M. E. church, who is accounted a most active and useful man as minister and citizen.

My time was so far exhausted that I did not call on other pastors of the place, whom we have reason to believe are in sympathy with the anti-lodge work. Pastor Grundtwig will investigate further, and if a suitable hall can be obtained it is hoped that further discussion will be had in the near future.

APRIL 15.—At Morrison, Ill., I met those who remain of the "old guard," and though "battle-scarred," they are faithful to the flag and principles of the anti-lodge, anti-liquor, and equal rights for all parties. Bro. Sholes and his companion gave me a most cordial greeting, and I left their home at 1 o'clock A. M. for Wheaton, a stronger and more hopeful reformer by reason of their cheering words. May the Lord reward them. J. P. STODDARD.

OHIO AGAIN REPORTS.

COLUMBUS, O., April 4, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Although I have not reported since "the Congress," I have been by no means idle. I read recently, "A certain class of Christians are like a wheelbarrow. They go when pushed." True reformers always are pushing. We don't mean to be behind in Ohio, but intend by the help of God to strike blow after blow until the towers of lodgery shall fall.

I have just returned from a week of successful work in Morrow county. The friends there are holding the fort well. Some new recruits were enlisted. Since leaving Chicago I have spoken eight times as follows: Reynoldsburg, United Presbyterian church; Leonardsburg, Baptist church; Pagentown, Wesleyan church; Sparta, town hall; Stanton-town, Christian church, twice; and Oxford, Wesleyan church, near Ashley, twice. All of these meetings have been well attended, and a marked readiness to know the truth manifested on the part of hearers. At Sparta a member of the I. O. O. F. took upon himself to defend his order. It was the old story. He contradicted himself and mixed things up generally, retiring as usual the worse for his effort.

Yesterday I visited an establishment in Ashley where lodge articles are manufactured. On the first floor they were making ballot-boxes, triangular fixings, etc. Ascending to the second floor I found some half dozen young men and girls making trinkets of various kinds. Some were working out wooden bowie-knives. Near one corner of the room was an open coffin; on the different sides there were a large number of hideous-looking representations of skeletons, and false faces. A young man who was at work said in answer to my inquiry that they were made of paper and covered with whitening. A number of triangular pieces of wood filled with spikes were prominent. The man who owns this concern is a blatant infidel, openly defies God and says the Bible is a fable. Besides his position as a leading Mason, he is postmaster and mayor of the town. Should I commence to express indignation I would not know where to stop.

Bro. L. Powers of this place bears no uncertain testimony against the lodge. Said he: "If you never see or hear from me again you may know that I will live and die an Anti-Mason." State President Smith helped what he could. His horse and buggy was at my disposal. At his suggestion a good collection was taken Sabbath morning in the Pagetown church. Many will be remembered because of their assistance, of whom I have not time to write. I shall, D. V., take the train for Cedarville and work for a time in the western part of the State. Friends desiring work in that part should write me at once via this office. W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

THE SECRET OF A HAPPY DAY.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him."—Psalm 25: 1.

Just to let thy Father do
What he will;
Just to know that he is true,
And be still.
Just to follow hour by hour
As he leadeth,
Just to draw the moment's power
As it needeth.
Just to trust him, this is all!
Then the day will surely be Peaceful, whatso'er befall,
Bright and blessed, calm and free.

Just to let him speak to thee
Through his Word,
Watching, that his voice may be Clearly heard.
Just to tell him everything
As it rises,
And at once to him to bring
All surprises.
Just to listen, and to stay
Where you cannot miss his voice;
This is all! and thus to-day,
Communing, you shall rejoice.

Just to ask him what to do
All the day,
And to make you quick and true
To obey.
Just to know the needed grace
He bestoweth,
Every bar of time and place
Overfloweth.

Just to take thy orders straight
From the Master's own command;
Blessed day! when thus we wait
Always at our Sovereign's hand.

Just to recollect his love,
Always true;
Just to recognize its light,
All enfolding;
Just to claim its present might,
All upholding.
Just to know it as thine own,
That no power can take away.
Is not this enough alone
For the gladness of the day?

Just to trust, and yet to ask Guidance still;
Take the training or the task,
As he will,
Just to take the loss or gain,
As he sends it;
Just to take the joy or pain,
As he lends it;

He who formed thee for his praise,
Will not miss the gracious aim;
So to-day, and all thy days,
Shall be molded for the same.

Just to leave in his dear hand,
Little things;
All we cannot understand;
All that stings.
Just to let him take the care
Sorely pressing,
Finding all we let him bare
Changed to blessing.
This is all! and yet the way
Marked by him who loves thee best:
Secret of a happy day,
Secret of his promised rest.

—Francis Ridley Havergal.

THE JOURNEY OF A DAY.

Human life is a journey marked off into stages of four-and-twenty hours. A person of average age sees about eleven thousand of these stages; if he reaches three score years, he will have seen twenty-two thousand risings of the sun. Night brings the bivouac and tired nature's sweet restorer. After a few hours of sound slumber (and woe be to the man or woman who cannot sleep), the rosy finger of the morning touches us, as the Divine Restorer touched the dead maiden in the house of Jairus, and says to us, "Arise!" In a moment the whole machinery of life is again in full play. God puts us on a new probation, when the griefs of yesterday may be forgotten and the mistakes of yesterday may be corrected, and a new chance is given us to "make good speed" on a higher walk of diligence, and a closer fellowship with our God.

One hour in the morning is commonly worth two at the sunset; nearly all the mind's best work is wrought after resurrection from the couch, and not when it is seeking repose. The "Wizard of the North" wrote his Waverley romances before breakfast, while his guests were sleeping. All those commentaries of beloved Albert Barnes on yonder shelves are the product of five o'clock in the morning. The night watchman of Philadelphia got accustomed to see him marching over to his study before daylight in winter. A vast deal of nonsense has been uttered about the "midnight lamp," but it usually burns up a life before its time. Let the devil's debauchees be astir at midnight, God's children ought to be in bed and asleep. Especially students and ministers should perform their chief intellectual labor in the morning.

1. Every day's journey should be commenced with God. As the Oriental traveler sets out for the march over the burning sands by loading up his camel under the palm trees and by filling his flasks from a cool fountain that sparkles at the roots, so doth a Christian wayfarer draw his early supply from the inexhaustible spring. "In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up," said the man after God's own heart. The buoyant soul makes its earliest flight, like the lark, towards the gates of heaven. Bunyan gives a beautiful description of his Pilgrim, who awoke and sang in the Chamber of Peace that looked towards the sun-rising. An interview with God in the closet or at the household altar sends us out on a journey, as Moses descended from the mount, with the face shining.

2. Much depends upon a cheerful start for the day. The man who leaves his home with a scowl on his brow, and a snap at his children, and a tart speech to his wife instead of a kiss, is not likely to be pleasant company for anybody during the day; he will probably come home with the temper of a porcupine. Wise plans should be laid for every day, so that it be not an idle saunter, or an aimless bustling to and fro. Yet to make good speed on the right track we must not start overloaded. Not too many things to be undertaken, lest they prove hasty botch-work. The journey is not made in a cushioned car, but on foot, and the most galling load is vexatious and worrying care. One step at a time is all that the most busy Christian can take, and steady walking ought not to tire any healthy body or soul. It is the over-strained rush, whether in business or study, that breaks people down; especially the insane greed for wealth, or the mad ambitions, goading brain and nerves to a fury. The shattered nerves and sudden death in all our great business centers tell a sad story. A good rule is to take short views. Sufficient to the day is the toil thereof; no man is strong enough to bear to-day's load with the morrow piled on top of it. The only long look far ahead that you and I should take should be the look towards the judgment seat, and the offered crown at the end of the race. That is the way to get a taste of heaven in advance.

3. God's Word is the best road-book for each day's journey. It is the infallible guide, with clear directions for every step, clear warnings for every danger, and bracing encouragements for every steep hill and hard pull. We defy an infidel to take the Bible, and order one whole day in close conscientious obedience to all its injunctions, and go to bed that night a skeptic. The best test of the Bible is to walk by it; each morning we should consult it, and then carry its precepts and spirit with us through the day. Our Christianity should be woven into every hour, and regulate every act; it should keep the temper sweet and the conscience alert; it should make the housewife's floor clean, and the merchant's ledger honest; if Christ be with us, then should he shine forth from us continually. Some people keep their religion as they do their umbrellas, to be used in an occasional storm; or like an overcoat, to be put on in severe weather. They hunt up their piety on Sundays, and wear it to church or to the communion table. When they get home they throw it off, and go in spiritual rags, or in pitiable nakedness through the week. If a sharp trial comes, it is convenient to have it; if the foot-step of death is heard coming, then by all means it must be within reach. Such a wretched travesty of real godliness was not in the Apostle's mind when he said, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." To be appalled with the spirit of Christ is to walk in the beauty of holiness.

4. As we set out on the life-march each morning, we never know what the day may bring forth. Sudden temptations may surprise us, as the Southerners surprised Sheridan's army at Cedar Creek, when off their guard. Let us put on, therefore, the whole armour, and be ever watching. Few Christians fall deliberately; it is commonly the sudden assault of sin, when they are unwatchful, that trips and throws them into the dust. Then, too, we never can predict at the dawning what dark clouds may roll up, or what showers of tears may fall, before the sunset. It is best that we should not know what is coming. If God only come with it, let the storm arise and the blow fall! As our day our strength shall be.

The tears may be but the lenses of love to see farther into heaven.

Each day is a precious loan from God. To lose a day in indolence and sin is a jewel lost out of our crown. The night soon cometh; perhaps suddenly "the sun's rim dips, and with one stride comes the dark." God keeps us always ready for the next step in the journey; for it may be a step into eternity. Every morning let our prayer be like that of Abraham's steward, "I pray thee send me good speed this day!" Then we shall end it at a milestone nearer our Father's house; and when we reach home, there shall be no night there.—Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D.

CHILD LIFE IN SIAM.

When the Siamese young folks get up in the morning they do not go to the washstand to wash their faces, for the simple reason that Siamese houses can boast no such article of furniture. The cooking utensils and the mats which serve for beds, with the pillows of gayly painted bamboo or tightly stuffed cotton, make up the entire furnishing of a Siamese house. The houses of the poor people are simple bamboo huts of one or two rooms, while their richer neighbors have teak-wood houses, with an extra room, perhaps; but all are alike simple in their furniture.

Our little Siamese friend just runs down to the foot of the ladder—for the house is built on posts—to a large jar of water with a cocoanut-shell dipper. There she washes her face—not in the dipper, but by throwing the water over her hands and rubbing them over her face. She needs no towel, for the water is left to dry. She does not brush her teeth, for they are stained black by chewing the betel-nut and seri-leaf. Her hair does not require combing either, for it is all shaved except a little tuft on the top of the head, and that is tied in a little knot and not often combed; and after a girl is twelve years old it is shaved and kept very short.

After breakfast is over—and a very simple meal it is in Siam—the children go off and find some place in which to play. The baby goes with them, and is carried by the older sister on her right hip, and, with her arm to support the child's back, she walks along as if she had no load to carry.

The girls play at keeping house, and make dishes of clay dried in the sun, and from seeds, grasses and weeds they make all sorts of imaginary delicacies. Little images of clay, washed with lime, are their only dolls; these are sometimes laid in tiny cradles and covered with a few pieces of cloth. The Siamese cradles are made on oblong wooden frames, something like a picture-frame, from which hangs a network bag made of cord, which forms the cradle, and a board is put in the bottom to keep the netted cord in shape. The large cradle of the same sort in which the live baby sleeps is fastened to the rafters of the house, and forms a cooler and safer cradle than those in which American babies rest. If any one will make a little frame and net some cord for the basket part, she can have a real Siamese cradle.

The boys in Siam are very fond of pitching coins, and spend much of their time in this game. They play leap-frog and very often jump the rope. Now that so many foreigners come to this country they have learned to play marbles, too. Foot-ball is also a very popular game, but instead of a ball they use a little square piece of thick leather with feathers fastened into one side. The men, as well as the boys, enjoy this game, and it is really the most active exercise the Siamese ever take. Fishing is a favorite pastime; and as crabs and prawns are not always in season, they are a greater luxury than fish, and it is considered great fun to catch them. The time for this is when the tide in the river is very low, and great mud-banks are left on either side. The little fishermen carry with them a coarse sieve and an earthen jar. The sieve is pushed along under the surface of the mud, and the crabs, when caught, are put into the jars, which the children drag along after them. After they have caught enough crabs they pelt each other with mud, just as American boys do with snow balls. When they are tired and dirty enough they plunge into the water, have a good swim, and come out of the water as clean and happy as boys can be. In the month of March, though usually dry and hot, winds are blowing. At this time the Siamese, young and old, are much engaged in playing games with kites, which are fitted with whistles, and the air resounds with the noise produced by the toys and the shouts of the multitudes of people engaged in the sport. Very frequently, too, mimic battles are fought in the air by means of these kites, skillfully directed by strings held in the hands of the owners.

Siamese children do not have many pets, and those that they do have are used for fighting. Just at sunset the boys will often be seen searching very earnestly for crickets. These little creatures are put into small clay cages, closed at the top by bars of little sticks which let in the light and air. Then the boys gather some evening, put all their crickets into a large box, and watch them fight, as they are sure to do when put together. Small fish, called needle-fish from their long, sharp mouths, are also used for this cruel purpose. Two fish are put into separate bottles placed close to each other. The moment they catch sight of each other they begin snapping, but of course can never reach each other. Sometimes a looking-glass is held before one, and it is amusing as well as painful to see how angry it will become. This passion for mimic fights grows in the boys, and when they become men they spend most of their time at cock-pits, where nearly all their gambling is done. In spite of all this, animals are well cared for by most persons, for they "make merit" in this way. They also believe that at some future time a fish, a monkey, a dog, a cat or it may be a snake, a bird or a pig, will be the possible home of their own soul.

ORIENTAL KITES.

A few days ago a strange scene might have been witnessed on one of the big vacant lots on the West Side. From an early hour in the day in question an occasional Chinaman carrying an unwieldy and mysterious looking bundle took one of the Madison or Randolph street cars and went to the end of the route. Each one as he arrived dismounted and wended his way in a westerly direction, but none of the busy conductors was aware that a common point was their destination. Such was the case, however, and before the autumn sun had begun to shine very strongly they were gathered to the number of a score or more on a sloping piece of ground outside the city limits.

Then a queer movement began. Each celestial, having made a variety of elaborate salutations toward the east, turned his attention to his parcel and gravely commenced to undo the fastenings. A News reporter, who happened to be an unseen observer, fully expected to see a quantity of long-tailed shirts, linen cuffs, collars, etc., produced and a new method of bleaching exhibited to his wondering gaze. But still a greater surprise was in store. From each newspaper wrapper a brand-new and elaborately constructed paper kite was unfolded and in a few moments the cords were adjusted and a score of pig-tails were streaming in the morning breeze as the orientals scampered nimbly around in every direction trying to "raise the wind" and hoist their strange playthings upon their wings. And a curious looking batch of contrivances they were. It was no ordinary school-boy's kite that John Chinaman was disporting himself with on the Chicago prairies this fine morning. They were of all shapes and sizes, cunningly manufactured and elaborately ornamented. Birds, fish, serpents, dragons, and in fact, every kind of imaginable animal and reptile were represented.

One big laundryman, with a huge queue and the most curiously pointed of wooden shoes, kicked up his heels like a two-year colt as he bounded over the soft turf at the end of a string attached to a kite that resembled an immense pair of spectacles. He jabbered continually in a language that seemed made up of nothing but three or four words that sounded like the monotonous tones of a vigorously hammered gong to a companion who was floating an arrangement meant to resemble an eel not less than fifteen feet long. Another child of the sun was flaunting a paper eagle with plumage of flaring yellow, and a third carried a peculiar-looking eight-sided figure, which was probably made in imitation of some of the diagrams produced by the early Chinese emperors, some of whom had mathematical pretensions.

Quadrupeds, bipeds, and reptiles of almost every species were represented, all being gaudily painted and decorated. One ludicrous looking Mongolian, with a face like a pumpkin with a gash in the center of it, hung on to what looked like a Buddhist idol almost as ugly as himself. He seemed in high glee as the monstrous image floated rapidly upward, its huge head and shoulders bobbing from side to side, while its glass eyes seemed to twinkle like stars as they now and then caught the rays of the morning sun. One low, broad-shouldered fellow had a larger bundle than any of the rest and went some distance off from the main crowd to open it. Five minutes later what seemed to be a flock of hawks was hovering over the yellow-faced heathen, their beaks and talons bent downward as if prepared to alight on some object underneath. They were all of paper and by an ingenious contrivance controlled by one string.

For over an hour these queer gambols were kept up, and then the kites were recalled, and the owners, after again indulging in similar extravagant and fantastic salutations to those with which they began proceedings, disappeared as quietly as they had come.

At first when the extraordinary scene was presented to the eyes of the wondering scribe he became impressed with the idea that the Chinamen must have taken leave of their senses, and that some new and extraordinary species of insanity had developed among the Easterns. But such was not the case. The Chinamen were simply observing one of their national holidays—the ninth day of the ninth month—which in their own land is celebrated by kite-flying on the hill tops. The Chinese tell the following story in explanation of their choosing a particular date for the observance of this custom. In ancient times a certain man named Hing Shay was informed by one of the wise men of his locality that some dire calamity would befall his house on the date in question. He immediately informed his family of the impending ruin, and on the morning of the much-dreaded day repaired with all his relations to a neighboring hill and spent the time as best he could. On returning home that evening he found all his domestic animals dead. The Chinaman considered himself lucky to have escaped with his family, and, the story having got around, he came to be looked upon as one in whose behalf a miracle had been performed. Ever since then Chinamen, wherever they are scattered and when the opportunity offers, celebrate the ninth day of the ninth month by propitiating the evil spirits in the same manner that Hing Shay did.—Chicago News.

TEMPERANCE.

JOSEPH SOLD INTO EGYPT.

Joseph was sold for twenty pieces of silver.

Christ was sold for thirty pieces of silver.

Christ is sold to-day in the person of weak and helpless ones, who are wronged and suffer without redress for the sake of money.

"In as much as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Joseph is sold in our village to-day. There are three men chosen by the electors of the town who are now selling our boys for thirty pieces of silver. The rumsellers are the Ishmaelites. Our electors sell to these for $30 each the permit to steal as many of our boys as they can, and send them into a worse slavery than Joseph was sold into. We have more than one hundred authorized to catch our boys and make drunkards of them. Each of Joseph's ten brothers were responsible to Jacob for Joseph.

Every one of the citizens of this town is responsible to God for the boys ruined by strong drink. There is only one way to clear our skirts, and that is to do all we can to put this evil from us.

How strange that when the friends of the helpless demand the prohibition of the liquor traffic that professed followers of Christ are ready to say, "You cannot do it. Our boys must be destroyed. We had better make something out of them." We press the question stronger, and they cry out, "This is the way. Charge them 1,000 pieces of silver for our boys instead of thirty. This will do away with those low places that are so repulsive to our boys while they are innocent and will put the traffic into the hands of men who will make the saloon 'respectable,' more attractive."

It will be a place then where the boys can take the girls with them—and if our boys and girls fall, as fall they must, we shall have the satisfaction of knowing they did not go into a low down groggery.

If this evil will continue, and it will, why not make the Ishmaelites pay well for our boys? Ought not Christians to stand up for Joseph instead of being so ready to let him perish for the sake of the license fee?—Dr. Emory Potter in the Saratoga Eagle.

A HIGH LICENSE CATECHISM.

Q. What is high license?

A. It is a law which for a stipulated sum authorizes the rum seller to manufacture drunkards.

Q. What raw material does the rum seller use in such a manufacture?

A. Boys.

Q. Whose boys?

A. Anybody's boys—your neighbors and your own.

Q. What benefit is to be derived from a high license law?

A. It will elevate the business.

Q. What business?

A. The business of making drunkards.

Q. How does it propose to do this?

A. By shutting up the deadfalls and rendering the palace saloons more attractive.

Q. What is the difference between a deadfall and a palace saloon?

A. A palace saloon is where the boys take their first lesson in crime; the deadfall is where they graduate.

Q. What is the difference between a prohibitionist and a high licensist?

A. High licensists believe in putting whisky into a boy through a $1,000 funnel, and then putting the boy into the gutter; the prohibitionists believe in putting the whisky into the gutter and saving the boy.—Waco Advance.

HIGH LICENSE IN ILLINOIS.

If ever high license had a fair chance for trial, it has had it here. If ever high license is to prove a success it should be in a city of schools like Rockford. With a large number of total abstainers, with vigorous and aggressive temperance organizations, with more than a score of churches, large and influential, a large and active Young Men's Christian Association, a fine public library, and other organizations, all seeking in effect to counteract the saloon and its works, still saloons are increasing in number, and evidences are on every hand to show that little or no restraint is put upon the traffic. Surely, in such a field, with such surroundings, if there is any virtue in high license it should be apparent by this time. On the contrary, there is an evident increase of drunkenness; young men are tempted by the high-toned palaces of hell, and homes are desolated by the ravages of the drink demon. We denounce high license, as it now exists in Rockford, as a humbug and fraud of the first water. We protest in the name of suffering humanity against the continuance of this iniquitous system. Our saloons are a curse to us, and no amount of money will mitigate the curse. It is time for Rockford to call a halt, and it behooves Christians and temperance men to awake to the work of ruin and death which our saloons are doing.—Rockford Monitor.

A MOHAMMEDAN POWER THROTTLING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.—A striking commentary upon the accusation of Canon Farrar, is found in the action of the Sultan of Morocco, who has just issued a proclamation prohibiting the sale or purchase of intoxicating liquors, and has abolished the State tobacco monopoly. At his orders large quantities of tobacco have been destroyed. Some of his subjects, who were at first inclined to believe that prohibition does not prohibit, changed their minds after they had been flogged through the streets for smoking in defiance of the law. It is suggested that this new policy has been adopted in view of the intemperance which has spread over Egypt since the British troops were sent there.

For twenty years there has not been a licensed hotel or restaurant in this county (Potter Co.). As to results, I can say that while the county has been steadily growing in population and business, pauperism and crime have steadily decreased. The effect of this system is felt in many ways: taxes are reduced; the business of the criminal courts is greatly diminished; industry and sobriety take the place of idleness and dissipation; and intelligence and morality are advanced.—Hon. H. W. Williams, Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Mr. Moody leads the noon meeting from Monday till Friday of this week in Farwell Hall. This was the arrangement of last week, and thousands were in attendance. The meeting on Friday last, which closed the first week of his lectures, was a wonderful occasion. Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock the Rev. James H. Brookes, D.D., of St. Louis, will begin a course of popular lectures to Christians and young converts. Dr. Brookes has few superiors in our country as a Bible instructor. Mr. Moody continues his Bible readings on the North Side at the New England Congregational church at 4:30 p. m. These services have been of such unusual interest that the pastors were unwilling to let Mr. Moody go elsewhere, and prevailed upon him to continue. Francis Murphy will hold meetings in Halsted Street Mission at the Stock Yards at South Chicago before closing his work in the city.

—The St. Paul dailies announce that Sam Jones and Sam Small, the revivalists, assisted by Mr. Excell, the Gospel singer, will begin services at the Exposition building, April 24, at 3 p. m. The building will be arranged so that it will seat at least 6,000 people. A lunch counter will be established near the entrance.

—Mrs. John P. Newman, wife of Rev. Dr. Newman, Washington, D. C., has accepted the Superintendency of the legal work of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union in America.

—Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost is succeeding grandly in his evangelistic labors in Cleveland, says the Evangelical Messenger. Daily and nightly the interest increases, and great crowds attend the services. On last Sunday evening the Music Hall, with seating capacity for 5,000 persons, was crowded on first floor, in all the galleries and on the stage, and more than a thousand were turned away who could not gain entrance. Ira D. Sankey, whose name needs no explanation, has now joined him, and the meetings are to be continued for some time to come, and during the present week will be conducted in the Euclid Avenue Presbyterian church.

—The new United Presbyterian church at Bellefontaine, Ohio, was formally set apart to the sacred purposes of religious worship on a late Sabbath. Drs. Carson and Moorehead, of the Xenia Seminary, took part in the exercises, both preaching on the occasion. Rev. Mr. Williamson is pastor of the church.

—Rev. J. P. Lytle writes to the Christian Instructor of a great revival in New Concord, Ohio, saying: "God has graciously visited and revived his people in New Concord, Ohio. A quiet but powerful work of the Holy Spirit has been in progress for nearly three weeks, which has resulted in the gathering of something over one hundred members into the United Presbyterian church while about fifty more have been gathered into other churches." Dr. Lytle does not add as he might that after assisting at New Concord his own church at Bloomfield was blessedly revived and many additions received.

—Rev. J. J. Thompson and wife and Miss F. Grace Allen expect to start the last of April for Inhambane, East Africa, to re-enforce Rev. Harry Agnew, Free Methodist missionary, who was left alone by the return of Rev. and Mrs. W. W. Kelley last year. Brother Kelley's health improves very slowly.

—Rev. E. F. Ward, Free Methodist missionary in India, has sold the mission property at Burhanpur and purchased a larger, more convenient mission house at Ellichpoor, Berar, India. Three missionaries compose the force at this place. They hope to fill a wider field than before.

GOSPEL WORK IN FLORIDA.

We conducted meetings this winter in Tarpon Springs, Curlew, Key Stone, Anclote, Saplinwoods, Clearwater, Yellow Bluff and Clearwater Keys. In some of these places we found nearly everybody dead in trespasses and sins; in others they seemed to know of no other religion than cold formalism, and we were told by the people living on the Keys that the Gospel had never been preached there.

We arrived in Tarpon Springs on Friday, and on Sunday I was invited to preach. When we entered the house of worship we found it filled with people. The Lord gave us one convert the first meeting at Tarpon Springs, and from that time on continued to bless our efforts. The largest number of converts in any one meeting was eighteen.

We held a two days' meeting during the last week in December, and at the close an old lady, whose hair was white with age, said she had been a Christian for over fifty years. Taking me by the hand as her face lit up with the joy within, she said,

"Bro. Catlin, this is the gladdest Christmas time of all my life." I felt within my heart that I was already paid for my labors.

The people there have need to be thankful that they are free from the great curse of secret societies. I heard of but one lodge of any kind, and that was an Odd-fellow lodge among the colored people. I think if there is any one sin this people is more guilty of than any other people I ever met it is the use of tobacco. Nearly everybody, saint and sinner, old and young, male and female, are supposed to use tobacco. I denounced the use of tobacco from the pulpit with the minister on one side and the local preacher on the other, both with tobacco in their mouths while I was talking. In every place where I held a series of meetings we got people terribly agitated on the subject and many gave up the habit. One of the officers of one of the churches got under conviction at the first meeting. He took the matter to the Lord and a few days afterwards testified in public that the appetite had entirely left him, but said it troubled him so for three days after he gave it up that he got no sleep. Another Christian man got up one evening in meeting and holding up a piece of plug tobacco said two weeks before he became convicted and asked the Lord to take away the appetite; several times a day he would take this plug out of his pocket and each time he would feel he did not want it until at last he was satisfied his appetite was gone and he had the victory.

At Clearwater Keys we found a rough, profane class of people. We held a meeting there Tuesday night and Wednesday. When we went there one man said he would rather catch fish than spend his time listening to a preacher. They fished all day Wednesday without any success. The man who on Tuesday did not want to hear a preacher, gave this testimony on Thursday morning, saying that "the day before was the first day in thirty years he had not taken the Lord's name in vain," and when asked why, said "he found no occasion to swear." The man who gets the love of God in his heart, though he toils all day long without success and temptations surround him, "finds no occasion to swear."

At one of our meetings a lady came to the altar having a little child in her arms. As she knelt at the altar a lady near by offered to take her baby, but the mother only hugged it the closer. I asked her why she did this, and she said it was because she wanted to give both herself and baby to the Lord. Just as we were closing the last meeting of this series, this lady got up from the front seat where she was sitting, and going back into the audience, she edged her way into the seat where her husband was sitting. With the baby in one arm and the other around her husband's neck, the tears running down her cheeks in streams, she plead with him to give himself to Jesus.

I would like to tell you of many more who received forgiveness of sins; of doubting Christians who became zealous workers for Christ; of quick-tempered, evil-passioned people who became meek and quiet under the influences of the Holy Spirit; of the sick who were healed in the name of the Lord, and the unhappy people who were made to rejoice with a "joy unspeakable and full of glory;" but I think the above will suffice to show that God is no respecter of persons, but wherever men from honest hearts call upon the name of our God they are saved, soul, body and spirit. Bless his holy name.

WM. E. CATLIN.

—Mr. Moody is co-operating with the Central W. C. T. U. for the re-establishment of the 3 o'clock gospel temperance meeting at Farwell Hall, which was so successfully carried on under the auspices of the Central Union for over nine years, but which was given up three years ago. Mr. Moody is greatly interested in the work and is doing all in his power to advance the cause. It is hoped that Major George Hilton, of Washington, D. C., will be secured in May to take charge of these meetings in place of Mr. Murphy. Until his arrival Mr. Moody and Miss Willard will lead the work.

—About one hundred and twenty have recently professed Christ in the Wharton Street Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, and in the North Presbyterian church eighty-one were received a few Sabbaths ago on confession of faith.

LITERATURE.

A HISTORY OF FRANCE from the earliest times to 1848. By M. Guizot and his daughter, Mme. Guizot De Witt. Translated by Robert Black. In eight volumes. Vols. IV. V.

These volumes bring us down in this great history to the opening of the French Revolution—the Convocation of the States General in 1789. They begin with the regency of Mary de Medici after the death of Henry of Navarre, in the early years of the 17th century. They, therefore, comprise the history of those most remarkable characters in the history of France, Richelieu and Mazarin, and of Louis XIV., the "Grand Monarch," whose voluptuous and magnificent reign was followed by the reaction of the First Republic and its scenes of blood. These volumes will be read with intense interest, and the reading public are under lasting obligations to Mr. Alden for publishing the work at a price within reach of all. We are glad to indorse the words of the historian, Benson J. Lossing: "By affording such a work at such marvelously low prices you are doing more for the intellectual elevation of the people, by the diffusion of sound literature, pure and wholesome, than any other man, or any institution, in our country."

Joseph Cook's Boston Monday lectures which have just closed have been one of the most noteworthy of the entire series which has been carried on for twelve years past in Tremont Temple. This grand hall, with its seating capacity of two thousand or more, has been filled every Monday at noon, and when it is considered that novelty and curiosity long ago ceased to draw for Mr. Cook an audience, it will be seen that he has a power and an eloquence that places him among the foremost platform men of this age. No one who has not been present at one of these midday lectures can estimate the high character of the men and women who fill the Temple to hear Mr. Cook. The course of lectures this year was devoted to the noble theme of "Current Religious Perils," and all the prominent theological questions of the day have been discussed in that way so peculiar to Mr. Cook.

The public who are interested in the forcible utterances of this lecturer will be pleased to know that this year, for the first time, the lectures are published in handsome pamphlet form, at a merely nominal sum, in order to meet the cost of printing. The course comprises eight pamphlets in large type, and the subscription price for the whole is only fifty cents; the publishers being the old printing house of Rand Avery Company, Boston.

Two articles on the Pharaohs, containing thirty illustrations, will appear in the May Century. The special subject is the Oppressor of the Israelites, Rameses the Great. Mr. Edward L. Wilson, who will be remembered as the author of "A Photographer's Visit to Petra," tells the romantic story of the discovery of the royal mummies, as he had it from the finder, Brugsch Bey. The second article, by Prof. J. A. Paine, is a study of the characters of the Oppressor and his daughter, the rescuer of Moses, as shown by their many monuments. Professor Paine inclines to the belief that Ramees was of Assyrian descent. Many of the illustrations are from photographs by Mr. Wilson.

The initial number of the American Magazine gives immediate promise of popularity, and is so far an advance upon the Brooklyn Magazine to which it succeeds, as almost to be a new enterprise altogether. A portrait of Francis Parkman, the historian of the precolonial period of the Mississippi and St. Lawrence valleys, forms the frontispiece. Professor Van Buren Denslow, late of the chair of law at Chicago University, contributes a sprightly illustrated article, describing some experiences in the Adirondacks before that region had become a camping-ground for pleasure-seekers. A conclusive answer to the communist theory that all land should be the property of the State and not of individuals, is presented in a powerful article entitled, "Is it a Crime to Own Land?" by John Philip Phillips, the author of "Social Struggles." The United States Senate has furnished material to Z. L. White, formerly Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, for a number of interesting sketches of Senators, with engraved portraits. The social life of literary men in Boston is pleasantly described by William H. Rideing, editor of the Youth's Companion. General Grant's habits as to the use of wine and spirits are stated by Rev. Dr. John P. Newman, who had an intimate acquaintance with the General, and was his spiritual adviser in his last illness.

The Cosmopolitan continues its finely illustrated series, "Life beneath the Crescent," by Emile Julliard. This second number is a very entertaining account of the mosques and religion of the Turks, their marriage and burial customs, festivals and "red tape." "American Patricians and Plebeians" is an Englishman's view of the classifications of society in our country. James B. Perkins, author of "France under Richelieu and Mazarin," sketches a part of the public life of Madame de Chevreuse under the title, "A Great Politician," and a short account of the National Library at Washington is given by Frank G. Carpenter.

The Library Magazine for April is a well made up number as the following from a long table of contents proves: The True Reform of the House of Lords, The White Mountains, The unanimity of the Jury, Early Explorations in America, The Centennial of the Constitution, The Sun's Heat, Earthquakes, A New Religion for the Future, The Scientific Basis of Anarchy, Healthy Fiction for the Young. An article by the English General Wolseley on the rebel General R. E. Lee is a remarkable exhibition of the sympathy of a certain class in England for the Southern rebellion and the slavery behind it.

LODGE NOTES.

The Grand Orient of France is proselyting in Mexico, and established a lodge named Patrie Humanite.

The Mexican Masonic press protests vigorously against this invasion of Mexican territory by the godless Masons of France, and Patrie-Humanite lodge is pronounced spurious.

There is a lodge in London, says the Masonic News, composed entirely of French Masons, admitting and proclaiming faith in the Grand Architect. This lodge was formed for the purpose of securing to French Freemasons resident in England the privilege of visiting English lodges, England having declared "non-intercourse" with the members of the Grand Orient of France. This lodge is under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England, and not, as might be supposed, under that of the Grand Orient of France.

Mr. Powderly thinks that the members of his order have no business to grumble because the General Executive Board has installed itself in such palatial quarters in Philadelphia. And in a recent "secret circular," which has been furnished to the press of the country with the usual punctuality, he takes his critics to task in a manner that is hardly calculated to allay the discontent at present existing in the order. The ground for criticism was the very general impression which seems to prevail among the Knights who are not members of the General Executive Board and whose salaries consequently were not raised at the recent convention of the Knights, that the present headquarters of the chiefs of the order possess a magnificence and splendor out of place for a labor organization, and that Mr. Powderly and his cronies have been squandering the funds of the order in the "reckless purchase of a palace among the capitalists and nabobs."—N. Y. Graphic.

Lodge organs announce that the Emperor William of Germany, who has just celebrated the 90th anniversary of his birth, was made a Mason in 1840, shortly before the death of his father, Frederick William III. of Prussia, in a special lodge in Berlin, by the authority of the three Berlin Grand Lodges, his father stipulating that he should not join any one lodge, but belong to every lodge in the kingdom, and assume the protectorate of them all, which he did.

The cable dispatches are at the pains to say that the English Grand Lodge of Good Templars has elected delegates to the Supreme Court at Saratoga.

A dispatch from Rome says the congregation of the Sacred College has decided in favor of the recognition of the Knights of Labor, in accordance with the report of Cardinal Gibbons. The American prelate will soon leave for London, where he goes to consult with Cardinal Manning upon questions connected with the Knights of Labor.

Prominent Knights of Labor make the statement that General Master Workman Powderly is soon to visit European cities for the purpose of organizing lodges of the order.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the more general application of it? Ay, there, the rab! Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and hearts that some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. It is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1828, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The declaration of a noble granite monument to free memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

PRICE: WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed, and his address viti—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument erected by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, the character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Hatley, on the "Freedom and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

IN THE COILS; OR— The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelical, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—Nationalist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-ribbed bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they see how it turns out."—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

HOME AND HEALTH.

A CURE FOR DANGEROUS WOUNDS.

The smoke of the woolen rags is a cure for the most dangerous wounds. A lady of my acquaintance ran a machine needle through her finger. She could not be released until the machine was taken to pieces. The needle had broken into her finger in three places, one of which was bent almost double. After repeated trials the pieces were extracted by pinchers, but they were very strongly imbedded. The pain reached to the shoulder, and there was every danger of lockjaw. The woolen rags were put over the coals, and she held her fingers, and in a very short time all the pain was gone and it never returned, though it was some little time before the finger healed. This is but one of the many instances of such cures, some of them taking place after several days from the time of the wound. Let woolen rags be kept sacredly and always at hand for wounds. The smoke and stench will fill the house, perhaps, but that is a trifle when the alternative is lockjaw, or even a long, painful sequel to a wound. Another instance was the wound made by an enraged cat, which tore the flesh from the wrist to the elbow and bit through the fleshy part of the hand. One ministration of the smoke extracted all the pain, which had been frightful.—Cor. Boston Transcript.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR STOMACH.—It cannot be repeated too often that the stomach is the fountain which supplies every part of the body. If the stomach is sick, the brain, heart, lungs, liver, bowels, kidneys, and spine are all sick. The trouble may all be felt in one spot; it may be the stomach itself, or it may be in the brain, or in a rheumatic muscle. It will be felt in the weakest place. Every link in the chain bears the same strain; only the weakest gives way.

ABOUT DIGESTION.—You probably eat too much, and hurt your digestion. It is not food swallowed, but food digested that produces flesh. If your digestion is shaky, shun pie, cake, pudding, sweetmeats, all desserts, and confine yourself to bread and mutton, with graham bread, potatoes, and other vegetables, eating of plain food less than your usual quantity.

DELICATE INDIAN PUDDING.—One quart of milk, two heaping tablespoonfuls of Indian meal, four of sugar, one of butter, three eggs, one teaspoonful of salt. Boil the milk in the double boiler; sprinkle the meal into it, stirring all the while. Cook twelve minutes, stirring often. Beat together the eggs, salt, sugar and half a teaspoonful of ginger. Stir the butter into the meal and milk. Pour this gradually on the egg mixture. Bake one hour.

COMMON POTATO SALAD.—Small potatoes, which are wasteful to peel and cook with larger ones, should be sorted out for salads. Boil them in their skins, and (while warm) peel and slice them thin. Mince chives, parsley, and onion, very fine, and stew it over the potatoes in the salad-bowl. Sprinkle with salt and pepper, pour over two or three spoonfuls of oil, and moisten the whole with vinegar and water mixed, that it may not be too sour. Chives or onion may, of course, be omitted. Several things are mixed with potato salad, both for flavor and appearance, such as pickled beetroot sliced, a fresh cucumber sliced as usual, a Dutch herring cut up small, or a few sardines minced. Only one of these things, be it understood, and it should be mixed with the potatoes before the oil and vinegar.

Wet nursing. says Dr. J. E. Winters, is a two-edged sword, as the probability of death during the first year of life is materially increased in both the foster child and the wet nurse's child. The results of maternal nursing versus wet nursing in 423 infants show mortality in infants nursed by the mother, 16 in 100; mortality among infants nursed by wet nurses in families, 28 in 100.

LEMONS AS MEDICINE.—The acid properties of lemons give them an astringent effect which is favorable toward overcoming congestion in the secretory apparatus of digestion. Further, the citric acid, unless it is neutralized by an excess of sugar, is useful in overcoming an excessive alkalinity that is producing derangements of function in the assimilating organs, and consequently interfering with the blood circulation. Lemonade, because of its acidity, exercises a cooling influence in febrile states and promotes nervous calm and sleep. In "bilious" troubles, the plethora following over-eating, lemonade is beneficial. For one with what is called bilious fever a diet of brown-bread and lemonade is refreshing and restorative.

Tender-hearted young lady.—"Oh, you cruel heartless little wretch! to rob those poor birds of their eggs." Wicked little boy—"Ho! That's the old mother-bird that you've got on yer bonnet. Guess she won't care."

Household hints: Ink stains on mahogany furniture will disappear if treated as follows: Procure a carpenter's chisel and gouge out the spots thus soiled. The holes may be filled with putty. To remove stains from character—inheriting a fortune of a million dollars.

FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND;

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEROP.

Introduction by REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of life; that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from the very core of Christian experience, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

"A THRILLING WARNING."

THE Man Traps of the City.

By THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons. It treats of

The Tiger and His Den. Cupe of Flame. The Scarlet Sin. Embettement.

The Devil's Printing Press. Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that few like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warning, where sin and crime are shown of their mark, robbed of the glamour with which they are surrounded by the puritan literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that is worth living, but as a life that is a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his failings lean to virtue's side."

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

The Christian's Secret

OR

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, while claiming to be a layman, understands the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverently devoted to its spirit, that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if needed, will make a man live better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Inter Ocean.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to disprove the theories of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with so interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations. We have failed to find a dry line from title-page to end."—Religious Liberator.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR-GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is the history of the unhappy seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canandaigua jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons' seizure and dragging in Lake Ontario to Fort Niagara, and his death in the hands of the mob. It is a story which is not only a lesson to the nation, but a warning to the world.

Attaches his affidavit to it. Following his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies.'"

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and publicist wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

FARM NOTES.

GARDENING FOR PLEASURE.

Gardening for pleasure, health and a knowledge of the vegetable world, are the highest inducements that can be set before one to lead to the study and practice of horticulture. The commercial gardener and fruit grower has all the difficulties common to other pursuits to contend with besides the many perplexing ones peculiar to his own. The profits of this industry, in its various branches, have been persistently set forth in a false and alluring light by many journals, and especially by traveling salesmen interested in the sale of various horticultural products. We would not attribute any intentional dishonesty to those who have thus bolstered the commercial horticultural movement for years, but hard facts, as they become known, show the error of their position. For one without experience and training to take up any branch of commercial horticulture is almost sure to be a courting of failure. On the other hand, one will seldom or never be disappointed who turns to the garden for recreation, or who seeks there the building up of over-strained nerves, or who would follow out to discover some of the innumerable secrets of the vegetable world that are to be found by the earnest and patient observer. It is the place for at least an hour or two every day for women, as a change from household duties, for professional men, editors, merchants, clerks, and all who may be engaged in-door, and especially sedentary, employments. More or less garden work should be engaged in every day and by every member of the family, wherever it is possible.—Vick's Magazine.

UNIQUE PLANTS FOR THE LAWN.

Prof. Popenoe gives much approval in the Industrialist to the Alantus and Angelica tree, or Hercules' Club as tropical looking objects on the lawn, when cut to the ground in the spring, and only one shoot allowed to grow. The Angelica tree should only be cut down in occasional years, as it is finest when in bloom, while the Alantus is offensive when flowering. Both these trees sucker freely, but on a lawn the sprouts are easily kept down. A handsome small tree, with similarly picturesque foliage, is the Feathered Sumac; and another, as fine, yet different, is the cut-leaved variety of Sambucus pubens, Red Berried Elder, strong young shoots of which look like purple-black horse plumes, and have a strikingly unique and fine appearance. This variety was discovered on Tassie Mountain, by a botanical party from State College, Pa. E. Waring of Tyrona, Pa., can probably supply a few cuttings. It does not sucker.—Vick's Magazine.

REMEDY FOR BEE STINGS.

Dr. G. O. Fraser, of Randolph, Ohio, says: "Seeing different remedies recommended for bee stings, I wish to say that I have tried alkalies, soda, ammonia, liquor potassae, honey, rub with an onion, bruised tobacco, etc., and with thirty years' experience can say that a small amount of oil of cinnamon, applied with a small straw, end of knitting needle, or small splinter, is worth more than all the rest. Use only a little, for it will blister."—American Medical Journal.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Knights Templar. Includes a historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of the lodge, its officers, and its members. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doebner, Past Master Unity, C. No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page plates of representations of the lodge room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1833 to 1835. With Mr. Adams' address as President of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most complete and accurate works extant, aside from the Exposition. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge room, dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened eyes and multiplied in cloth, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Rev. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

The governor of New York Tuesday vetoed the high license bill for New York and Brooklyn. The Pennsylvania House passed the Brooks high-license bill.

The Legislature of Wisconsin adjourned Friday sine die. The governor vetoed a number of bills, among them that making stock gambling by boards of trade, chambers of commerce, or other corporations or individuals a misdemeanor.

James F. Gleason, member of the Legislature from Chicago, was arrested at Springfield Friday night for drunkenness and jostling women on the street. He fought with the officers, and was with difficulty taken to the station.

Returns from Kansas elections show that a larger proportion of the women who registered voted than is common with male voters. The women not only voted but were voted for. In Argonia, Mrs. Dora Salter was elected mayor by a large majority. Mrs. M. A. Humphrey, wife of Judge Humphrey, of the Board of Railroad Commissioners, was elected a member of the school board in Junction City.

The bill prohibiting pool-selling and book-making at races, etc., was passed Tuesday in the Illinois House 102 to 8.

A bill providing for the execution of criminals in the State penitentiaries passed the Illinois Senate Thursday.

The Pennsylvania Senate passed the joint resolution proposing a woman suffrage constitutional amendment by a vote of yeas 27, nays 16. The Senate also adopted the resolution denouncing the Coercion bill now pending before the British Parliament, and extending the sympathy of the Pennsylvania Senate to Gladstone and Parnell in their efforts to secure the rights of Ireland.

The indictments, 73 in number, found in Chicago by the late special Grand Jury in the County Commissioner and warden cases, have been made public. They include 51 different persons. Another special Grand Jury is to be called for the May term of the Criminal Court to renew the "boulder" investigation. Another transaction that includes a forgery case has been exposed in connection with Commissioner Wren.

The wholesale jeweler house of Clapp & Davis, Chicago, failed last week, being closed by Deputy Sheriff Burke on confessions of judgment aggregating $137,557.40. The failure has many evidences of fraud.

The remains of President and Mrs. Lincoln were exhumed from their secret resting place in Oak Ridge Cemetery at Springfield, Ill., last Thursday, by members of the Lincoln Monument Association and the Lincoln Guard of Honor and reinterred under the north wing of the monument in a brick tomb, which was then cemented. The coffin containing the President's remains was opened, and the features were easily discernable. A guard will remain on duty until the cemented covering of the tomb hardens.

The Prohibitionists last week withdrew their protest against the count of amendment ballots cast in Detroit, which was submitted to the county canvassers yesterday, and will submit the question to the State Legislature. The reported vote was some 3,000 against the amendment.

Columbia College last week celebrated the 100th anniversary of the revival and confirmation by the New York Legislature of the royal charter granted in 1754 for the establishment of "a college of the Province of New York in the city of New York."

A number of arrests were made last week at Pittsburgh and along the line of the Panhandle railroad of freight train employees, who have for two years been stealing from the cars, the property taken being valued at $500,000. The finest cigars, silks, hosiery, musical instruments, wines, liquors, in fact, all kinds of portable merchandise had been purloined, sold to "fences," or pawned. The affair caused a great sensation at Pittsburgh. It is said that over 200 warrants have been issued.

In a riot between Hungarians, Poles, and Swedes at Denver, Col., April 10, one man was fatally shot and several badly wounded. Two houses were completely wrecked during the melee, the furniture and other utensils being broken and used as weapons. The police, armed with Winchester, quelled the riot, and landed thirty of the combatants in jail.

A destructive Western cyclone visited the immediate vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va., on Friday afternoon. The storm commenced at St. Clairsville, Ohio, extended ten miles west, and as far east as Wheeling. Everything in its path was swept away, but strange to say the loss of life is reported as being small. The damage is estimated at $1,000,000.

The business portion of Ainsworth, Iowa, was swept away by fire Friday afternoon, causing a loss of between $50,000 and $75,000. Twenty-seven buildings were destroyed, and many families rendered homeless.

The premature explosion of a blast at Buena Vista, Col., Thursday evening resulted in the killing of six men and the wounding of seven others.

The explosion of a barrel of varnish resulted in a fire Friday forenoon which destroyed the building at Milwaukee occupied by the Charles Baumbach Company, wholesale druggists. The total loss is about $170,000, with insurance of $90,000.

The greatest fire ever experienced in Dover, N. H., occurred Friday afternoon in the Cochecho print works. It will involve a loss of nearly $300,000, and will throw over 800 operatives out of employment for probably four to six months.

The St. Augustine Hotel, Edwards House, the old cathedral, one of the oldest buildings in America, Vedder's Museum, the court house, Welter's Hotel, and a number of smaller buildings at St. Augustine, Fla., were destroyed by fire Tuesday morning. The loss is placed at $250,000, with very small insurance.

Near Millbank, Kan., an entire family—father, mother, and four children—perished in a prairie fire.

A colored Baptist evangelist by the name of Williams, who has been holding revival meetings in De Soto, Mo., among his colored brethren, was taken from his house by five masked men on the night of April 12, and unmercifully beaten with hickory switches. He says they took turns, and kept up the flogging for an hour. Williams says he recognized a neighbor, who is a white man, as the leader of the gang.

While polling was progressing Tuesday in Jersey City the entire election board of the Eighth Precinct were arrested. A policeman made the discovery that the clerk was attempting to stuff the ballot-box. The four men were placed under bonds of $2,400 each.

Drouth in Wabash county, Indiana, is killing the wheat plant, and the meadows are reported brown and bare. In Central Illinois summer heat has prevailed the last week, and the absence of rain is alarming the farmers. The stock wells and streams are drying up.

Miss Shafer, the possessor of a luxurious head of hair, was seized Tuesday at her home in Pittsburgh by a padder, who compelled her to inhale chloroform, and while she was unconscious cut off her tresses close to her head.

The bursting of a large railway water-tank at Palatine, some 26 miles from Chicago, on Sunday afternoon killed five persons and seriously injured four others.

FOREIGN.

The extra military credits asked by the German Government amount to 134,000,000 marks. Of this 40,000,000 is for an increase of the army, 12,000,000 for new equipments, and the remainder for strategic railroads and improvements in fortresses.

A hotel in Amsterdam, which was crowded with guests who came here to join in the festivities in honor of the King's birthday, caught fire Thursday night and was entirely destroyed. Four of the inmates were killed and several sustained injuries of a more or less severe character.

The ameer of Afghanistan, in refusing to comply with a request from the governor of Badakhan for 15,000 troops, fearing a Russian attack, says that he must concentrate every soldier in the army around Herat, where a surprise is expected daily. He says English help may come too late or not at all, as the British Government may select Candahar as the best place to stop the Russian advance.

OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Edited and Enlarged. Paper covers, 3c. Cloth, 40c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffelfinger. Paper covers, 10c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. It refutes of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

Dr. Pentecost says that Cleveland is in danger of being numbered among the lost cities of the land. These lost cities in a moral point of view in his estimation are Cincinnati, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Buffalo and Toledo. Chicago is in the balances now, and a desperate struggle is going on to keep her from being utterly lost. He thinks that unless the Christian men of that city look the danger fairly in the face and come up to the help of the Lord unitedly, Cleveland is lost too beyond recovery.

The arrest of a young man named Simmons Saturday for having set on fire the Hotel Del Monte at Monterey gives a sharp significance to the theory of the Los Angeles Censor reprinted on our 11th page. The circumstances show that the plot had been carefully and deliberately planned and why should it not have been for revenge upon a saloon? It is well known that saloon-keepers have a dangerous business. They are always doubly armed for killing—with liquor and revolver—and saloon brawls are often fatal to them.

"Labor" day as celebrated last year was a day for the glorification of petty lodge dignitaries at the expense of poor men's homes. It will be so until reorganized and workingmen and employer share mutually in it. In New York it has been proposed to legalize it as a holiday. Of this the Independent says: "The proposition to create by law a Labor Day is simply a piece of demagogism that ought not to deceive any workingman who has common sense. Governor Hill suggested it in his message to the Legislature, and thereby added to the proof that he is a demagogue."

The Haddock trial has been transferred to Chicago, and justice may yet lay firm hand on the murderer. Arensdorf was tried for the murder, but one of the principal witnesses, Leavitt, was under suspicion. One of our Chicago dailies in the effort to get up a counter-irritation in favor of the saloon interest, accused Leavitt of a vile conspiracy against Arensdorf, and has been sued by him for libel. This trial may yet secure the conviction of Arensdorf. Judge Lewis is now the object of the bitter animosity of the Arensdorf crowd, who insult him in the street, because he was not so subservient as the jury to their will. These outcroppings of hate only hasten the overthrow of the liquor power and will make it more complete.

We are sorry to see in the United Presbyterian a strong apology for Good Friday and Easter on the ground that the doctrine and fact of the resurrection deserve a prominent place in pulpit instruction and if a certain time for this is not set apart by the authority of some pope, our pious and godly pastors will forget it! We hope the United Presbyterian pastors will resent such an insinuation of their disloyalty as it deserves. Dr. Howard Crosby, with all his temperance heresies, reasons strongly and truly upon this Easter matter, showing that the popular celebration has no foundation in Scripture and therefore should not be observed. Dr. Crosby is by no means singular in his judgment of this case.

CHARLES SUMNER.

[See page 8.]

Sabbath a week ago was the first quiet Lord's day Washington city has for a long time enjoyed. The District Commissioners perhaps wished to experiment with the moral sentiment of the city in enforcing a law so long in disuse as to be forgotten. The arrests for drunkenness as a natural consequence were about one-fourth the usual number. Last Sabbath the excise laws of New York and Brooklyn were brought out and enforced for once with some spirit. Saloons of every class, color and smell were treated with impartiality and vigor. Aristocratic hotels, Delmonico's, and the Water street dive found for once a level in the police court. There were 132 arrests for liquor-selling and ten times as many amazed drinkers who should be thankful for the authority that stretches out a hand to stop them a moment in their mad march to hell down the broad way of intoxication.

As we predicted, the socialistic-labor party are out with Powderly for his congratulation of Mayor Roche of this city. "He is not a Knight of Labor but a Knight of Capital," they cry. But whether they will carry their revolt to the point of separation is another question. The leaders of the so-called labor party here are not laborers, but uncasy, wrong-headed men, most all of whom own saloons, or would if able. The conservative element, who begin to fear the socialism of these leaders, have just made an ineffectual attempt to cast them off. The anarchist lodges have also concluded to disband, ostensibly because they were so beset with spies; but it may be found that it is only part of a plot to keep more sure control of the labor vote, in hope of carrying the city elections two years hence.

The expulsion of Hiram Lodge of Hartford by the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, and the determination of its members to maintain their position against all odds is making Masonry somewhat unpleasantly notorious, coming so soon after the Prudence Lodge performances in New York and Talmage's sermon. A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune Friday morning says: "It is believed that nothing has happened since the Morgan excitement which has had so great an effect upon Masonry as this, and the defiance which Hiram hurls against the Grand Lodge will surely result in the extinction of one of the organizations. There is much sympathy expressed by lodges all over the State for Hiram Lodge, and it is believed that she will come out ahead in her troubles."

THE GREAT QUESTION.

BY REV. B. A. IMES, VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE LATE NATIONAL CONGREGATIONAL COUNCIL.

Our colored people believe in religion, although the proportion of wholly irreligious men among them is much larger than is generally supposed. Many men of natural intelligence, and others having some education, are more and more repelled by the extravagant demonstrations often connected with religious worship.

I will not enlarge upon this. A people possessed of musical talent and a wealth of emotional capacity which calls for discipline, not suppression, except to guide it by intelligent ideas of God and his worship, are in need of redemption and deliverance. But whatever comes with Bible in hand, and a show of devotion to the religious idea, it is supposed must be good. Hence ministers without any inducement to investigation and without means for the same, and simply following others, take the secret society in good faith. It would inculcate morality. It would enjoin devotion to God. It would be the right hand of influence for the church. It would give each minister aid in personal matters, secure him friends even from the "mammon of unrighteousness," and in many ways make him a stronger, wiser, more privileged man.

Then another argument is used. A pastor, well known for his Christian zeal and personal integrity, said to me a few days ago, "Men in the church and out of it have personally laid before me the duty of entering the lodge in order to build up my church." One whom I knew to be an ungodly man and a gambler, was specially urgent, and was free to speak of the power of the lodge and what they could do for or against a minister when they were minded to use their power. When I heard his story, I said, Before I shall go in and be bound by the lodge in order to get support to serve the Lord, I will make my living by my own hands. I need all my time and strength for the church, and cannot do justice to its cause even then; and when a man like you comes talking to me in that way, I feel like saying, "Get thee behind me, Satan." This in substance is the expression of opinion which he gave, and I would venture the assertion that very few intelligent pastors among our people are ignorant of the powerful tendency of the lodge to secularize the churches by bringing ungodly men into places of influence, and to a recognition of fellowship and authority among church members and ministers.

But the obligations they have taken, blindfolded and ignorant of what they were binding themselves to, hang over them. They have learned that the lodge system is a despotism which assumes to command its subjects in the interest of a remorseless and selfish power whose ulterior aim and working is not a common good for humanity, but influence, advantage, gain, for those who become "grand masters" and grand office-bearers of various kinds. Hence, the importance of reaching the higher degrees.

A man who entered a certain order, which is very popular at the South, says, "I was blindfolded and entirely divested of clothing. The bandage was taken from my eyes, and I was told to look at the skeleton at the bottom of the grave just before me and 'see the fate of the man who revealed the secrets of our order.' Then the candidate was commanded to pray. "But I am not a praying man; I can't pray." "You must pray," they insisted, and to his own disgust, and with the consciousness of his absurd, ridiculous and blasphemous attitude he made the attempt to pray.

Of course there are ministers who witness such scenes, and how an honest man can hold his peace I do not know. Had we taken a thousand oaths to what we supposed to be good and right, and then find to our sorrow and disgust that it was false to truth and abominable in practice, when regarded in the light of God's Word, why should we consent to carry about a conscience which fears men rather than God? If I have been deceived in a supposedly good institution, shall I not warn others?

In view of these things it seems to me that the recent Christian congress held in Chicago was an event of vastly more importance to us all than a Presidential nominating convention or even a National Council which would not consider the relation of the secret lodge to the kingdom of Christ. The Advance, our church paper, brings us hardly a word about the congress or its proceedings. The Golden Censor of Rockford, near Chicago, a paper which cannot be excelled for many good qualities, has not a syllable about the meeting. It is sound on the liquor question. It discusses the labor question. Its last issue has a remarkable article on "Profanity in America," and yet I do not remember having read a line in that good paper coming from so near Chicago, bearing upon this great subject of secret orders, involving their initiates in such horrid oaths. Not a word about the Chicago congress, and yet such men as Dr. Goodwin, Pres. Fairchild of Berea, Rev. John G. Fee, and many prominent ministers and educators were present and spoke in that assembly.

In the recent years the old line Abolitionists have been growing wonderfully in honor, as their history is reviewed and their noble achievements recounted. I cannot find the name of one of those men, living or dead, who was not opposed to the secret lodge, just as to American slavery. Statesmen, ministers, lawyers, editors and business men, they contended for the freedom of the slave, and likewise for that freedom of conscience which, as it seemed to them, the secret lodge system craftily takes away. Only imagine Lundy and Lovejoy, Garrison, Sumner, Douglass and Seward, and the rest, blindfolded, haltered, denuded and swearing to "always conceal and never reveal," etc.! And what a heritage of liberty the nation enjoys to-day, because under God such men could not, would not be slaves in mind and hold their peace on the great question of the hour! They were not servile. They had prophetic forecast, and from the eloquence of Phillips at Faneuil Hall to the jail and the gallows of John Brown at Charlestown, Virginia, they ceased not to plead for humanity in chains. And may we not to-day hope and pray for a release of our religious press and the pulpit from the fear of the lodge?

Our people need light. There is a demand for open discussion. The secret lodge is either good or bad. Multitudes testify from experience that it is essentially bad. Make all due discrimination and still there remains the method of force, the power of fear, the lash of revenge. Were it not for these things our religious and secular press would treat the lodge question as they do all other questions. Organized labor has seized this weapon of despotic power; the issue is sharpening, the harvest is ripening.

Meanwhile, misguided men, deluded men, and men overborne by this tyrant, demand the light of truth. There is a large class to whom invective and denunciation would not apply if even in place. They are blinded and deceived. They are strongly biased by various influences. They are enslaved. Argument, testimony, clothed in all the power of truth, will open many eyes and save many from a terrible bondage.

NEUTRALITY: WHAT IS IT?

BY REV. J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF WEST AFRICA.

There is no standing still in life. There is always either a conscious progression, or an unconscious retrogression. Neutrality, like its relative, zero, exists only in the imagination; for in reality it is found to exist nowhere. The idea of being neither for nor against, is contrary to human nature. The man who pretends to be neither for nor against certain principles has his private opinion or feeling, which is either for, or totally against it. Hence, our Saviour says, "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad. Neutrality is hypocrisy. It is a double-sightedness, which is destined to result in total blindness.

One of the most abominable works of darkness which is combating with the kingdom of Christ is the secret association; and yet some Christian men believe that they are innocent by being neutral in its opposition. Let us remember that neutrality is hypocrisy. Was Pilate innocent when he made himself neutral in the murder of Christ? When our Saviour was brought before him, his conduct was a vacillation between justice and selfishness. Being a Roman governor, and a stranger in a Jewish city, he thought himself in danger, or his position at stake, if he should oppose the decision of an infuriated mob of the Jews led by their Sanhedrim; and as in those days, so it is now, "Vox populi, vox dei." He felt himself compelled to please the multitude in order to maintain his honor and reputation. At one time he said, "I find no fault in him;" but at the same moment, "I will therefore chastise him and release him." But why punish an innocent man? The answer is, to please the Sanhedrim, to satisfy the mob, to keep his position, and, we might add, to please the devil. He, in different ways, tried to set his conscience at liberty by attempting to shift the responsibility of the crime from himself, or to be neutral in its perpetration. He tried to lay it on Herod, but Herod threw it back on him. He took water and washed his hands before the multitude, solemnly protesting, "I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it."

This is the effect of neutralism; and neutral men, wherever they are found (especially those who would conceal their opinions to gain the wealth and favors of the world), whether in the pulpit, on the seat of justice, or in legislative halls, are generally victims of cowardice and selfishness, and unwilling tools of every plot and insurrection.

The Jews knew what sort of a man Pilate was. They knew that he loved his position, fame, and wealth, better than truth and justice. So they touched him in a sensitive place by saying, "If thou let this man go, thou art not a friend of Cæsar." Justice received a fatal blow, and "Pilate released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will."

How many innocent men have been murdered in this our day, with the shout, "If thou let this man go, thou art not a member of our lodge?" How many murderers like Barabbas have been set free, or sheltered from justice because they are Masons? How many churches in America have taken a neutral standpoint on the question of secret orders, because—opposing them will deprive them of their influence with the multitude, and diminish their wealth?

Neutrality is hypocrisy. Must the church of Christ sit quietly gazing at the power of darkness, which has found its way from Europe to America, and is now working its desolation in Africa, rendering more fearful the darkness of that continent, and, like Pilate, tell the lodges, "See ye to it?" See ye to murder? See ye to insurrections? See ye to the destruction of laws and liberty? See ye to the use of dynamite and pistols? See ye to profanity and blasphemy? And will they be truly innocent? No! Your hands will, like his, be stained with blood. You are accomplices in the crimes. For, says an eminent writer, "If we permit evil we have the power to prevent, we are verily as guilty as though we were the perpetrators of the evil." We cannot stand aside and let things take their course in this world. We cannot take our position on some lofty eminence, and from thence watch the struggle between truth and error as it goes on in the world, and satisfy ourselves with pronouncing a severe, sarcastic judgment. We must engage in the fight. We cannot creep out of our responsibility and stand aloof, and solemnly declare that we are innocent. A policy of non-intervention is an hypocritical one when adopted in the questions of morality and truth.

We may fancy sometimes with Pilate, that we have done our duty, or fear the consequences if we hold out any longer, and stand aside, and think to pass the guilt to other people, by saying, "See ye to it." We may wash our hands of the whole matter, and solemnly protest, "I am innocent." It is a false plea. Our guilt remaineth.

I have had several conversations with Christian ministers in Africa on the subject of Freemasonry, and the best reason assigned for encouraging it, is that it exists in England and America, and was brought out by Christian men from the two civilized continents. I am prepared to prove to a Christian Mason, that Freemasonry is the same with the African, heathenish, secret institutions, in its origin, rites, and ceremonies; and that the introduction of Freemasonry into Africa is an introduction of heathenism with Christianity.

Correct this evil at home, and then give us that light which hath made your country great, but not the darkness which may eventually prove its ruin. Where is ancient Persia with her powerful secret order of Magi? Egypt with her magicians? Rome and Athens with their mystical Eleusinian orders? Where is the city of superstitious Sardanapalus with 15,000 towers, sculptures, golden palaces, temples, spacious parks and troops of mailed warriors? Because their actions were dark

"Eternal ruin swallows all."

"PHRE MASSEN."

BY SENEX.

In the Cynosure of February 18, 1886, under the head of "Paganism Confessed," certain statements are given from the pen of a "writer in the Detroit Freeman" and a "Bro. Little," a "G. H. P." (Grand High Priest), which, if true—and from such "High" authority they must be true—they must on many minds shed some new "light on Masonry." The fact that they may have dispensed this favor unwittingly, or given "more light" than they intended, detracts nothing from its value, but rather enhances and improves it.

They tell us that the word "Freemason" is evidently borrowed from the Egyptian-Coptic language. "It is not," say they, "an English word, nor is our order of English origin.... It is not found in the classic tongues of Greece, or Rome, nor in that of Syria, Tyre, or Hebrew. More ancient than all, it comes from Egypt.... from the wonderful land of the pyramids.... where the arts and sciences were preserved by a close and secret organization, where they created a mystic language, and communicated the grand secrets in allegories known only to the initiated, and communicated orally, from one Hierophant to another in their secret temples." He adds: "Among those ancient sages the sun was an object of veneration, as the visible power of life and light. In their language it was called Phre, the sun; Mas, a child; Phre Massen, children of the sun; hence, being born of light, they called themselves Phre Massen, or Sons of Light." And so this mystic word, Freemasonry, though now common, even upon "cowan" lips, is after all an Anglicized perpetuation of the classic, allegorical name of an ancient "close and secret organization!" What a magnificent discovery! How imposing! How sublime!

Having learned from Masonic authority the "maiden name" of Freemasonry, and something of the place and circumstances of her birth, let us now examine the foundation of some of the claims set up for her in, as they assume, the very maidenhood of her existence. And first, the chief title of her membership,

"SONS OF LIGHT."

As one conspicuous feature in their character, we are told that "they worshiped the sun." They were idolaters. Thus one fell stroke of the Masonic pen has scattered to the winds that blasphemous, Masonic lie that "Masonry is of God." It has shown that in no sense is that institution a Christian organization. More, it has relegated that great "lying wonder" to the shades of that "close and secret organization," its ancient pagan fountain, from whose loathsome character have been copied the chief elements of its very being! This worship of the sun was the grand stepping-stone from which those recondite Egyptian worthies descended to the lowest depths of moral and spiritual degradation. Says Rollin, on "Manners and Customs of the Egyptians" (chap. 2, sec. 1): "Never were any people more superstitious than the Egyptians...." "For this they are ingeniously reproached by the satirist."

"Who has not heard, where Egypt's realms are named,
What monster gods her frantic sons have framed?
Here Isis, gorged with well-grown serpents; there
The crocodile commands religious fear;
Where Memnon's statue magic strings inspire
With vocal sounds which emulate the lyre
And Thebes—such, Fate, are thy disastrous turns—
Now prostrate o'er her pompous ruins mourns,
A monkey god—prodigious to be told—
Strikes the beholder's eye with burnished gold.
To goddess here blue Triton's scaly herd,
The river progeny, is there preferred.
Through towns Diana's power neglected lies,
Where to her dogs aspiring temples rise.
And should you looke or onions eat no time
Would expiate the sacrilegious crime.
Religious nations sure and blest abodes,
Where every orchard is o'errun with gods!"

—Juvenal, Satire XV.

Such is the evidence in support of the claim of those ancient worthies to the appellation (self-assumed) of "Sons of Light." What an illustration of the brazen impudence of Freemasonry is her pompous assumption of that appellation, as she flaunts it in the face of an enlightened Christian public! But "more light" awaits us.

THE MYSTERIES OF ISIS.

Those mysteries were that "close and secret organization," that faithful and exclusive conservator of "the arts and science," and also—under the sanction and seal of oath-bound secrecy—of the religion, the religious observances, and the morals, such as they were, of the Egyptians. Says Appleton's Cyclopedia, art. Mysteries: "The Ancient Mysteries were certain ceremonies [observances more correctly] in the ancient religion, to which only the initiated were admitted. They may be traced in the early Orient, in the rites of Isis and Osiris in Egypt, in the Persian Mithraic solemnities, and in the festivals introduced into Greece with the worship of Bacchus and Cybele; and they lingered through the decline of Rome, and perhaps left their traces in the ceremonies of Freemasonry." These statements accord with that of Hislop (Two Babylons, p. 19), that "whatever circumstantial diversities there might be, in all essential respects, these mysteries in the different countries were the same."

So popular in Egypt were the Mysteries of Isis, and so general was the connection of the adult population with them that, says the Masonic Library, edited by Rev. George Oliver, D. D. (Vol. 2, p. 15), "a public odium was studiously cast on those who refused the rites. They were considered as profane wretches, unworthy of public employment, or private confidence. . . . They were considered as marked men. . . . The everlasting pains of Tartarus was the doom pronounced upon them."

Again (Ibid, Vol. 2, Lect. 1, p. 18), "The whole island of Philæ was dedicated to Isis. A superb temple was erected there, which covered almost its entire surface. . . . Throughout the whole of this famous island, where, anciently, the solemn and mysterious rites of Isis were celebrated with such distinguished pomp and splendor, there appeared to Mr. Norden, a late explorer, to run subterranean passages." He was prevented from exploring those passages "by the filth and rubbish which filled and choked them." "It was there, in those gloomy caverns, where superstition, at midnight, waved her flaming torch, that the solemn hymns of initiation resounded, and there that the chosen priests of Isis, in holy ecstasy, chanted her sweetest symphonies!"

ORIGIN AND OBJECT OF THOSE MYSTERIES.

Like the mysteries of all other pagan nations, ancient or modern, those of the Egyptian Isis were an offshoot from the ancient Chaldean mysteries (Two Babylons, pp. 19-22).

In the founding of this parent stock of the ancient mystic family, the object was two-fold:

1. The secret establishment of a hierarchy, a system of priestly domination, by which the people were bound, neck and heel, to the priests. (Hislop, p. 11.) This feature in the character of the mystic Chaldean hierarchy was copied, most faithfully, by their Egyptian imitators, "those chosen priests of Isis," and this, in secular, as well as in ecclesiastical affairs. Says Oliver (Mas. Libr. Vol. 2, Lect. 1, p. 19): "Invested by the popular superstition with tremendous powers, not only over the destinies of men, but of executing the will and pleasure of both infernal and celestial deities, these potent priests . . . beheld even monarchs crouching at their feet and submitting to their arbitrary, or wanton inflections, from which there was absolutely no appeal."

The penalty for revealing those mysteries was death and that penalty was unsparingly inflicted whenever the author of such revelation was discovered. (Two Babylons, p. 476. See also Potter's Antiquities, vol. 1, Eleusinia, 354. Also Rollin's Ancient History, vol. 1, Introduction, Feast of Eleusis.) This same penalty is a part of Masonic organic law and its execution, though of course secret, is by no means uncommon. In fact, that terrible despotism which reigned supreme in those ancient mysteries is copied, preserved, it still reigns, fresh, vigorous and unrelenting, fierce, murderous as in ancient times, in their modern duplicate, Freemasonry! For proof of this statement, witness the long record of Masonic interference with the legislative, judicial and executive branches of our government, State and national, as in the murder of Morgan and the acquittal of his murderers, the acquittal of Andrew Johnson when tried and proved guilty on impeachment for high treason before the American Senate, of the "Star Route" thieves, all of whom though proved guilty were acquitted, to their own great astonishment and that of the court and the whole nation—all which acquittals and many others were brought about, directly or indirectly, by Masonic influence. The late boast of the Pennsylvania Grand Lodge that they—and by implication all other Masonic Grand Lodges—owe allegiance to no civil jurisdiction or authority, State or national, be it legislative, judicial, or executive, and that their authority over all their subordinate lodges supersedes all civil authority of whatever name or description, shows that Masonry is not merely a malignant, anarchistic element in our body politic, but like those ancient mysteries a bold, determined usurper, stealthily yet persistently arrogating to herself all authority, all prerogative even, over every "self-evident" right or claim or interest or duty among mankind! It fully confirms and establishes the statement that she is but the baneful, malignant counterpart, embodiment even, of some of the worst elements in the character of those ancient, self-styled "Phre Massen"—Just to this the horrible oaths taken by the initiate—add as by the ancient "Mystics"—at his entrance and at every successive step, or degree, in his upward (?) progress by which he is bound tighter and tighter, body and soul, for time and too often for eternity, and we have before us a spectacle of abject, unreasoning servility which battles the power of uninspired tongue or pen adequately to describe. Surely, here is one element in the character of Masonry on which she may justly claim affinity with her ancient Egyptian, mystic, pagan namesake!

Second. The other feature in this great scheme, and which was to be wholly subordinate and tributary to the first, was the secret concoction and the ultimate propagation among mankind of a system of paganism, whose chief object of worship, whose "great God of the Universe" was to be the sun! (Two Babylons, p. 11.) Again (idem, p. 264), "In that country the disk or image of the sun was represented in all their temples, and the sovereign and his family, with all the people, worshipped it." "Near the small town of Babain, in upper Egypt, there still exists in a grotto a representation of a sacrifice to the sun where two priests are seen worshipping the sun's image." Thus like every other essential feature in Chaldean mysteries this was faithfully adopted by the Egyptian "Phre Massen" and from them Freemasonry has so far copied it as to emblazon a figure of the sun upon much if not all her official literature and upon at least some of her senseless, gaudy trumpery. As if to show that she accepts the pagan idea that "the sun is the great God of the Universe" she inserts the initial "G." (God) in the center of her pretty picture and thus flaunts it before the world as at once sure evidence and token of her piety and her paganism! This same representation of the sun with its most significant initial adorns too the altars in her lodge rooms.

By thus aping those ancient mysteries she practically assumes for herself both their paganism and a positive, joint responsibility for all its inevitably resultant pollutions and abominations!

But let us hear still further from our most worshipful G. H. P." He says, "These Sons of Light, or of the Mysteries of Osiris and Isis, inculcated and practiced purity and perfection of body, control of the passions and advancement of the intellect, devoting themselves to the study of all acquirements to benefit the race."

Now, thus equipped, as we have seen were those illustrious "Phre Massen"—whose teachers and leaders were "those chosen priests of Isis"—for the teaching and enforcement of those lessons of "purity and perfection," how natural, how certain, that in those sacred "secret temples," where the worship of Isis was celebrated with such great pomp and solemnity, that there must have been the very "Holy of Holies," such a fountain, such an atmosphere of "purity and perfection," as would make that land of Egypt, bathing as she was in the meridian effulgence of those "close and secret" mysteries, the very "garden of the Lord." But, alas, alas, for the fallibility of even a "Grand High Priest" and he too a "Grand" type of the mystic genus "Phre Massen!"

BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM.

That very flattering description of the "purity and perfection" of "those ancient sages" is fearfully eclipsed by the wiser and more truthful statements of his learned Masonic rival. Says Oliver, (Mas. Library, vol. 2, sec. 6, pp. 88-9.) in a note on the authority of Herodotus, "All the female votaries of Mylitta, who was . . . Isis, without excepting even the most dignified virgins, were obliged to prostitute themselves, at least once in their lives, in the porch of the temple as an indispensable act of devotion, without which they were accounted as polluted or unclean!" "Such practices were esteemed honorable among Egyptian women, and those addicted to them used to wear a bracelet about their ankles as a badge of honor!"

"Were obliged to prostitute themselves as an indispensable act of devotion, without which they were accounted as polluted or unclean." This compulsion, and that within the sacred precincts of the temple itself, to such degradation, this shameful repudiation and ostracism of one who should maintain, inviolate, her own integrity and virtue, this honorable estimate of those abominable practices among Egyptian women reveals a state of standard of morals, both individual and national, among both sexes and all classes of the Egyptians, utterly incompatible with that "purity and perfection" so flippantly claimed for those "Phre Massen" by our very illustrious G. H. P. It shows that "those ancient sages," in common with that whole people were "steeped to the very lips" with the foulest moral defilement, a corruption which utterly defies the power of language fittingly to portray! All this through the combined yet covert influence of both laic and sacerdotal "Phre Massen," whose piety was idolatry and whose morality, whose "purity and perfection" was tyranny and lust!

Much more might be added from other and entirely authentic sources, but enough. Our learned Masonic instructor, he of the Masonic Library, has done the business. He has told much more than is here quoted from him. He has waved high his flaming torch and shed a vast flood of light upon those ancient "mysteries" and thus evidently though perhaps indirectly, and it may be unwittingly, upon their modern antitype or counterpart, Freemasonry! Yet, in the very face of these facts, our redoubtable G. H. P. shamelessly boasts, "Now this is Freemasonry; we are true Sons of Light!" That is, this old, blood-stained paganism, tyranny and lust—this is Freemasonry! Surely such a boast from such authority sheds a "light on Masonry," that vile sorcery of modern times, which not only reveals her true character but which ought to undeceive and alarm those who, "by the multitude of her enchantments," are "led captive by her at her will."

How can any true Christian remain, even for a moment, within her foul embrace, much more minister at her altars?

SUMNER AND THE ANTI-SLAVERY STRUGGLE.

FROM THE EULOGY OF SENATOR SCHURZ, BOSTON, APRIL 29TH, 1874.

This was one of the striking peculiarities of Mr. Sumner's character, as all those know who knew him well. Neither was he conscious of the stinging force of the language he frequently employed. He simply uttered what he felt to be true, in language fitting the strength of his convictions. The indignation of his moral sense at what he felt to be wrong was so deep and sincere that he thought everybody must find the extreme severity of his expressions as natural as they came to his own mind. And he was not unfrequently surprised, greatly surprised, when others found his language offensive. . . .

What appeared a perplexing puzzle to other men's minds was perfectly clear to him. His method of reasoning was simple; it was the reasoning of religious faith. Slavery is wrong, therefore it must and will perish; Freedom is right, therefore it must and will prevail. And by no power of resistance, by no difficulty, by no disappointment, by no defeat, could that faith be shaken. For his cause, so great and just, he thought nothing impossible, everything certain. And he was unable to understand how others could fail to share his faith. . . .

Ah! what a lesson in this for the American people; a lesson learned so often, and, alas! forgotten almost as often as it is learned! Is it well to discourage, to proscribe in your public men that independent spirit which will boldly assert a conscientious sense of duty even against the behests of power or party? Is it well to teach them that they must serve the command and interest of party, even at the price of conscience, or they must be crushed under its heel, whatever their past service, whatever their ability, whatever their character may be? Is it well to make them believe that he who dares to be himself must be hunted as a political outlaw who will find justice only when he is dead? That would have been the sad moral of his death had Charles Sumner died a year ago.

Let the American people never forget that he has always been the independent spirit, the all-defying sense of duty which broke the way for every great progressive movement since mankind has a history; which gave the American colonies their sovereignty and made this great Republic; which defied the power of slavery and made this a Republic of freemen; and which—who knows—may again be needed some day to defy the power of ignorance, to arrest the inroads of corruption, or to break the subtle tyranny of organization in order to preserve this as a Republic. And therefore let no man understand me as offering what I have said about Mr. Sumner's course during the last period of his life as an apology for what he did. He was right; before his own conscience and needs no apology. Woe to the Republic when it looks in vain for the men who seek the truth without prejudice and speak the truth without fear, as they understand it, no matter whether the world be willing to listen or not! Alas, for the generation that would put such men into their graves, with the poor boon of an apology for what was in them noblest and best! Who will not agree that, had power or partisan spirit which prosecuted him because he followed higher aims than party interest, ever succeeded in subjugating and holding him after its fashion against his conscience, against his conviction of duty and sense of right, he would have sunk into his grave a miserable ruin of his great self, wrecked in his moral nature, deserving only a tear of pity. For he was great and useful only because he dared to be himself all the days of his life; and for this you have, when he died, put the laurel upon his brow.

TO CHARLES SUMNER.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

If I have seemed more prompt to censure wrong
Than praise the right; if seldom to thine ear
My voice hath mingled with the exultant cheer
Borne upon all our nothern winds along;
If I have failed to join the exultant throng
In wide-eyed wonder that thou standest strong
In victory, surprised in thee to find
Brougham's scathing power with Canning's grace combined;
That he for whom the ninefold Muses sang,
From their twined arms a giant athlete sprang,
Barbing the arrows of his native tongue
With the spent shafts Latona's archer flung,
To smite the Python of our land and time,
Fell as the monster born of Crissa's slime,
Like the blind bard who in Castalian springs
Tempered the steel that clove the crest of kings,
And on the shrine of England's freedom laid
The gifts of Cumæ and of Delphi's shade—
Small need hast thou of words of praise from me,
Thou knowest my heart, dear friend, and well canst guess
That, even though silent, I have not the less
Rejoiced to see thy actual life agree
With the large future which I shaped for thee
When, years ago, beside the summer sea,
White in the moon we saw the long waves fall
Baffled and broken from the rocky wall,
That to the menace of the brawling flood,
Opposed alone its massive quietude,
Calm as a Fate with not a leaf nor vine
Nor birch-spray trembling in the still moonshine,
Crowning it like God's peace. I sometimes think
That night-scene by the sea prophetic—
(For Nature speaks in symbols and in signs,
And through her pictures human fate divines)—
That rock wherefrom we saw the billows sink
In murmuring light, uprising, clear and tall
In the white light of heaven, the type of one
Who, momentarily by Error's host assailed,
Stand strong as Truth, in greaves of granite malled;
And tranquil fronted, listening over all
The tumult, hears the angel say: "Well done!"

BY H. W. LONGFELLOW.

Garlands upon his grave,
And flowers upon his hearse
And to the tender heart and brave
The tribute of this verse.

His was the troubled life,
The conflict and the pain,
The grief, the bitterness of strife,
The honor without stain.

Like Winkler he took
In his manly breast
The sheaf of hostile spears and broke
A path for the oppressed;

Then from the fatal field
Upon a nation's heart
Borne like a warrior on his shield—
So should the brave depart.

Death takes us by surprise,
And stays our hurrying feet;
The great design unfinished lies,
Our lives are incomplete.

But in the dark unknown
Perfect their circles seem,
Even as a bridge's arch of stone
Is rounded in the stream.

Alike are life and death,
When life and death survives,
And the uninterrupted breath
Inspires a thousand lives.

Were a star quenched on high,
For ages would its light,
Still traveling downward from the sky,
Shine on our mortal sight.

So when a great man dies,
For years beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him lies
Upon the paths of men.

SUMNER NOTES.

HIS RELIGIOUS VIEWS.

A discussion respecting the religious views of Senator Sumner having arisen in Providence, R. I., a correspondent of the Journal of that city, writing from Boston, says:

"Will you allow me space to say in refutation of a statement so unjust to Mr. Sumner's memory that almost the last thing he did before leaving for Washington to return no more was to make an address in the Church of the Disciples, Boston, in which with profound and even tearful emotion he spoke of the love of Christ as no man could speak who had not long and intimately known that love, and urged upon his auditors their acceptance of Him as a Saviour, in terms which made a lasting impression upon at least one who was present."

GOD AND THE STATE.

In 1878, M. Laboulaye, the celebrated French Republican and author, recorded in a letter to a friend in this country the impressions he received during a short acquaintance with Mr. Sumner. One day he says he asked the Senator his opinion of Leon Gambetta. "I found him," Mr. Sumner replied, "an amiable and intelligent man, who appeared to be animated by the best intentions. But it seemed to me that the political education of M. Gambetta was very incomplete, and that he had much to learn before he should be fit to govern such a country as France. I said to him on departing: 'I am not French; I am not well enough acquainted with your people to say what line of policy suits them. But you wish to found a republic without religion. In America we should consider such an attempt chimerical and doomed to certain disaster.'" In remarkable contrast with the speeches of the statesmen of our day, Sumner's addresses abound in reverential appeals to the authority and law of God; and his comparatively frequent, sincere, devout, and yet natural use of the name of God is deeply impressive.

PEACE AND WAR.

Charles Sumner's introduction to public life was by means of his 4th of July address, 1845, in Boston on "The True Grandeur of Nations," a plea for the settlement of international disputes by arbitration. One who heard this oration writes to the Chicago Tribune, "For two hours he spoke, without referring to his notes, as has always been his custom, but his subject was distasteful to a large portion of his hearers; it was not the feast to which they were usually invited on such occasions; in other words, it lacked the 'blood and thunder' element of Fourth of July orations and spoke only of 'peace.' Though more than thirty years have elapsed I recall that occasion as one of the most enjoyable of my life." Sumner's biographer, Pierce, says of this address: "For a considerable time it was the frequent topic of society as well as of the public journals. No American tract or address has probably ever had so wide a circulation in Great Britain. Its questionable propositions so startled the public that they commanded the more attention for its unmistakable truths. Its style, less academic than Everett's, less weighty than Webster's, glowed as theirs never glowed with moral enthusiasm." Mr. Sumner maintained to the last this statesmanlike, Christian view of war. His resolution to remove the names of battles from regimental flags, for which the Massachusetts legislature passed a resolution of hasty, ill-advised and most unjust censure, but Sumner lived to be fully exonerated by the same body. In the Franco-Prussian war Mr. Sumner sided with the Germans, for whom he had a great admiration. Although he pitied France he rejoiced in her defeat as one step toward the potitcal millennium of a universal republic with liberty and equality all over the world. His personal contempt for Napoleon III. whom he met once, was great, and was shared by a number of European statesmen. After his downfall Mr. Sumner urged upon Bismarck with all the weight of his great influence, that the German government should not make such demands for indemnity of money or territory as should be forever a menace and pretext for another war of revenge, but that the terms of peace should be the disarmament of the French nation, whose martial spirit had so often and so long embroiled Europe in war. The wisdom of this advice can now be plainly understood. France disarmed, the other European nations would have had little pretext for their immense and oppressive armaments.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Beside his emphatic and earnest condemnation of the secret lodge to Samuel D. Greene, Mr. Sumner, in a brief speech April 6th, 1853, supported a resolution by S. P. Chase, against secrecy in the proceedings of the Senate. In this speech he said: "The genius of our institutions requires publicity. The ancient Roman, who bade his architect so to construct his house that his guests and all that he did could be seen by the world, is a fit model for the American people." In his great speech "The Crime against Kansas," in May, 1856, Mr. Sumner referred to the "Kansas Legion," a secret society "existing in the fantastic brains" of a few persons to promote the Free State cause, as "a poor mummery of a secret society," and added: "Secret societies, with extravagant oaths, are justly offensive." The Kansas Legion never had any but a paper existence. It was never organized.

DR. TALMAGE AND THE LODGE.

BY H. H. HIMMAN.

On Sabbath, April 17th, Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage preached a sermon in defense of the secret lodge system. Greatly as it must be deplored that the influence of the distinguished Brooklyn preacher should be thrown on the side of such a system of iniquity, public discussion of the subject is not to be regretted. Heretofore its defense has been in the main "a conspiracy of silence." Dr. Talmage's discourse will be applauded in the gambling dens and places of infamy, but it must be doubted whether any thoughtful Mason or Odd-fellow will thank him for bringing the subject so prominently before the people. They will see in it the presage of impending evil.

From the text, "Discover not a secret to another" (Prov. 25:9), which he uses out of its connection and appropriate meaning, he draws the following conclusions:

1. That the great evil of society is an excessive frankness, candor, simplicity and consequent betrayal of secrets, and that secret societies by counteracting this tendency promote good morals. But the very reverse of this is true. The faculty of concealment belongs to man's lower nature. It is more highly developed in brutes than in men. The cat, the fox, the snake and the opossum possess this faculty in a marked degree. The savage has much more love and capacity for concealment than the civilized man, and just in proportion as men approximate the character of our Divine Master just to that extent do they display frankness, candor, simplicity. Christ said, "I ever spake openly." "In secret have I said nothing." The testimony of Paul was that "in simplicity and godly sincerity we had our conversation among them that believe." If, therefore, secret societies do cultivate the capacity and habit of concealment, they cultivate what becomes the occasion of iniquity and crime and which needs rather to be repressed. It is doubtless true that privacy may sometimes be a duty, but it does not appear that those who are outside of secret societies are any more faithful in the duty of silence in reference to things that ought not to be spoken than others.

2. He says that man is gregarious and will have social relations. This is true, and for this a wise Creator kindly provided the family, the church and such other associations as grow out of and supplement these institutions. These relations are God's plan for the satisfaction of our social nature. There is nowhere in the sacred Scriptures any approval or permission for any society based on secrecy. Secret societies are nowhere referred to in the Scriptures except to be condemned. Surely God's plan is wiser than man's.

3. He says that whether a secret society is right or wrong depends on its objects. Not necessarily so. Right objects should be attained by right methods. The Jesuits had commendable objects and they accomplished a vast amount of good, but their methods have been so unquestionably bad that the civilized world has long since come to regard them as a perpetual menace to good government. Every secret society professes to have good objects. None would admit for a moment that their objects were bad. Dr. Talmage's endorsement of societies which have good objects is a practical endorsement of Jesuitism, Nihilism, Ku-Kluxism, and the anarchistic secret societies of Chicago and elsewhere. They all profess to have most excellent objects.

4. The Doctor gives a synopsis of his whole argument in the following paragraph. Having assumed that those societies which profess to have right objects are right (and these are the ones which will take courage by this discourse) he says:

"There is no need that we who plan for the conquest of right over wrong should publish to all the world our intentions. The general of an army never sends to the opposing troops information of the coming attack. Shall we who have enlisted in the cause of God and humanity expose our plans to the enemy? No! we will in secret plot the ruin of all the enterprises of Satan and his cohorts. When they expect us by day we will fall upon them by night. While they are strengthening their left wing we will double up their right. By a plan of battle formed in secret conclave we will come suddenly upon them saying, 'The sword of the Lord and of Gideon.' Secrecy of plot and execution are wrong only when the object and ends are nefarious."

The fatal defect in this argument is that it assumes that a state of war is a normal condition of society, and that because it is right for a general to conceal his objects and plans from his enemies therefore we may apply military principles to civil society and moral warfare. The argument proves too much. If military rules may be applied to civil relations then it is appropriate (if the object to be attained is a worthy one) to practice lying and all manner of deception. Strategy, which is the soul of war, is only another name for falsehood and fraud. It would also be right to kill men without trial or accusation, to bombard cities and explode magazines. The truth is that war is barbarous and like secret societies belongs to barbarism. Each prevails most among savages, and they are surviving twin relics of savage society.

Even if it were proved that war is ever lawful it by no means follows that its principles should be applied to civil relations or that it is ever necessary or wise to so apply them. No men were ever confronted with so mighty an undertaking and such vast and terrible opposition as the Apostles and primitive Christians. If there was ever a just occasion for a secret combination it was when the wealth, the learning, the prejudice and the temporal power of the whole world was combined against them. They discarded military principles. They used none but open methods. "By the manifestation of the truth they commended themselves to every man's conscience 'n the sight of God.'" Subsequently, when degeneracy had commenced, some Christians departed from the principle of simplicity and openness and sought to imitate the Eleusinian Mysteries. Gibbon says that in consequence they were accused of the grossest wickedness, and that it was assumed that they would not have formed a secret association unless they had some great wickedness to conceal. The words of the Divine Master have ever been held as a moral axiom. "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved. He that doeth truth cometh to the light that his deeds may be made manifest that they are wrought in God." Their great error was in departing from this doctrine. They did not, neither do we, need any secret order for the promotion of any true reform. Secrecy of plot and execution are wrong not only when the object and ends are nefarious but when the good object can be obtained by open and Christian methods, and this is always possible under a free government.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

THE PULPIT AND THE STAGE.

At the State House a bill has been adopted by the judiciary committee of which the following is the principal section:

"SECTION 1. Whoever, by himself or agent, admits any child under the age of fifteen years to any public show or amusement, unless said child is accompanied by parent or guardian, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $100; but this shall not apply to shows and amusements which take place before sunset."

The passage of this bill will tend to mitigate, in some degree, an increasing evil—theft among young boys, caused directly by the enticements of the playhouse. The till and merchandise of no employer are safe from the thieving propensities of the theater-going juvenile.

A down-town merchant recently had in his employ a small boy of this kind. In settling his cash one day, although the amount of money agreed with the recorded sales, he discovered in his salesbook that the description of a certain sale did not correspond with the price carried out. Holding the page to the light, a well-executed erasure in the dollar column was revealed. An investigation resulted in the discharge of the stage-struck boy. The losses parents suffer, as well as employers, from these misled boys are inestimable.

The playhouse also begets boldness and begging. Pedestrians are constantly importuned by boys loitering about theater entrances for money with which to pay their admission. The temptations which greet these undeveloped minds after the play at almost the midnight hour are terrible to contemplate. There is a law prohibiting children under a certain age performing upon the stage. It would be well that parents enact a by-law in their family regime forbidding children attending stage performances, also.

Rev. O. P. Gifford of this city once asserted, and truly, that "the theater is not an educator, never was, nor can be." This brought upon his devoted head an avalanche of censure from the theatrical world, and not a little criticism from certain quarters of the religious. A war of words between the Unitarian and evangelical clergy has been raging here until very recently, as to whether the stage and pulpit can ever work harmoniously together as moral educators. Only a small amount of brains is required to demonstrate that the stage can never become the peer of the pulpit. The theater must cater to the taste of the masses, or prove a failure. No sane theatrical management would dare attempt the maintenance of so high a conception of morality as does the pulpit. When the stage attains to the exalted, undefiled morality of the pulpit it will no longer be the stage, it will be the pulpit. As I have said, the theater must cater to the public tastes. The appetite of the public is depraved—so depraved that the theater must satisfy its cravings or close. It cares little for pulpit ethics.

What objection, some one may ask, have you to Shakespeare? I will answer that question by asking another: Why do the masses, the most refined, even, pass the stage on which the most perfect interpretations of the great playwright are given, to witness spectacular, burlesque and minstrel performances? How much Shakespeare do we find on the boards to-day? Very, very little. If Shakespearean morality receives the least patronage from the masses, how can we ever expect that of the pulpit to receive successful recognition on the stage? The people must elevate the stage; the stage will never elevate the people. If the people shun morality in the pulpit, they will shun it on the stage. Before the people can elevate the stage they must receive Christ in the heart, and then—the theater will become extinct. There will be no place for it.

MICHIGAN NOTES.

WILLIAMSTON, Mich.

Under existing circumstances we often ask ourselves, "Will justice ever again be meted out to the deserving culprits who throng society?" and the dying echo of our own words is the only reply. In vain are sheriffs and deputies elected, to keep watch of the movements in social and business circles and enforce the laws. In vain are committees appointed to investigate the course of officers in our public institutions. The facts are never published, or if so, the criminal goes unwhipped of justice, and is generally the object of sympathetic condolence for the leading secular press.

A few years ago an investigation became necessary in regard to the conduct of the superintendent and certain other officers connected with the Michigan Insane Asylum. The Legislature appointed a committee for the purpose, which fact was published in the leading journals of this State. The published announcements were to the effect that parties wishing to testify should appear before said committee, who would patiently hear their story and investigate their case. The date for the hearing of complaints was to be fixed. The writer having a grievance against said asylum officers waited and watched for the names of the committee and their place and time of meeting, but could learn nothing. What was my astonishment to learn shortly after that the committee had held a secret session, and disposed thus and thus of the entire case, recommending the appointment as superintendent of the asylum of the very man against whom I hold the charge of robbery till this day, and of whose innocence I can never be satisfied until I am permitted to examine the records of the institution for 1873.

Last week the Evening News of Detroit publishes an account of like work by a committee of investigation at the State Public School at Coldwater, and heads its report by the word "Whitewashed!" in large type. A very expressive and significant term. By their report Superintendent Foster, with whom the writer has a very limited acquaintance, is exonerated; and after his "exoneration" by this whitewash committee he tenders his resignation of the office and will seek greener pastures. Had the case been made out as clearly against one of the "hewers of wood, or drawers of water," about the institution, who was outside the "ring," "conclave," "brotherhood," "fraternity," "clique," "party," or whichever you may call it, and the awfully corrupt charges been as well sustained as in the case of Foster, he would have been taken from his dependent family for a term in the house of correction, at least, even with an exceedingly lenient judge to pronounce the sentence. But we are living in the days when "whitewash" and untimely motar abound. "Beware lest ye being led away by the error of the wicked fall from your own steadfastness."

In all the above maneuverings the discerning can see the hidden arm of the secret empire quietly and cunningly arranging and disposing as seemeth it best, while those without the mark of the beast, or the number of his name, must tamely submit.

Of the Ida Lee case in Brighton not a syllable appears this week to enlighten us. Clamor as we will, and be anxious for the criminal to be brought forth and receive his just deserts, it is not done; and society transgressors can multiply, and by the tie "stronger than human hands can impose" bind themselves to each other's protection and ravage at will. Thus it now is, but not to be forever. A stronger than they will come who will neither be gripped nor bribed. Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus. Come quickly.

WHY DID NOT MR. DAVIS ANSWER?

WORCESTER, Mass.

The pungent deliverance of the veteran Rev. C. C. Foote in last week's Cynosure under the heading, "Moral Cowardice a Deadly Sin," has the true, old, anti-slavery ring. I heartily thank him for it and desire to emphasize that sentence in which he says, "The Christian ministry to-day is missing another grand opportunity by failing to be brave and strong against Freemasonry, that last-born brat of forlornest hell, with its Satanic wiles, its murderous deeds, its 'devil worship,' horrid blasphemies, butcher-knife oaths and superlative selfishness, demanding and deserving the execration of the moral universe."

Such a miss has been just made by the Congregational ministry in this city at the installation of Rev. Mr. Davis, late of Cleveland, Ohio. Liberty was asked by your correspondent, though not of the council, to put a practical question, which, he said, he had little doubt that the candidate would be glad of an opportunity to answer—"What would be his attitude as a Christian minister toward certain popular false religions of the day, oath-bound orders of secrecy, especially that of Freemasonry—magna pars of all—of which Dr. Edward Beecher affirms that it dethrones Christ and exalts Satan, and its idolatrous and semi-pagan worship is in positive rivalry of Christianity?" After a moment's hesitation Mr. Davis replied that he thought the questioner not being a member of the council he was at liberty not to answer it. And so was lost the legitimate providential opportunity to say the timely word that might have carried with it the force of a cannon ball.

So thinks Mr. Milton M. Morse of this city who has had printed for distribution in the form of a circular the crisp editorial in the Cynosure a few weeks since concerning a Thrice Potent Masonic Rumseller, closing with the question, "Do not the Worcester clergy know that God will visit plagues on them and their people for these things? That the Scottish Rite not only practices false prayers but false baptisms? That Deputy District Grand Master St. John, a bitter and taunting Universalist, late of Worcester, spent one entire winter installing lodges and Masons in Massachusetts, among them many orthodox Congregational pastors, who exclude Universalists outside of the lodge but bow on their knees to them and 'brother' them inside."

Oh, for courage of opinions in the Christian ministry and the will to avow them like Luther before the Diet of Worms—So help me God, come what may!

Miss not the occasion; by the forelock take
That subtle Power, the never-halting time,
Lest a mere moment's putting off should make Mischance almost as heavy as a crime.

HENRY T. CHEEVER.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

APRIL 20, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Last Friday I visited the Cincinnati University. Prof. William Oliver Sproull, A. M., Ph. D., very kindly offered his influence to get a hearing on National Reform. He is the son of Rev. T. Sproull, D. D., Professor of Theology in the Reformed Presbyterian Seminary, in Allegheny, Pa. He was raised a Covenanter and recited one year with us in the seminary. He spent three years in a German University, and has been Professor of Latin Language and Literature, and of Arabic in the city University for six years. "The University has been in full and active operation for twelve years. During that period it has had, on an average, about one hundred pupils annually." They have fourteen professors; there are no tutors. Each professor attends his department personally. The foundation of the institution rests mainly upon the bequest of the late Charles McMicken, "supplemented by other donations from private individuals, and now by an annual city levy of one-tenth of a mill." From the first, young men and young women have been admitted upon a footing of equality. They have demonstrated "that co-education is not only feasible, but desirable." President Jacob Dolson Cox, A. M., L. L. D., has proven himself a wise and efficient head. The University is bound to prosper.

Last Sabbath I preached in the Tabernacle Church of the Presbyterian body in Indianapolis, Ind., Rev. A. J. Rondthaler, pastor. This is the old Third church. By the advice of Rev. Arthur Pierson, D. D., now of Philadelphia, they changed their name to the Tabernacle Church. They sold their old church and built a new one up town. Their membership has increased to 520. They have about that number of children in the Sabbath-school. Bro. Rondthaler says they will have 1,000 in this school before a great while. In the morning I preached upon Public Reforms, and in the evening upon the Mediatorial Dominion. They were new themes to the people, and they listened with looks of wonderment. Dr. T. J. Boyd, formerly of the Covenant church, was present at both services. He thought those sermons had the Covenanting ring. You cannot put the standard too high for him. Several of the elders shook my hand vigorously, and said they were glad to listen to one who had the courage of his convictions.

On Monday morning I had an interview with Rev. Hains, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. He thought the movement of very little importance, as it meant simply to put the name of God in the Constitution. I replied, "The object of the National Reform Association is to awaken the public conscience to the necessity of moral reform. When that is done the people will rise up and declare in their fundamental law that the will of the King of kings shall be supreme in this land. We would not write God's name in the Constitution to-day if we could. It would mean nothing. But we seek to make the people loyal and then they will declare their allegiance to the King of Nations. That is National Reform." Well," he replied, "I am glad to hear you say that. I am heartily in favor of that."

Indianapolis, the capital of the State, is a beautiful inland city of 100,000. There are twelve Presbyterian churches, and other bodies are equally well represented. At the depot I saw Blind Tom, who is out on his usual tour. He is a modern wonder. Practically blind, with no power of consecutive thought, dependent as a child, and yet one of the greatest musicians of the age. He is full and running over with music. The robbery of the Pennsylvania railroad company by their employees is another indication of the decay of the public conscience. Covetousness is eating up the American conscience. We want men such as Shakespeare describes:

"His words are oaths, his oaths are oracles,
His thoughts sincere, his love immaculate,
His tears pure messengers sent from his heart,
His heart as far from fraud as heaven from earth."

J. M. FOSTER.

LODGE RITES DISGUSTING.

SPRINGMILL, O.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Masonry here is beginning to be looked upon with much alarm, by honest-thinking, intelligent people. They are becoming so presumptuous as to think they have a right to control the public business of this county (Richland) and at the laying of the corner-stone of our penitentiary and other buildings they used the arm of the law to push themselves to the front, forcing away citizens and tax-payers, the owners of these public buildings, as if they were so many dogs, so they could make a display of silly foolishness enough to disgust an idiot.

One cannot attend the funeral of their relatives or friends often times without coming in contact with this disgusting order of Masons, acting, as some well say, like monkeys. I have concluded not to attend funerals or other gatherings where such disgusting scenes are permitted.

While writing, I notice in one of my papers that one Dunlap, who preaches here, has been installed in a certain lodge as High Priest, and a notorious saloonkeeper as treasurer. Oh! just think, reader, a high priest and a notorious saloonkeeper—what boon companions!

My wife lived in Canandaigua, N. Y., near where Wm. Morgan was unlawfully seized and confined in jail, from there conveyed to Lake Ontario and put to death. Her father told me many times all about it. He saw and knew the men that concocted the murder, he said. But they could not be convicted at that time because of perjured Masons. The indignation of the citizens ran so high that no Masonic public demonstrations were made for nearly twenty years.

JOHN W. NIMAN.

AN M. E. GRAND ARMY CONFERENCE.

McCook, Neb., April 18, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I do not forget the cause you represent. I still bear testimony against the lodge: perhaps a little more than my presiding elder, who is a Mason, desired; for at the quarterly conference he said to me that he wanted me to understand that the church (M. E.) did not give me authority to preach against secret societies. I claimed that it did on general principles, as the discipline required me "to renounce the devil and all his works." I further stated in quarterly conference that the discipline "did not say that I should not speak of the evils of Masonry, etc. The elder, P. C. Johnson, said that as a government the constitution withheld powers not delegated. I asked if the church was going to apply such a rule? But to be short, I did at the next favorable opportunity declare to the congregation what God's word said about secrecy and how Masonic authority excluded Christ, and then left the church, stating when asked why, "Because the church upholds Masonry; and my Bible condemns it, if the M. E. discipline does not."

I wish at this time to add a little testimony to corroborate what the Cynosure has claimed for years, and I could hardly believe it at first, namely, that church members will leave the duties of the church to attend the lodge. The facts are these. A little over a year ago the pastor (W. S. Wheeler) of this place announced that the quarterly conference would be held at 10 o'clock at night. I was on hand at that hour and asked why the conference was called so late. The pastor and presiding elder replied that it was done to accommodate the brethren who were attending lodge (Grand Army). We waited until 11 p. m. and then I suggested that business had better proceed, but the pastor said, "No, we could not get along without them." I was comparatively a stranger there and did not say much, but thought this another evidence of the evils of lodgery. All but myself were lodgites at this conference, and in fact the officials of this M. E. church worship at some secret altar. May the Lord open their spiritual eyes.

W. O. NORVAL.

PITH AND POINT.

ARE THERE TRAITORS IN THE CAMP?

The Captain of the Salvation Army here sings about "Rolling the old chariot over the devil," while her right hand man on the platform is, or has been, a 33-degree Mason, and says he is awaiting orders under the Salvation Army. What do intelligent Masons and Anti-Masons, readers of the Christian Cynosure, think of that? "If thou take forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth." Jer. 17: 19.—W. FENTON, St. Paul, Minn.

OUT AND OUT FOR PROHIBITION OF LODGE AND LIQUOR.

I belonged to a secret order about seventeen years ago, but I have renounced them entirely and my advice is, "Touch not; taste not the unclean thing," etc. I have been voting the Prohibition ticket ever since 1875. I am a Prohibitionist from the ground up. I say no quarters to the liquor traffic in any form or for any price. I hope you may be the means in God's hand of accomplishing much good by publishing such a No. 1 paper as the Cynosure. May your shadow never grow less. If I can get you some new subscribers I will. This is a poor country for anti-secret literature, as the majority are lodge men.—GEO. W. PRITTS, Pennsville, Pa.

REV. MR. THOMAS AGAIN HEARD FROM.

The brother from LaCrosse who contributed so much to the interest of one of the meetings of the congress, lectured for the M. E. church in this place last evening. "Not much of a lecture" is the comment I hear from some competent to judge. Perhaps he has hardly recovered from the effects of the congress on himself and his order. The anti-secret cause in this region is being helped by that report from that meeting.—M. M. A., Menomonie, Wis.

ENLISTED FOR LIFE.

I cannot think of laying down the armor now when the fight is waxing hotter and fiercer. I enlisted for life or till the secret lodge system shall be overthrown. I would like to send you some new subscribers, but it is hard to get them here, but I shall continue to work and pray for the good cause.—DANIEL MARSHMAN, Corsica, Ohio.

A GOOD TIME TO SAY AMEN.

We are glad the South is teachable and is listening to the truth from Himman and others. In fact, the South seemingly is doing somewhat better in this regard than the North. Still there is much to encourage here. Preachers here are saying "lodge" occasionally in their sermons and are chastising them. Until lately the word was never pronounced from the sacred desk. It is a good omen that a start is made, and the lodge has only to be dragged to the light and its death ensues. Only last Sunday Elder McCullough (M. E.) referred to the "lodge" in his sermon and said to me privately he was opposed to the entire lodge system, and further said that men of the church as they advanced in lodgery they went down spiritually. I am further told by those well informed in the M. E. church, that in the ministry the lodge is almost weeded out, and now what is wanted is a forward movement among a few strong preachers and the advance might be made generally among the laity. Let us not support lodge preachers, and when the lodge is reformed from the sacred desk and the minister says a sharp thing and gives the lodge a good hit, don't be afraid to say "amen."—J. S. HICKMAN, Lyford, Ill.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI.—May 8, 1887.—The Child Moses.—Exodus 2: 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is thy keeper.—Ps. 121: 5.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

Moses, the most prominent statesman the world has ever known, was born (probably) B. C. 1571, near Zoan, on the eastern branch of the Nile. His father's name was Amram, his mother's Jochebed, both of the tribe of Levi. He had a sister Miriam, several years older, and a brother Aaron, three years older than himself. In original endowments, in the grandeur of his mission, and in the permanence of his influence, no other man has been more highly honored of God. In law and literature, as well as in religion, in the world of action as well as of thought, in the Occident as well as the Orient, what name outlines the name of Moses? No other man ever touched the world at so many points as he, and through no other did God ever so move the world.—F. H. Newhall.

In his choice by faith of the true life, in his defence of his countrymen, in his whole after-life, we see traces of the religious training of Moses. (1) He was doubtless trained in the religious writings and traditions of his people. (2) In the knowledge of the one true God. (3) In the promises made to Abraham and his other ancestors, and so in their hopes of becoming a great and free nation. (4) In the best morals then known, obedience to parents, faith toward God, and love toward all. This training Moses never forgot, even amid the worldly splendors and temptations of Pharaoh's court.—P.

We obtain the best general idea of what such an education was from the words of Stephen (Acts 7: 21), "Now Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." This "wisdom," though not perhaps very deep, was multiform and manifold. It included orthography, grammar, history, theology, medicine, arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, and engineering. By the more advanced, poetry was read, and poetic composition occasionally practiced.—Rawlinson. Being adopted into the royal family, he was no doubt received into the priestly caste, and knew all the secret learning of the Egyptian priests. Tradition assigns the great Temple of the Sun, at On, the chief university of Egypt, as the scene of his education, and if so, his experience of Egyptian life in many striking aspects must have been wide, for the population of the Temple and its dependencies was well nigh that of a small town. Shady cloisters opened into lecture rooms for the students, and quiet houses for the professors and priests of the great temple school—the Eton and Harrow of the time—from which Moses would pass upwards to the lectures of the various faculties of the university. (See Eber's The Sisters, 11: 32-34.) The library of the Ramesseum at Thebes—over the gate of which was seen the inscription, "For healing of the soul,"—contained 20,000 books; nor is it without significance, as indicating a period of great intellectual activity, that the structure thus consecrated to knowledge was built by Rameses II.

When Moses was about 40 years old, and had received all he could from his worldly training as the son of a king, there came a crisis in his life, about which we learn in Heb. 11: 24-27. "For we learn not a little about Moses' life from the New Testament. "By faith Moses, when he was grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to be evil entreated with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; accounting the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he looked unto the recompense of reward. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king: for he endured, as seeing him who is invisible." We do not know what was the occasion of this great decision. But in some way he had come to the place where he must either wholly go with the Egyptians in religion and life, or he must choose God, the truth, and the afflicted people of God. Like most great decisions, it turned on some seemingly unimportant act, but an act in view of which he must decide his whole future course. But the fact that it was done through faith shows that it was not a sudden passionate impulse, but a deliberate choice of God and righteousness. It is probable that the first act resulting from this choice was his going to visit his brethren in the fields, and slaying the oppressor of one of them; an act which resulted in his banishment. He seemed to expect them to rise up and assert their freedom under him (Acts 7: 25), but neither he nor they were yet prepared for the great work.

Moses fled from Pharaoh, and went into the wilderness of Sinai, where he took the part of the daughters of Reuel (Jethro), a sheik of Midian, and finally married Zipporah, one of the daughters, and for 40 years kept the sheep of his father-in-law, living probably at Sherm, near the apex of the Sinaitic triangle, 10 miles from Ras Muhammed, the Southern headland. Here he had much lonely communion with God; he learned about the whole region where he was afterwards to lead the Israelites; his character became strengthened, improved, fixed in good. His fiery nature was tempered; he became master of himself, and trained in spiritual forces, and fitted for his life-work of teaching and leading men.—P.

COMMENTS ON THE S. S. LESSON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The birth of Moses, vs. 1-4. A grand crisis in the world's history was now at hand. Not only was a nation to be delivered from bondage and a code of laws established for its guidance, but from that nation and based on those laws was to come the Redeemer of the world and the only perfect system of revealed truth for mankind. The battles which have decided the fate of empires were never won by an army without a general; so every great cause must have its leader. Yet as the infant Moses lay in his cradle of bulrushes, the same in his utter helplessness as any other human babe, no earthly intelligence could have predicted the future in store for him. Only God saw that here was a fit instrument for the mightiest task ever laid upon human shoulders. The story is told of John Trebonius, a German professor of the middle ages, that he never entered the school room without raising his cap to his pupils, and answered his colleagues when they complained of such condescension: "There are among these boys men of whom God will one day make burgomasters, chancellors, doctors and magistrates. Although you do not yet see them with the badges of their dignity it is right that you should treat them with respect." Among the pupils of this man was Martin Luther. The greatest problem in modern political economy, one that transcends even the labor question in its magnitude is, how to save the children. In all our cities and large towns vast numbers are growing up, unguided, uncontrolled, with no education except that afforded by the streets and the saloons. A generation hence these will be the dangerous classes, and it is but righteous justice that any country which permits its children to grow up in ignorance and vice, or permits them to be sacrificed to mammon by being employed in shops and factories and mines at a tender age, stunting them in body and mind, should reap the due reward of such neglect.

2. The end of education, vs. 5-10. The first question and answer in the Shorter Catechism can never grow obsolete. "What is the chief end of man? To glorify God and enjoy him forever." All education, all training and parental discipline, is a failure which is not a means to this end. Every parent, every Sunday-school teacher, has received the divine command: Take the child and train it for my service, and I will give thee thy wages. Many children are trained to serve the world, to serve self; comparatively few to serve the Lord. Missionary fields in foreign lands and on our frontiers would not call in vain for laborers if Christian parents had always been faithful to their trust. Nor would our most necessary reforms make such slow progress if Bible principles were taught in every home. It is noticeable that the secularization of our schools has kept pace with the secularization of the government and the worship of material prosperity. Our children must be trained to God's service, or when they become men and women, Satan will surely press them into his.

SECRET SOCIETIES
Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

Courant, Hartford, Conn.—The secret society fosters snobbery, and tends to create division among the best friends.

Springfield (Mass.) Republican—We shall get over secret societies as we are getting over a good many other childish things.

Christian World, Cincinnati—There is no use in denying that the leading secret societies are, in their practical workings, essentially deistic.

Our Record, Utica, N. Y.—We are confident that the great objects of equality, fraternity, and morality may be attained without resorting to the veil of secrecy.

Evening Journal, Chicago—Assemble a party of young men together anywhere, with all restraint removed and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious.

Republican, Springfield, Mass.—There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness. . . . It is the meat of petty rather than large minds.

Advent Review and Herald—And parents should avoid bringing their children in contact with the evil, and not send them to public schools where secret societies are tolerated.

Watchman and Reflector, Boston—We have before spoken of the low prejudices and antipathies which this secret fellowship engenders toward those who are outside, and of the unworthy and vicious friendships which it creates among those who are within.

Daily Herald, Cleveland, Ohio—If the "secrets" of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Malta, and the entire crop of secret societies could have sunlight let in upon them, we fancy the members thereof would be pronounced foolish boys of a larger growth.

London News, Madrid Correspondence, 1865—The whole of this insurrectionary movement has been under the direction of a revolutionary committee, most of whom, I am told, are members of the Freemason's society (of which there are not less than forty-nine lodges, numbering 21,000 members, in Madrid), who have been for months arming the people in preparation for this outbreak.

Harper's Magazine—As the larger portion of the Whig party was merged in the Republican, the dominant party of to-day has a certain lineal descent from the feelings aroused by the abduction of Morgan from the jail at Canandaigua. His disappearance and the odium consequent upon it stigmatized Masonry, so that it lay a long time moribund, and, although revived in later years, cannot hope to regain its old importance.

The Interior, Feb., 1877—That Masonry is a religious system exceeding every other in the impressive character of its religious rites and ceremonies, and that it offers salvation through the practice of its rites and precepts, is an indisputable fact. If salvation can come to the soul through the channels of the morality taught by Masonry, then there is no need for the Christian religion. The objection we make to it is that it teaches salvation without Christ.

Utica, N. Y., Daily Herald—The abominations of Know Nothingism are now conceded by all. The outrages of the secret society of Tammany, notwithstanding its endorsement by Gov. Seymour, are familiar to the American people and a disgrace to American politics. The excitement produced by the interference of Masons with politics is a matter of history. Everywhere and at all times, secret societies, so far as they dabble with politics, must exert a baleful evil.

Scientific American, New York—Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is induced, by sheer force of example, through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while, in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tact, if not open, instigation of his unscrupulous elders.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburgh—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

The Armory—Surely the presence of a multitude of secret combinations bodes little good to the church of Christ.

Daily Appeal, Memphis—The secret society business has become a craze with the colored people, and one by which they often become the victims of designing knaves.

Wesleyan Methodist—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever revealed in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Catholic Review, New York—It is becoming apparent that secret, oath-bound societies are, in principle, un-American; are contrary to the whole spirit and meaning of our institutions, and are therefore dangerous to the Republic.

Baptist Weekly, New York—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. . . . The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies. . . . The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun worshippers. . . . The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

J. BLANCHARD. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1887

DR. TALMAGE PREACHED Sabbath, April 17, on "What is the moral effect of Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Labor, and other Societies?" And his discourse has fled on the wings of the press throughout the United States and Christendom. His text was: "Discover not a secret to another." (Prov. 25: 9). The text was used by way of accommodation, taken out of its connection and turned wholly from its meaning, which the revised edition, following old authorities, translates, "Disclose not the secret of another." Solomon is advising against personal or public contentions or lawsuits and says: "Debate thy cause with thy neighbor himself, and discover not a secret to another." This was Christ's method: "Tell him his fault between thee and him alone" (Matt. 18: 15) before going to the public with a brother's private wrong. Whoever takes the trouble to turn to Mr. Talmage's text, will see at once that he has wholly misapprehended its meaning.

But this is not the worst. Though Dr. Gray and Dr. Talmage both say enough to condemn secret societies, in this sermon and Dr. Gray's article in the Interior on the late Congress, yet we fear that both of them will be used and considered as champions of the secret orders. Both condemn seceders from the lodge like Finney, Colver, Bernard, and the 45,000 seceders who came out after Morgan's revelation and confessed its truth, as "perjurers." This is to revile every patriot who swore into the rebellion, but finding himself deceived and defrauded, abjured his sinful oath and revealed rebel secrets. Indeed, these brethren condemn God's martyrs in all ages, who have abjured oaths of allegiance to sin, as "perjurers!" The thousands who have revealed the cut-throat oaths of Freemasonry are and have been among the holiest Christians, the most upright men, and the best Americans. We are sorry these good men condemn such civilians as Judge Pliny Merrick and such Christians as Charles G. Finney and George F. Pentecost. After Morgan was murdered and the people were aroused they came to Finney, Merrick, Colver and the sainted Bernard and asked, "Are these revelations true?" "This," says Finney, "compelled me to make a perpetual lie, by pretending they were not true, or to own they were true." There was no third way possible. And to call those men perjurers,

"Shocks all common sense."

But we give place, at present, to Rev. Mr. Hinman, whose article, like his life and character, is clear, candid and transparent. When others have had their say we must have ours. We shall not suffer Dr. McCosh and the great Presbyterian denomination which he adorns and ennobles, to be put in the wrong by a few good brethren who write under lodge pressure, as it was put in the wrong on the slavery issue, without a strong effort to counteract their mistake.

CHARLES SUMNER.

"Among the innumerable false, unmoved, Unshaken, unseduced, untimid, His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal; Nor number nor example with him wrought, To swerve from truth or change his constant mind."

—Milton.

Whitefield said, "Print the thunderstorm, and I will tell you print my apostrophe to it." Alas! how shall we give a sketch of Sumner without the national earthquake of which his life was a moving force!

When born (1811), with an infant twin sister of great beauty, who died at twenty-one a rose in full bloom, he was so small that, as was said of Sir Isaac Newton, "he could easily have been put in a quart pot." He was born an aristocrat—a Puritan and Boston aristocrat, which is aristocracy in the superlative degree, having the rigidity of principle and the haughtiness of wealth. So, when he took his stand beside and between Garrison and the negro slaves, he descended from the top of American society to its bottom. But he was like an Atlas with a globe on his back.

His father, Charles Pinkney Sumner, was called the handsomest man Boston had ever seen; and he was the last High Sheriff of Suffolk county who wore the gorgeous English regalia of the Sheriff's office to set off an uncommonly fine person. But the women of Boston were at that time the untitled nobility of the human race, deriving their patent from the Word and Spirit of the King of kings. Such was the wife of Sheriff, and the mother of Senator Sumner. When she lay dying, and one asked what to write her son in the United States Senate, then in its raging and tumultuous period, "Tell him," said she, "his country needs him more than his mother." Such a woman, in the bosom of Sheriff Sumner, may explain why he renounced his membership in the Masonic lodge, and incurred, fearlessly, the malignity of that secret monster which, then as since, had more eyes than Argus, and more hands than Briareus; and why his son, the Senator, should face and defy the same bandit legions, which his father had renounced.

We pass over that part of Mr. Sumner's life from his birth to his entrance into the United States Senate from the station of a private citizen, Dec. 1, 1851. The following May 26, 1852, he presented a petition against the Fugitive Slave bill; and, against the determined purpose of a great majority of the Senate, on the 26th of August following he uttered his great speech, entitled, "Freedom National; Slavery Sectional." Four years of steadily increasing and intensifying agitation followed that grand utterance. The tone of the slaveholders became more murderous. The ten Masonic lodges in the District of Columbia all advocated secession, and by that sort of persecution which they well knew how to practice, drove out of their lodges all who were against the dismemberment of the Union. They saw the anti-slavery sentiment steadily increasing; and, now that this sentiment had a voice in Congress, and Sumner, Chase and Hale were read, relied on and sustained in the North, they saw no chance left them between submission and separation, and they plunged madly down the precipice. Fifty years before Mr. Sumner entered the Senate, that is in 1801, a junto of Masons formed in Charleston, South Carolina, a "Supreme Grand Council" for governing the lodges in the United States. They adopted a "Rite," or series of thirty-three degrees, out of the detached mass of lodge-Masonry floating through the world, and named it "The Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite," and called the thirty-third degree "the last." John Mitchell and Frederick Dalcho were the chief promoters of this scheme. They based their Supreme Council on a similar scheme concocted by Voltaire and the infidel Frederick II. of Prussia, and pretended to act under that authority as its deputy for the United States; and were sanctioned and approved by the now atheist Grand Orient of France. This Mitchell-Dalcho constitution claimed, and still claims to be the "Mother Grand Council of the World."

This was no novel scheme. Every false religion ever started aims at universal dominion,—the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them;—and for this they rely on the curiosity, money, superstition and submission of the masses, whom they hold by their thirst for secrecy and the delirium of false worship.

But while the final grand end and object of false religion is the ruin of our race by the displacement of the infinite God, who can only be reached through a Mediator, it has secondary and subordinate ends. To "exalt Satan and dethrone Christ," it must meet in, mingle with, and corrupt the affairs of this present life. Hence, this South Carolina Supreme Council, from its inception, fixed its fangs in the body of our Republic. Its constitution provides for one Supreme Council in one nation, except the United States, which was to have two, a Northern and Southern one, but all holding charters from, and, of course, subject to, the Charleston Council. This would prevent the Northern masses hearing rebellion and secession in the South. Hence, twelve years after the Charleston Supreme Council began to work, it chartered a Northern Supreme Council, and located it in New York. But the rapid spread of this Northern Council, and the fabulous sums of money brought in by their charters and degrees, led to starting some ten or fifteen councils in the Northern jurisdiction, having headquarters in New York and Boston, each claiming supreme, exclusive jurisdiction. But the great mass of three-degree Masons, ignorant of these upper-degree quarrels, criminalations and excommunications, go on paying their dues and the local lodge mills grind on. The Southern Supreme Council did not split up and divide. Albert Pike is its Sovereign Grand Commander for life, with a thousand dollars a month.

But the whole influence of the lodge North and South went in favor of the rebellion and destruction of the Union. In 1864 the Voice of Masonry in Chicago denounced Union soldiers who, in a "charge," refused to recognize rebel Masonic signs of distress but obeyed their orders and used their bayonets. The Northern lodges by promising favors from rebels initiated our soldiers by thousands and the Voice then told them if they obeyed their officers in a charge of bayonets they subjected themselves to the contempt of the world of Masonry.

In the South the lodge leaders distrusted the Masonic masses and instituted side-lodges for specific ends, as "Knights of the Golden Circle," "KuKlux," "White Leagues," etc. The Century is now publishing a life of Abraham Lincoln in which thousands of Americans read that the bloody raids on Kansas were planned and paid for by the "Blue Lodges of Missouri" without mistrusting that Masonry had any thing to do with Kansas troubles, though their disguises were kept and their secret meetings were held in the Masonic temples and lodge-rooms of the South. Pike initiated some fifty leaders of the Indians in Federal lodge, No. 1, in Washington and swore and frightened them into obedience before they would fight against the Union, and by such means the lodges of the South became the drill-camps of the rebellion. This Mr. Sumner saw and knew, in some degree, when he wrote to Samuel D. Greene, Jan. 13, 1854: "I find here two powers in Washington working in harmony against our free institutions and tending to centralization and anarchy, Freemasonry and Slavery. Both must be destroyed," but "they must be met separately."

In 1856, two years after the date of this letter to Mr. Greene, Mr. Sumner rose and delivered his speech, "The Crime against Kansas." It was read in every corner of the United States, and, of course, enraged the slave-holders. In May 22d Preston S. Brooks of South Carolina, a member of the House, came into the Senate chamber behind Mr. Sumner and beat him over the head as he sat cramped under the desk on which he was writing till he fell senseless on the floor. The wounds took Mr. Sumner from his seat for four years before medical advisers would allow him to resume his duties.

When he returned in 1860 a party of ruffians came to his house to murder him before he reached the Senate, but were prevented by the vigilance of Senator Wilson. Brooks and others of those who had assaulted him were in their graves. Lincoln was elected. Douglas, from being the Democratic heir apparent to the Presidency, had sunk down to twelve electoral votes, fulfilling the prophecy of a poem, "The Wreck," written in the middle of the Atlantic ocean in sight of a water-logged and crippled ship in which Douglas was thus alluded to:

"Thou poor wave-driven driveller,
Poor, prostituted man;
Aye, brace your yards up sharply
And make headway while you can.
Yet hear one word of wisdom,
If the power be not past,
Public vices have their fashions,
And they'll drop thee with the last."

Douglas soon after died. He had stood by and looked on the assault on Sumner.

But on the 4th day of June, 1860, Sumner rose and delivered a speech, "The Barbarism of Slavery," which proved that he was more than his former self. The Chicago Tribune, Giddings, Gerrit Smith, Wendell Phillips, and not only the old reformers were loud in praise but letters came pouring in by hundreds from eminent statesmen in all parts of the land spoke of it as excelling his speech on "The Crime against Kansas" for which Brooks struck him down. That speech was terrific. He had described the border ruffians who invaded Kansas as "Firelings picked from the drunken spew and vomit of an uneasy civilization, having the form of men,—

"Aye, in the catalogue ye go for men,
As hounds and blood-hounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs,
Shoughs, water-rugs and demi-wolves are clept
By the name of dogs."

leashed together by secret signs and lodges to renew the incredible atrocities of the Assassins and Thugs, showing the blind submission which the Assassins showed to the Old Man of the Mountain."

But in this "Barbarism of Slavery" he blends the lofty diction of Isaiah with the fearful symbols of the Apocalypse; and the very hills, valleys and mountains of the United States seemed to tremble under the sentences of that speech and to vibrate with its echoes. We have made several attempts to give extracts from that speech but they would seem like bricks taken out of the wall of a palace and held up as specimens of the building. Its chief characteristic is its clear, crushing, argumentative truth.

And it ended debate. He takes up Calhoun, McDuffie, and their successors, Hammond and Chestnut of South Carolina, Jefferson Davis, Brown, Mason and Hunter, every Senator who had ventured a definition or proposition in defence of slavery, and annihilating them by quotations from Southern official bodies, the United States census, from reason, history and logic, so that his antagonists sat grinding their teeth in silent rage, except Chestnut only, who apologized to his constituents for making no reply. Some leading Republican papers and leading Republicans who had come into the party at the eleventh hour, while admitting the truth and triumph of Mr. Sumner's argument yet affected regret lest the severity of his language should "alienate the South," and make reconciliation difficult: while men like Mason sat there in the Senate who avowed themselves "as good rebels as those whose guns were then in battery and shot to fire on Fort Sumter and the Star of the West."

"I know," said Mr. Sumner in reply to these, "I know and revere Him who, when reviled, reviled not again. But these words are not replies to personal reviling but statements of crimes against humanity, civilization, reason and religion, and words less plain and forcible would themselves be crimes."

And now that the dark system has fallen those who read Mr. Sumner's speeches and the history of the debates are amazed at the courtesy and urbanity of his severest arraignments of the institution, while abstaining religiously from vindictive retorts to personal abuse.

It is well that our magazines are giving the histories of the great battles of the war provided we are guarded against acquiring a taste for bloodshed. It were better if sham novels were crowded out of our cars and small hand-books given us from the writings of this great man whose transcendent genius, talent and devotion to his country are beautified by his vast stores of learning and made sweet by his reverence for God.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM.

If the American Sentinel wishes to be read by the Cynosure editor, it must deserve to be read. "Our Constitution forbids Congress to make any law concerning an established religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." Taken literally, this forbids laws prohibiting "the free exercise" of polygamy and assassination by Danites or Blood Avengers at Salt Lake; or the multitudes of religious murders by the Kofong, Purwow, Bondoo and other religious secret societies which cover Africa. Insert the word Christian before religion, and our Constitution would recognize exactly what the framers meant and supposed they had done, viz., "the free exercise" of the religion of Christendom, that is, of the Bible.

We therefore said we wish a Constitutional barrier against the religion of Dahomey; and the Sentinel amuses itself about our fears of the terrible King of Dahomey, about whom we expressed no fears and asked no protection. What we meant was what we said, "a constitutional barrier against the religion of Dahomey," i. e., crime called religion. This we need and seek, and the single word "Christian" put into the Constitution would give what we seek, viz., allow Congress to suppress polygamy, child-murder, and religious murder of adults by sincere but mistaken Mormons and heathen under the name of religion. This amendment our Constitution deplorably needs.

As to Seventh-day Baptists and Adventists who insist on keeping Saturday and working on Sunday, the Cynosure holds that "Man needs and God requires a Sabbath." See American party platform.

But the Cynosure is opposed to coercing conscience; which, as the Pennsylvania judges say in the Girard Will case, "makes hypocrites but not Christians." Therefore, we are opposed to imprisoning or fining any decent law-abiding man, who has kept Saturday, because he does not keep Sunday also. The Cynosure would help pay such a man's fine, petition for his instant relief from jail, and instruct the Legislature to repeal the law which imprisons him.

But we confess, as the Sentinel saw, we felt some doubt about his facts. One who seriously, or in jest, accuses us of fearing the King of Dahomey, seems to us slightly addle-headed. But if the Arkansas cases of persecution are just as given, and not the result of religious squabbles, and law perverted by sectarian or neighborhood lights, then the severest strokes of the Sentinel will but second our own.

But the seeming indifference of the Sentinel to the law of the Sabbath, and its almost universal violation, gives one the impression that its chief or sole desire is to war on the godly men who desire to have our Constitution recognize some God, and not be, in its terms, godless; as no other nation on earth is.

The Sentinel's little fling about the Cynosure spending years fighting Masonry "to little purpose," while he says, "We do not believe there is either righteousness or propriety in secret oaths," seems to us neither brave nor manly. A quibble is neither, much less Christian. Several legislatures have passed laws against imposing secret oaths by secret lodges. The New York Reports, Wendell, Vol. 13, and the testimony before the Rhode Island Legislative Committee give these oaths in the terms imposed in the lodges, sworn to by Masons; and published by John Quincy Adams as given. These oaths swear men to have their throats cut if they violate the by-laws of their lodges. Several Masons have had their throats cut under those penalties. Miller, in Belfast, was first strangled, as duly sworn in Massachusetts courts by a good man who saw it done and minutely describes it; and the Morgan cases tried by special Justice William L. Marcy, showed that men bound by these oaths were capable, in the words of Marcy from the bench, of "defying heaven and earth" to keep them.

Now to face such facts and then say, "We never before heard that our courts administer such oaths," seems to us a very wicked and contemptible quibble, utterly unworthy of an American Sentinel. To swear 600,000 men, citizens, husbands, fathers to have their throats cut if they disobey unknown superiors, or break secret, unlawful oaths, is certainly worse and more fraught with danger to the country than any slips or extravagant utterances of the National Reform Association made up of all sorts and sects of religion.

We shall carefully read the Sentinel's reply to these strictures as we have read many things in its columns which betokened earnestness and ability. But if he convinces us by his treatment of the lodge curse or trifling about our fears of the lodge curse, that he is either a coward or a quibbler, though we shall pity him as a brother who professes to believe the Decalogue, the readers of the Cynosure will be troubled no more, in these columns, with the ideas of a Sentinel who strains at the gnats of the National Reform Association and swallows the camels of the lodge.

—Secretary Stoddard went to Iowa last week expecting to remain a week or more assisting Bro. Hawley.

—Miss S. A. Farley, who is representing the New Iberia, Louisiana, school, is yet in this city, and after much hope deferred is finding slight encouragement among people of means. She has received as yet but a trifle in comparison with the worthiness of her cause, but hopes still for the way opened by the Lord to secure a portion of the "silver and the gold" which is in the hands of his people.

—Many thanks to some unknown friend for several copies of Hartford dailies, containing an account of a special meeting of the Connecticut Masonic Grand Lodge, at which Hiram Lodge was formally cut off from Masonic intercourse, her charter revoked, and all the forms of dreadful excommunication were gone through. We lately noticed the case and will resume it when there is more space next week.

—It must have been a surprise to some of our well-meaning, lodge-opposing editors to find such mischievous advantage taken of their confidence in a "patent-inside" and a Talmage sermon. Notwithstanding, it is not all loss; and at least it will justify several strong arguments on the other side. Since Thurlow Weed's statement to the Batavia N. C. A. convention on the Morgan murder no document has had so wide a circulation as this Talmage apology for an evil system.

—William Milligan Sloane, Professor of History in the College of New Jersey, Princeton, says the Christian Statesman of the eldest son of the late Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, received the degree of Doctor of Letters, in company with such distinguished names as Andrew Dickinson White, ex-president of Cornell University; Richard Salter Storrs, the pulpit orator of Brooklyn; George William Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly; George Bancroft, the historian; and many others, at the recent celebration of the centennial of Columbus college, New York. Professor Sloane recently declined a professorship in Columbia college, which is his alma mater.

—The question is asked, says Loomis's Musical and Masonic Journal, "Are all members of the lodges Masons?" The same lodge authority answers: "No! Neither are all members of Christian churches Christians." But the trouble with this lodge logic is that the Masonic lodge is all that can make a Mason or that pretends to; but nowhere, nor by any intelligent person is it claimed that the mere ceremony of joining a church makes a man a Christian. Joining a church is a simple public confession of a spiritual work believed to have been done in the heart. The effect of a lodge initiation is: upon the body to injure and dishonor it; upon the mind to cause fright or disgust; upon the conscience to sear it against the voice of its God.

After all, the best argument to prove that a thing can be done is to do it; and the best argument to show that it can be done well is to do it well.

REFORM NEWS.

IOWA CAMPAIGNING.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After the Congress of Churches and Christians was past, from which we did and do hope so much, I lingered a few days at Wheaton, more loth to leave because my dearest earthly friend and companion, my wife, had come from Minnesota, and was with me there.

The next day after leaving Wheaton I attended a Presbyterian meeting of the United Presbyterian church, and made some arrangements for future work. Leaving Stanwood I came to Cedar Rapids and made the acquaintance of Bro. N. Bourne, and Samuel Heaton, two veteran friends of reform. Here also I made some arrangements for future work.

From Cedar Rapids I came to Glidden, and was met at the station by Mr. A. J. Loudenback, and conveyed six miles into the country to his home. This was Saturday, April 16. I went that same night two miles farther to a United Brethren church, where I lectured against the lodge religion.

On Sabbath morning he took me to Glidden and I preached in the Presbyterian church, to a full congregation of attentive listeners, the glorious Gospel of the ever blessed God. In the afternoon of Sabbath, Bro. Loudenback conveyed me six miles into the country where I preached again; and after this second sermon he took me to his own home six miles away where I spent the night.

On Monday night we went again to the United Brethren church where I had lectured Saturday night and I gave them a second lecture. The audience was much larger than before and the attention was excellent.

This is one of the points that Rev. Halleck Floyd of Dayton, Ohio, will visit, and speak at, in his Iowa tour among the churches. Bro. Floyd requested me, when we met in Chicago, to co-operate with him in his efforts to strengthen the hands of Iowa reformers in the United Brethren church. I am glad that God in his good providence has permitted me to go before my dear brother to this place, and break up the fallow ground, and prepare it to receive the good seed which he, no doubt, will scatter with a liberal hand when he comes.

I came to spend a week in Carroll county, but it looks now as though I would have to put in two, and perhaps three weeks, of solid labor before I leave. Let prayer be continually offered that great and effectual doors may be opened that no man can shut; and that many hearts may be opened to give attention to the word spoken. And let the Christian reformers of Iowa work as well as pray, and the day will hasten when there will be a separation of the precious from the vile; when American Christians will no more think of joining in the false worship of American lodges, than converts to Christ in Africa would think of continuing the worship of devils in their lodges, after being baptized into Christ and his church. C. F. HAWLEY.

WELCOMED IN WESTERN OHIO.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This week finds me in the western central part of our State. I have had this field in view for some time, but have not been able to reach it till now. There is no part of the State, so far as I have observed, that is naturally more productive than this; but I am sorry to learn it is being wasted in the growth of that weed, tobacco. There are, however, here as elsewhere, many godly men and women whom we are told are "the salt of the earth." Woe be unto Sodom when only Lot and his family remaineth good!

Leaving Columbus, an hour's ride brought me to Cedarville. The same cordiality was manifest on the part of our friends which has always been their characteristic. A meeting was soon arranged for Monday evening, the only evening which seemed available. Rev. Mr. McQuiston and son were holding gospel temperance meetings; the Salvation Army had Tuesday evening. During the latter part of the week I visited Clifton and Yellow Springs, finding friends and securing readers to the Cynosure at both points. There did not seem to be any opening for lectures there at present. Rev. Mr. Bailey of the U. P. church, Clifton, extended me an invitation to return and speak there at some future time. Sabbath morning I attended worship with the "Old Side" Covenanters. (There are two Covenanter churches in Cedarville; one believes in voting, the other does not while under our present Constitution.) I had expected to have heard the pastor, Rev. T. C. Sproull, but as he preferred to hear me I submitted.

Sabbath and Monday were rainy, but the clouds

THE HOME.

RESTORED.

The dawn is breaking—open wide the shutter,
Let in the salt breeze from the silver bay;
See how the leaves around the lattice flutter
In the first breath of this sweet summer day!

And lying here (your face beside my pillow,
Your hand in mine), I mark the shadows flee;
And catch the glory on some far off billow,
And feel the strange enchantment of the sea.

True friend, true love, your patient watch is ended;
(It is of life, not death, you skylark sings!)
At dead of night God's messenger descended,
Silent and swift, with healing on his wings.

My heart awoke to passionate thanksgiving,
As future years before my vision came;
The Lord has numbered me among the living,
Blessed forever be his holy name!

How freshly sweet this early wind is blowing,
How fair the morning looks on sea and shore!
We shall go forth together, surely knowing
That He will guide our steps forevermore.

WEEK-DAY SERMON.

BY E. E. FLAGG.

Is our earth as pictured in the Apocalypse, with empires shaking to their foundations and great nations falling from their spheres like untimely figs before the blasting breath of the Sirrocco; with storms and earthquakes doing their worst, and creatures of the pit with strange likeness to humanity and fiendlike powers for evil coming forth to devastate and destroy, a gigantic organ out of tune, and all this shock and change and convulsion but the discordant notes which the Divine Tuner must bring out of it before harmony can be restored? And what means that strange interlude of celestial peace when the crash and roar of its mighty keys grows still, and there is "silence in heaven for the space of half an hour"?

He who has never known a silent place in his life, whose soul has not had its hours, nay its months, its years perhaps of waiting like an instrument with dumb keys for the Divine Musician's touch before it could evolve its life harmony, has lost much. Out of the forty years spent by the Jewish lawgiver in the desert of Midian came the redemption of a nation; out of the thirty years in Nazareth the redemption of a world. We talk of mistaken vocations, of "the round man in the square hole" and vice versa, but the question is not whether we are going in the way of our inclinations or our tastes but whether we are going in the way of duty. If so Providence has undeniably placed us therein and there can be no mistake about it. For I don't believe Providence makes blunders. The Power which fits with such nicety of purpose and adaptation of means to end, every bird and beast for its separate habitat will not display less wisdom when it comes to the planning of a life, as if man were of less value than a sparrow.

Mourning ones in whose souls has been made a great silence because the voice sweetest to you "has gone to join the choir invisible;" you who strive for Truth against Error, Right against Wrong, while the cry of oppressed humanity goes up to the unanswering heavens; you whose prayers seem to dash like spent birds against the infinite crystalline to fall lifeless at your feet, winning neither sign nor token, thank God for his silences! They mean something,—something infinitely tender and sweet, a higher blessing than you sought for, a deeper communion than you dreamed of—when your eyes are open to see it. "Like as a mother comforteth." We are all familiar with that wonderful expression. But how does she oftentimes do it? Don't we know that her wordless comforting is the tenderest of all, when she gathers her crying child to her bosom, and with the blessed consciousness, "Mother understands, mother knows all about it," the little one's sobs are hushed and the April shower is over. The most beneficent forces of Nature are noiseless; the deepest heart communion has no language; the tenderest sympathy we can offer the mourner is never in words.

"Shall I have part in the labor,
In the silence and the night
Of the plans divine, eternal
That he opens to my sight;
In the strength and the inspiration
That his crowned and chosen know?
Oh, well may my darkest sorrow
Into songs of triumph flow."

Yes; only wait, and a part shall be yours in the grand harmony of the universe. The silent wastes shall be vocal, shall grow into a temple open to heaven; and your hymns of praise shall make glorious concord with the chant of the seraphim.

THOUGHTS FOR THE TIMES.

BY J. LEE GAMBLE.

The present times call for the special proclamation and emphasis of three lines of Bible truth, viz.: holiness, divine healing, and the second coming of Christ.

1. Holiness. The work of personal holiness. In the work of personal holiness there is (1) the agent, the Holy Spirit; (2) the subject, the whole man, body, soul, and spirit; (3) the instrument, the Word of truth (John 17: 17; Eph. 5: 26); and (4) the result is a clean man, inside and outside, hating sin and loving righteousness, loyal to Jesus and obedient to his Word.

Outward fruits of inward holiness. "By their fruits ye shall know them." A holy heart must bring forth Bible fruits in the life. These are not likely to appear all at once, but "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." Hence we are commanded to "perfect holiness." And a holy heart is one desiring, seeking and expecting to be guided day by day into more truth. John 16: 13.

How often such a one receives light from some humble remark or testimony of a fellow disciple, and is enabled thereby to correct some defect in his life or separate from some evil not apprehended before. The writer praises God with a full heart for all the light that has come to him from the Word and from his more advanced fellow disciples; and, in gratitude to both, he desires to pass the torch on to others.

Enumeration of fruits. Real Bible holiness excludes all worldly conformity (Rom. 12: 2); such as fashionable dressing, putting on of costly apparel.

Holiness results in cleansing from all outward uncleanness, tobacco-using, drunkenness, licentiousness, etc., etc.

Holiness does not admit the unequal yoking of Christians with worldlings in marriage or secret societies or business partnerships or in worldly and fashionable churches (?).

Holiness demands the entire avoidance of the white lying, polite deception, boastful advertising, exaggeration, coloring, and much talk so common in buying and selling and in society generally (Matt. 5: 37; Prov. 20: 14).

Holiness begets positive dislike for all sinful pleasures; and for the reading of anything which does not tend to the knowledge and love of God.

Holiness does not countenance, nor can it live with fairs, festivals, and other modern, worldly methods of church finances; never makes the church of Christ a "bureau of amusements" to furnish fun and entertainment for the "mixed multitude" from Egypt, which fills up the corrupt and popular sects of Christendom; never goes to the world for support for the cause of Christ, or to find trustees to manage its property and affairs; never builds costly and stylish houses of worship; never sells pews in the house of God; never stays where organs are worshipped and godless choirs sing the praise (?) of God.

Can one fail to bear the above fruits and yet be a Christian? I answer, positively, Yes; for God has many saved children who are still worldly-minded and self-indulgent. Faith, not holiness, is the condition of sonship.

If, then, one can be a "child of God" without being holy, why say anything about holiness?

1. Such passages as Mark 16: 16; Rom. 10: 9; Gal. 3: 26, point out the one step necessary to become a "child of God," and all who comply with this will be saved; but,

2. The supreme blessedness of "seeing God" is promised only to the "holy," the "pure in heart."

3. All are to be judged and rewarded according to their works; but the works of some shall be "burned up," and they shall "suffer loss," though they themselves will be saved "as by fire" (1 Cor. 3: 12-15).

4. Some of the saved will be "ashamed" before Christ at his coming (1 John 2: 28).

5. Nothing is more clearly shown in the Scriptures than that the rewards and circumstances of the saved will differ very much and be conditioned on the character of their lives and service here on the earth. Saved alone through faith in the precious blood of Christ, but rewarded according to works.

6. Those believers who are worldly-minded and self-indulgent will be saved according to the sure promise of the Word; but they will be left to pass through the awful distress of that period of woe denominated "the great tribulation" (Rev. 7: 14; revised version), whose speedy coming is looked for by students of prophecy, and startlingly heralded by the portentous signs of the times. From this time of extreme trouble (Matt. 24: 21), according to the promise of Luke 21: 36; 1 Thess. 4: 14-18; Rev. 3: 10, the self-denying, spiritually-minded, pure-hearted, watchful Christian will be saved; being caught away to meet his Lord in the clouds.

7. Therefore, we urge all Christians to be holy in order that they may "see God," that they may not "suffer loss," that they may not be "ashamed" before the Lord at his coming, and that they may escape the woes of "the great tribulation."

Then let all who love the Saviour, and trust him for salvation, come out and be separate from all that is not clearly sanctioned by his Word, conform strictly to all that Word requires, and thus be ready to meet their quickly-coming Lord (Rev. 16: 15; 22: 7, 12).

"MY YOKE IS EASY."

Such are our Lord's own words, and yet how few Christians experience it. The reason is they are chafing under their own yoke, or Satan's yoke, not Christ's. Pride, love of praise, love of ease, love of self, cause much of the trouble. These things have nothing to do with Christ's yoke. His yoke is easy. It is easy to love God, for those who do love him. It is easy to love the blessed Saviour, for those who do love him. It is easy to love every person on the globe, for those who have the spirit of Christ. It is easy to bear abuse for righteousness sake if we have a living faith in eternal things and Bible promises. It is easy to pray and speak and work for Christ if his spirit dwell in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. All Christian work will be easy if we are co-workers with God for he is able to carry the yoke and us too. The trouble is, we undertake to have our way too much. We like to lead instead of meekly following in a way that sometimes crosses the natural disposition. Jesus says: "Follow me," and if we honestly and faithfully obey, his yoke will be easy and the burden light. Dear Christian reader: Give the Gospel one fair trial.

GRATITUDE.

As the branches of a tree return their sap to the root from whence it arose; as a river poureth his streams to the sea, from whence his spring was supplied, so the heart of a grateful man delighteth in returning a benefit received.

He acknowledgeth his obligation with cheerfulness; he looketh on his benefactor with love and esteem.

And if to return it be not in his power, he nourisheth the memory of it in his breast with kindness; he forgetteth it not all the days of his life.

The hand of the generous man is like the clouds of heaven, which drop upon the earth, fruits, herbage, and flowers; the heart of the ungrateful is like a desert of sand, which swalloweth with greediness the showers that fall, but burieth them in its bosom, and produceth nothing.

Envy not thy benefactor, neither strive to conceal the benefit he hath conferred; for though to oblige is better than to be obliged, though the act of generosity commandeth admiration, yet the humility of gratitude toucheth the heart, and is amiable in the sight of both God and man.

But receive not a favor from the hand of the proud; to the selfish and avaricious have no obligation; the vanity of pride shall expose thee to shame; the greediness of avarice shall never be satisfied.—Sel.

THE MISSIONARY'S NEPHEW.

In a paper on "Earnest Work in a Big City," J. W. McGill, of the Manchester City Mission, relates the following incident which occurred in his visiting among the canal boatmen:

Calling one day at a long boat, I read a portion of Rom. 5, when the captain said to me—
"You have read that to us before."

"I dare say," said I; "what do you think about it?"

"I will tell you what it has done for me. It has made me shed many a tear in this boat, and on the towing path too, on account of my sins. I was religiously trained by a good mother, but as I grew up I became very wicked, owing, in a great measure, to bad company. I became so bad in my conduct that no one would employ me. At last I took to boating. In this job I have done for years just as I liked. From your first coming among us your very presence has been a reproof to me. You have often brought to my mind the man I am named after, Roger Miller, who was my mother's brother."

"What, Roger Miller, the missionary, who went out with Mr. Williams to the South Seas?"

"He was my uncle, sir. I remember him well, and how he used to put his hand on my head when I was a very little boy, and tell me about Jesus Christ, and told me to be a good boy and love the Saviour who died for my sins. I have my uncle's name, and now, thank God, I believe I have my uncle's Saviour. I have often wept and wept much as I looked back at my misspent life, especially since you read that passage to us before—God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." Instead of killing us right out, he loves us, sinners as we are. His love has broken my heart to pieces."

"I hope, then," I said, "you will live for God, Roger."

"Yes, to the best of my power, I will live to him every day."

Thus the bread cast upon the waters is found after many days; and long after the missionary has ceased to pray and ceased to labor, the pressure of his hand is still felt upon the head of the wandering prodigal, and the memories of his counsels still turn the feet of the wayward into the paths of peace.

Such facts should cause the weary worker to take heart and toil on, knowing that his labor is not in vain in the Lord.—Ez.

A PRAYER.

Oh, that my eyes might closed be
To what becomes me not to see!
That deafness might possess my ear
To what concerns me not to hear!
That truth my tongue might always tie
From ever speaking foolishly!
That no vain thought might ever rest
Or be conceived within my breast!
That by each word, each deed, each thought,
Glory may to my God be brought!

But what are wishes? Lord, my eye
On thee is fixed, to thee I cry;
Oh, purge out all my dross, my sin,
Make me more white than snow within;
Wash, Lord, and purify my heart,
And make it clean in every part;
And when 'tis clean, Lord, keep it so;
For that is more than I can do.

—Thomas Ellwood.

A BABY'S REBUKE.

It was a Christian household. The young father and mother had set up the family altar as soon as they entered their home, and when they gathered about the table at meal times God's blessing was always invoked. The baby, a beautiful boy of eighteen months, had been taught to put his little hands before his face while the blessing was being asked, and though talking was not one of his accomplishments, he always accompanied his father's voice by a soft, cooing sound.

One day the father was greatly hurried by a business engagement, and hastily began his dinner without delaying to ask a blessing as usual.

Baby had been placed at the table in his high chair and his brown eyes looked wonderingly at his father. Something had been left out. Tiny as he was, he was not too young to feel the influence of habit.

In another moment the father and mother heard the baby's voice, and looking at him saw the little hands over his face while he cooed softly to himself.

Rebuked by the baby's remembrance, the meal was left untasted while the blessing was asked, and never again, under any stress of circumstances, was it omitted.—Am. Messenger.

STRANGE THINGS IN NATURE.

The spider spins its ladder out of itself. When it ascends it eats the ladder; when it wants to go down it spits it out again. There are plants which eat animals. They have mouths and stomachs. If a fly falls on one of these it shuts up and begins to digest it. Having done so, it opens again ready for another meal. The leaves are the lips. The opossum has pockets. In its side pockets this animal carries its young. "If the cat had only been provided with pockets she need not have to carry her kittens in her mouth by the back of their necks." It is said that the huma never alights. There are sea birds which can roost on the waves in the worst storm. The carrier-pigeon knows the way home if let loose many a mile away. Camels weep. They are patient, but know by sight and smell when danger is near, and show their fear by tears. While being loaded the camel stops chewing its cud.

The mouth of the whale is an instance of ingenuity and foresight. It is a kind of shrimping net. One would hardly suppose that one of the largest animals would seek its food among the smallest, that millions would be daily destroyed to support one life, but so it is according to McCulloch. But if the whale had to swallow all the water it must draw into its mouth with its prey it would be exceedingly inconvenient. So Providence has provided a singular piece of machinery to prevent this. It is a series of flat hoops meeting from both sides of the mouth into arches, carrying ranges of bristles which form a strainer and also a kind of a net. The water is thus rejected and the mass of shrimps delivered to the throat.

TEMPERANCE.

THE HADDOCK MURDER TRIAL.

[From the Chicago News.]

All Woodbury county, Iowa, shares with Sioux City the shame of the palpable denial of justice in the Arensdorf trial. It seems that it was not enough of an outrage against the sacredness of their duty for eleven jurors to vote for the acquittal of the defendant. Nine of them must needs flaunt their utter contempt for decency, sobriety, and morality by visiting the Franz brewery to drink the health of Arensdorf in the beer which was free to flow through the blood of Rev. George C. Haddock. The jurors who could listen to such overwhelming proof of blood-guiltiness against a man and his brewery, and, after voting to acquit him, go and drink the liquid which was the incentive to his crime, must have consciences dead to all the usual influences that move men of easy moral natures to avoid the appearance of evil. While the disagreement of the jury proved that eleven men absolutely unfit to sit as jurors had been imposed upon the prosecution of Arensdorf, one would scarcely have deemed it possible that nine of them would show such "callousness and numbness of soul" as to celebrate the victory of lawlessness and perjury in the blood-tainted beer of the man whose neck they had saved.

[From the Milwaukee Sentinel.]

The jury in the trial of Arensdorf for the murder of the Rev. Mr. Haddock at Sioux City failed to agree, and the case is one in which any opinion based on the evidence is worth very little. If there was not rank perjury there would have been if it had been necessary. There seems to be little doubt that there was perjury, and as little doubt that a part of the jury paid no respect to the evidence. Probably the most conclusive evidence would have made no difference in the result.

If it had been Leavitt in the prisoner's box probably a verdict of guilty would have been rendered. The disreputable and vindictive element involved in the murder would be content to see Leavitt hang because he was the betrayer of the gang. With Arensdorf the case was different. He is of closer intimacy with the persons most concerned in the cases for the prosecution of which Mr. Haddock gathered evidence. They would spare no money or effort in his behalf. Probably there was bribery of some jurors and intimidation of others. The one juror who stood out for a verdict of guilty was told by the agents of the defense to name his price.

The records of crime present nothing more atrocious than this murder, which involved a conspiracy for the deliberate assassination of a citizen concerned only in the enforcement of a law. There was evidence enough to show that Arensdorf was a party to the conspiracy. Yet there is no reasonable hope that anybody will be brought to conviction for the crime.

BURNING THE MONTEREY HOTEL.

There is a suspicion afloat that the Del Monte hotel was purposely set on fire. The fact that the water supply and the pipe machinery did not work well seemed to give ground for the suspicion. Of course the anarchists and monopolist-haters of San Francisco are suggested as the criminals. But this does not seem probable.

There is a more plausible theory. Young men come here, or are sent here by their friends in the East, to get them away from their old evil haunts, where they have been debased, betrayed and led into drunkenness and continued vice. Perhaps a good resolution sustains them for awhile, but they find the omnipresent bar, especially wherever the Southern Pacific R. R. owns a half acre of ground. And they fall again and are again reduced to a condition of despair equaling that of a lost spirit consigned to everlasting woe. That such a one or two or three prodigal sons should have been destroyed at the Del Monte drinking man-trap, which stands a few feet from the hotel, was quite likely at any time since it was built. That the drinker's mania should produce a fiendish resolve of mad, wild, indiscriminate revenge is quite likely. And the idea of burning up the hotel and all its sleeping inmates in one blazing funeral pyre, when it entered into the burning lava beds of the brain of the crazed inebriate, would be greeted with a peal of demoniac, jibbering laughter.

Years ago, in this State, a smart young man of keen business tact became the helpless victim of the dram-shop. He could not keep sober, could not pass the one hundred saloons that yawned all around him every day. One day he imparted to the writer a secret which he believed would be gladly received. He was going to set fire in the night to every dram-shop that had ever sold him liquor. "They have sent me to hell, and I shall send them there, too. It is a perfectly fair deal," he said. And it was only by persuading him of the impossibility of carrying it out, and of the danger of burning up innocent women and children along with the drunkard-makers, that he desisted. That young man was not a fiend or villain. He was the son of a Christian family, and was tenderly and religiously reared. He was rescued and became, and is to-day, a good, sober, prosperous citizen. But a word of encouragement at that critical time would have made him burn up a city, or try to.

If the railroad kings, in their insatiate greed for gold at the expense of the lives and souls of their fellow-men, will continue to be low grog-shop keepers, and lose $350,000 by it now and then, it only serves them right. And people who go to whisky hotels must expect to risk their baggage and their lives.

And putting it at the worst, if the anarchists and dynamiters of San Francisco, beggared and destroyed and demonized by the dram-shops of the Central Pacific R. R. and others, did send an emissary to do this deed, it was a horrible crime—but it was much akin to the daily crime of the railroad company which, at about one thousand depots, sells rum every Sunday and week day to boys and inebriates and madmen, and every day tempts their crazed victims to burn hotels, commit murder wholesale and retail, and do every monster feat of crime.

All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword.—Los Angeles Censor.

A NEGRO SALOON-KEEPER ASKS FOR MONEY.

Among the cases just filed in the office of the Clerk of the Court is that of Lexius Henson, a negro, vs. the administrator of the estate of the late John Davidson. Henson is a saloon-keeper, and is quite wealthy. The bill alleges that the late John Davidson is indebted to him in the sum of $5,143.68, as follows: The use of a private furnished room for ten years, from 1876 to 1886, $2,000; supplies sent to his house for five years, $2,000; services rendered while traveling during the months of July, August and September as valet, $10 a day, $920; liquors, etc., $223.68; total, $5,143.68.

Although Mr. Davidson was worth over $800,000, he would never sign his name to a paper. Nor would he ever make bills, even when traveling. He would never register at a hotel, and if required to do so, would register under an assumed name. He often loaned Henson money, telling him whenever in need to call on him (Mr. Davidson) and he should get the amount needed, and promised him that he should never fail in business. During Davidson's Northern trips Henson would always accompany him. Henson recently erected a handsome building in Broad street, being assisted by Mr. Davidson in so doing. Instead of paying regular bills for articles purchased from Henson's restaurant and bar, Davidson would often walk in and hand Henson a $50 or $100 bill for the payment of the things purchased, without asking questions as to the amount owed.

Henson says that he never kept any regular account of things purchased, and even though he gets the amount sued for he will fall considerably short of what is due him.—Sel.

cleared away in time for the evening lecture. I need scarcely add that I was greeted by a large audience, who gave their most respectful attention for more than an hour. The secretists seemed to think "discretion the better part of valor" and kept quiet, though given ample opportunity to speak.

On Tuesday evening I availed myself of the opportunity to hear General Lew Wallace. His subject, "Turkey and the Turks," was handled in a masterly way. It was evident he had viewed the Orient as a prime minister rather than a missionary. In the course of the lecture the General spoke of the oath ladies were required to take upon entering their new abodes. They were to forever forsake father, mother, brothers, sisters, etc. Said he, "It is very similar to that taken by some false religionists in our land." His reference was doubtless to the Catholics. Will it not apply to Masonry? "Furthermore, do I promise and swear that I will always conceal and never reveal to any person or persons whomsoever, except to a brother of this degree," etc. Here the man is sworn to life-long separation from his wife, if he has any, so far as pertains to the lodge.

Coming to this place I stopped for an hour at the Soldiers' Home near Dayton. It is indeed a beautiful home; over five thousand soldiers, I am told, have no other. As I stepped from the cars and viewed the massive buildings, the spacious grounds so well laid out and beautified by springing grass and blooming flowers, a feeling akin to reverence came over me. I walked musing on my surroundings until near the center of the grounds my attention was attracted by the rattling of glasses to the "Beer Hall." So here in this miniature Eden I found the subtle snake had made its way! The graveyard which lay a little farther on was dotted with small white slabs which marked the resting-place of each member of the vast army of the dead. Nearly every day the cold clogs rattle over the coffin of some departed soldier. Standing here I said to myself, What is life? But yesterday the cradle; to-morrow the grave. Is this all? No. Should every reformer in Ohio realize the sublimity of the hour, the importance of working during life's little day, how our work would go forward! How dark must be the night to him who departs life's day leaving no good deeds as stars to shine in the great hereafter. I speak here Saturday evening and Sabbath. Other meetings are being arranged.

DEBATES IN THE COLORED SCHOOLS.

SELMA, Ala.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We have recently renewed the agitation of the lodge question, and held a public discussion of the subject in the Selma Literary Society which meets regularly on Friday night in the chapel of Knox Academy. We are to continue the discussion next Friday night. The lodge supporters are pressed for arguments to support their side. We are glad to say that numbers and strength are on our side. In our city we have the ministry against the lodge. There are only a few exceptions. The men of strength are not connected with them; or, at least, if any of them have been members of secret orders, they are not now active. All the leading educators of our city (and Selma is the leading educational city of this State, if not of the Gulf States) are opposed to secret societies.

In these discussions the hollowness of these societies is being shown up in a clear and forcible manner. We consider this a season of grand rallying against the lodge. It will tend to set the minds of the young people, who are here from all parts of the State, right with reference to this great question. I find that the students that are taught in most of our schools go out opposed to the lodge.

While we have here in Selma many different secret orders, yet their influence is not strong. I believe the "Knights of Wise Men" is the strongest order. Some years ago one of its members died, and his mother received two thousand dollars. This caused a great rush into that order, believing that at their death some member of the family would receive a large sum of money. This makes that society quite popular among the colored people. But it is based on the same principles of all secret societies. The name of Christ is omitted from the prayer used in their ceremony over the dead. It is simply Freemasonry in another dress—in red aprons instead of white. It is the promise of temporal gain that leads many into these traps.

The anti-secret society influence is so strong in this city that we believe the thinking young men who go out of the many schools of this place will not be inclined to join the lodge. It is the young that we desire and hope to reach and influence in this matter. From these discussions we think great good will result. We find it necessary every two or three years to revive our work, and repeat our attack upon the lodge system. Every year we find some coming out and denouncing the system as a fraud. Several copies of the Cynosure come to the city; these we keep going after we have read them. I think the circulation of literature is one of the best methods of breaking the lodge power. Men will read a paper with calmer feelings than they will listen to a discussion; and these discussions are often animated. I wish the Cynosure could be in every colored man's family in the South. May the Lord bless this journal in its good work. Sincerely yours,

G. M. ELLIOTT.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Farwell Hall meetings in this city were last week conducted by Mr. Moody, assisted two days by Rev. Dr. J. H. Brookes of St. Louis, whose Bible readings on Thursday and Friday produced a marked impression. Dr. Brookes is a powerful and eloquent speaker and mighty in the Scriptures. He will continue to address the meetings daily this week in the Hall in connection with Mr. Moody.

—Dr. L. W. Munhall has gone from Boston to Worcester, where his labors, a friend writes, are being blessed, and a deep interest is being awakened. "His Bible readings are especially potent. But the lodge is obstructive to conquests among the men."

—Miss Narcissa E. White, of Pennsylvania, lecturer for the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has been spending a month in Ohio. She has visited thirteen cities and spoken almost every night to crowded houses. She will, by invitation, address the General Missionary Society of the United Presbyterian church, May 13, on "What Heathendom has Gained and What Lost by Contact with Christendom." The subject will admit a temperance statement, as in too many lands the word Christian is almost synonymous with rum.

—Bro. R. Shemeld, missionary in Natal, Africa, writes to the Free Methodist of an opportunity given by God of confounding the native magicians, even as Moses withstood and defeated Jannes and Jambres before Pharaoh. The test of their false power lasted half a day or more and ended in their entire discomfiture. The incident opened the eyes of many of the natives.

—Mrs. Mary Grinnell, of Kishwaukee, Illinois, makes an able and earnest appeal in the Wesleyan Methodist of April 13, in behalf of a mission to be established in Africa by the Wesleyan Methodists of the United States. Mrs. G. estimates that in that denomination alone $102,522 are paid for tea, and thinks if what is paid for this and other useless indulgences was consecrated to God's cause, there would be no lack of means for both home and foreign missions.

—The Congregationalist announces that the American Home Missionary Society has closed its year without debt. For a time it was feared that a disheartening deficiency would remain when the books closed, but the special efforts of friends and the activity of the officers of the Board have brought it out into a large and wealthy place.

—At a recent meeting of the Congregational Club of San Francisco it was said that in that city of 300,000 inhabitants the attendance at the Protestant churches was about 32,000, and at the Catholic churches about 18,000, making a total church attendance of about 50,000. Probably three-fourths of the population never attend church.

—Large families are no obstacle to missionary work. For Bishop William Taylor writes from Central Africa that missionaries with big families are no encumbrance to his mission. He says: "Wm. H. Mead, for example, has a wife and six children. I wish I had forty such families at command for Africa."

—One of the concessions made to the Catholics of Germany by Bismarck was the restoration of a full theological Catholic faculty at Bonn, where, since 1870, half of the professors had been old Catholics. These appointments have now been made. As German professors are appointed for life, the two old Catholic men, Langen and Reusch, are still members of this faculty, but the day of their usefulness is doubtless over. Nevertheless papists will continue to hate Bismarck and his former admirers have both their eyes sore from reading such paragraphs as the above.

—Rev. Jonathan Cressett, who for seventeen years has been a missionary in China, says that one section of China is still untouched by the missionaries

—the Mongols living to the north and west. The Mongols go down to Lassa in Thibet as to a Mecca. They are the most tenacious as to their religion of any people whom he had ever met. Their deity is called Borhan, or "light." They observe one day in every seven, and although they worship idols, they have ten commandments similar to the Biblical commandments, and their system of morals is very high.

—The People's Tabernacle of Cleveland, edited by pastor Johnson, of the Music Hall mission church, says, in the April 23rd number, of the revival work which has been in progress there: "The meetings of Dr. Pentecost which have now continued for six weeks in this city, have been productive of great good. The churches where the meetings have been held have been helped, and the city at large has felt the good influence of the work. But the best good that has been manifest is the great number that have been brought out of the darkness into the light of God. A petition asking Dr. Pentecost to remain another month has been circulated and signed by several hundred, but it was taken hold of too late, after the doctor had sent word on to Montpelier that he would be through here next Sunday. But he gives some encouragement to hope that he will come back again next fall if there is need of it. We believe that a large proportion of those who have come forward during the meetings and have been enrolled by the pastors as converts will prove to be genuine converts to Christ. The doctor's clear and plain presentation of truth, and the way of salvation, without undue excitement, have been most excellent."

—The evangelist Bliss has recovered from a recent illness, and resumed work in connection with Mr. Moody. On May 1st he will commence an engagement for one year with the Chicago Y. M. C. A., taking charge of the devotional work at Farwell Hall.

—E. Oberdorsten, formerly a Lutheran pastor, later an infidel lecturer, who was converted at the Adelphi Theatre mission in this city last fall, has gone to Iowa to do evangelistic work, beginning in Burlington.

—The evangelist William F. Davis is laboring for a time with the Berea Faith mission on Sumner avenue, Brooklyn.

—It is a remarkable fact, says the Baptist Weekly, not generally known that in Ethiopia a people numbering about 200,000 have the Old Testament in an Ethiopic version and still adhere rigidly to the Mosaic ceremonies and laws. They are the children of Hebrew immigrants who, in the name of the great dispersion, settled in Abyssinia and married wives of that nation—something not strange, as the Ethiopians are Semitic in nationality and language.

—A net gain of 100,000 communicants is the return of the Methodist Episcopal church for 1886. The church now has over 2,000,000 communicants.

—At Grinnell, Iowa, one hundred and sixty-seven new members were received into the Congregational church April 3d, one hundred and fifty-five on confession. These results are due to earnest pastoral work, supplemented by five weeks' evangelistic service.

LITERATURE.

NATURAL LAW IN THE BUSINESS WORLD, by Henry Wood. In cloth, 222 pages. Price 75 cents. Lee and Shepard, Boston.

The light of natural law is applied to the live, social and economic topics which are now attracting so much attention. It aims to expose the abuses and evils which masquerade under the banner of labor, and the bad results of class prejudice and antagonism. Labor combinations and their effect on the laborer, socialistic tendencies, excess of economic and railroad legislation, the distribution of wealth, principles governing corporations and railroads, and also many other prominent issues are fully and thoroughly examined in their connection with unvarying natural laws and principles. It is shown clearly that the business world is permeated by natural law, and that success in any department can only be gained by conformity to it. The opposing combinations, unions, corners, unwarranted legislation, sentimental and socialistic ideas, and everything else of an artificial nature are shown to be mischievous, destructive and on a false basis.

This volume fills a space not before occupied by any other work, and critics to whom the book has been submitted, predict for it a remarkable demand.

Every one who has read Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," and many more, will be interested in seeing a corresponding application of natural and fixed principles to the economic and business world in which we live.

In his forthcoming article on "Pharaoh," in the May Century, Professor J. A. Paine (who will be remembered as the identifier of Mt. Pisgah) advances the novel theory that Ramees the Great married his own daughter, the patroness of Moses. It has been held by some authorities that this "Pharaoh's daughter" was the child of Seti I., who preceded Ramees the Great, and that in uniting herself to Ramees she married her own brother. Professor Paine, however, points out indications and evidence proving that she was not the daughter, but the granddaughter, of Seti, and that she married her own father.

LODGE NOTES.

Chicago was recently somewhat startled by the report that in the State Masonic Orphans' Home in that city, one fourth of the children were sick with the measles, and that every girl in the Home had them. It was true, but not alarming, owing to the fact that in the $40,000 Home there are but four children—three boys and one girl—and that the girl really did have the measles.—Masonic Record.

The Carpenters' Council of Chicago, met Friday night to hear reports of walking delegates and compare notes on the condition of the strike. It is stated that the strike cost the men $200,000, and that is a very low estimate. Eight thousand were out two weeks; the men represents the wages they lost. But the amounts paid the strikers, the job stewards, walking delegates, secretaries, for hall rent and a hundred and one other purposes is not taken into account at all. They will reach another $100,000. To the master carpenters the loss has been greater. The two weeks' strike cost men and bosses something like $1,000,000. Very many contracts have been cancelled within a week; other contracts have been broken; no new contracts have been made, and under the existing order of things it is not likely that any will be formed within the next few weeks.

A masked mob of Knights of Labor lately wrecked the office of a paper called the Owl at Troy, New York. The Owl had openly opposed the labor lodges, hence their secret vengeance.

A cable dispatch to a Catholic journal at New York states the Pope has conditionally decided in favor of the Knights of Labor.

Judge Jemison of the Wayne Circuit court, Detroit, decided against the Knights of Labor in their suit to recover from an "imported" ship carpenter the sum advanced to buy him off from working while the Detroit men were on a strike. The judge holds that it is unlawful to attempt to interfere with the business of the ship-building company.

The New York manufacturers of gold and silver, Thursday morning, locked out all their employees connected with the Knights of Labor.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for three weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. Could you make better use of a dollar of the Lord's money than to send to ten of your friends three copies of the Cynosure?

ONE DOLLAR

for the Christian Cynosure from now until Jan. 1, 1888.

The first to send in single subscribers or clubs will have the back numbers containing an account of the Congress of Christians sent to each subscriber until the extra edition is exhausted.

Who will volunteer to act as agent and begin at once? Sample copies sent to canvassers free.

NOTICE

to those who receive the Christian Cynosure with this item marked. A friend has paid for the paper to be sent to you for a few months, with the hope that at the end of the time paid for you will wish to subscribe for it, but if you do not, the paper will not be sent beyond the time paid for. If for any reason you are not willing to receive it on the above terms, please send notice to that effect at once.

Are you doing all that you can to introduce the Cynosure? Have you not some friend to whom you could send it?

India and Africa are fields where the Cynosure is much needed. Can you not send at once a copy to one of those places?

Rev. J. A. Cole, whose book on African secret societies is advertised in the Cynosure, says that secret societies are the greatest hindrance which that dark continent has to-day to contend against. Many on the coast can read English; who will send the Cynosure to them?

Last week we sent to Bombay, India, about $10 worth of anti secret publications. And this week we have an appeal from a gentleman in India asking the anti-secret friends to send our literature to save the heathen from the mock religions of the secret lodge. Who will send the Cynosure to India? The Christian Cynosure one year to either of the above named foreign countries costs $2.02.

Those who have been patiently waiting for the sketch of the Life and Labors of Gen. Phelps will be glad to learn that we are now promised the work by May 10th next.

The few fine cabinet photographs of Prest. J. Blanchard which we had, having been disposed of so quickly, arrangements have now been made by which all can be supplied at this office who wish them. Price postpaid 25 cents each.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Prest. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is fully attested by J. Q. Doehring, Past Master, U. S. No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman from different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secretary works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was secured by the author, who murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, clal as and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Prest. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "Mason" in his left leg. He left lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 38 cents; per dozen, $3.80.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cts.

College Secret Societies. Their origin, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Oddfellows Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templars Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $8.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District, North-western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. with signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machineists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Infringe? By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the infringe of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 10 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

PLANTS IN THE BED-ROOM.

Babyhood replies thus to a question as to the propriety of keeping plants in the children's sleeping-room:

Plants are not usually injurious in a room during the daytime. When there is sunlight the plants absorb carbonic acid and appropriate its carbon and set free a certain amount of oxygen. This process is not harmful, but rather the reverse, to animal life. The only harm that need be considered is that possibly arising from any considerable quantity of damp earth in the room, but this is probably very slight. But with the coming of darkness this process of absorption of carbonic acid ceases, and a certain amount of the gas is given off; just how much, of course, varies with the quantity and kind of plants in your greenery. The effect is in kind, if not in degree, very much the same as that of having another person sleeping in the room. If you can arrange your plants upon a stand with casters that can be rolled out of the room before sundown and brought back in the morning, the plants will probably be harmless; otherwise they are better away.

NURSING SCARLET FEVER.

The child should be nursed by one who has all the details of the case under her charge, who should wear the simplest kind of clothing, that can be daily changed and washed or aired. She should have an adjoining room in which to keep her clothes and make her toilet. Everything that comes in contact with the child, such as towels, brushes, blankets, or sheets, should be kept rigidly separate, and thoroughly boiled and aired before being taken from the premises.

The room should be kept thoroughly ventilated, either by keeping open a window in the adjoining room or by some arrangement attached to the window of the sick-room which will allow the ingress and egress of air without a draught; its temperature should be kept at about 68, and regulated by a thermometer. If the room receives its heat from a furnace, the hot air should be made to pass over a pail of water containing either Labarraque's solution or Platt's Chlorides, and a towel with one end dipped in such a solution should be tucked over the register. If there be a stove, or, better than all, an open grate, these solutions can be placed near by, so as to be readily evaporated and distributed throughout the room.

The chamber should always contain some such solution in which to receive the excreta. A small quantity of urine should daily be collected in a clean vessel for the doctor's examination. It is usual to anoint the child with some greasy substance; this allays the intense itching or pricking, which is most annoying; it softens the skin, which is inflamed and swollen; it depresses the fever to a certain extent; and it serves to collect the scales of the skin, which, if shed, serve as carriers of contagion, and which are usually shed in flakes. The child should have his mouth washed once or twice daily, as also other parts of his body, for purposes of cleanliness, and the water used can contain either Labarraque's solution or vinegar Listerine, and possibly the doctor will order the frequent use of the hand-spray, such as is employed with cologne, using some good disinfectant for the throat in these cases.

Scarlatina, as far as we know at the present time, only comes from previous cases of the disease. Cleanliness not only lessens the danger of serious complications which are often fatal, and mitigates the severity of an attack, but it is the great germ-destroyer, and prevents the spread of this dread disease in households.—Dr. J. M. Keating, in Babyhood.

AIRING ROOMS.

It is a great mistake that the whole house, particularly sleeping rooms and the dining rooms, receives little ventilating and purifying the air, when it can be done with so little trouble and no expense. A pitcher of cold water placed on a table or bureau will absorb all the gases with which the room is filled from the respiration of those eating or sleeping in the apartment. Very few realize how important such purification is for the health of the family, or, indeed, understand or realize that there can be any impurity in the rooms, yet in a few hours a pitcher or pail of cold water—the colder the more effective—will make the air of the room pure, but the water will be entirely unfit for use.

In bedrooms a pail or pitcher of water should always be kept, and changed often if any one stays in the room during the day, certainly be put in fresh when the inmates retire. Such water should never be drunk, but either a covered pitcher or glass bottle with a stopper should be used for drinking water, and always be kept closely covered. Impure water causes more sickness than even impure air, and for that reason, before using water from a pump or reservoir for drinking or cooking, one should pump or draw out enough to clear the pipes before using it, particularly in the morning, after the water has been standing in the pipes all night.—Philadelphia Call.

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMEY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it.' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his life in that direction, and his voice and reason will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are battened up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best that we have seen. It is so clearly and so powerfully put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against

lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like molten lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the profane is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Christian's Secret

OR

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the truth, and will, we believe, be a help to many who in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it draws criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from personal study."—Interdenominationalist.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final."—Religious Repository.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, practical reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught through with apt illustrations, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist (Philadelphia.)

"So interesting I find it that I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of universal circulation."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the Christian church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The course of the author in attacking such a well-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fantastic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian (Pittsburgh.)

FARM NOTES.

CANNING FOOD FOR LIVE STOCK.

It will surprise very many, to learn that it is now practicable and profitable to preserve green food for all kinds of domestic animals—cows and other cattle, horses, sheep, hogs, poultry, etc.—in a very similar way to that in which vast amounts of meats, fruits, vegetables, etc., are kept for human consumption. The "Sour Ensilage" of the past underground expensive Silos, is supplanted by "Sweet Ensilage" kept in above ground, cheap receptacles, easily built upon any farm. It is claimed that many more animals can be kept from the same ground, and be cheaply supplied with fresh, green forage, winter and summer, the year around.

The Prairie Farmer of Chicago, in its issue of April 16, which is wholly devoted to this subject, gives very full and complete information concerning the whole matter, with numerous illustrations, and original communications from a score of prominent practical men, West and East, with their latest experiences. Indeed, this one paper supplies quite as much information as can be found in any book on the subject, and is brought up to date. Single copies can be had postpaid, for 5 cents, by addressing Orange Judd, editor of the Prairie Farmer, Chicago, Ill.

PROFITABLE GARDENING.

A farmer who is moderately successful in raising farm crops, complains that he can do little or nothing with garden vegetables. The seeds often fail to come up; and when they do, they make a feeble growth, and the crops are poor in quality. He does not pay for one-half the labor he expends on them, and by autumn his garden is a mass of weeds. He asks if there is any way by which he can do better, as he has hardly yet made up his mind to give up vegetables. We think he will find no difficulty if he will adopt the five following remedies:

1. First of all, let the garden be in an oblong shape, either by altering the outlines of the present one, or by laying out a new one, so that you may do the cultivating with a horse—a space being left at each end ten feet wide for the horse turn on, as we have pointed out on former occasions. A busy farmer cannot afford to spade and hoe his garden, for if he undertakes it, he will be sure to have poor crops and plenty of weeds. But by planting all his crops in long drills, to be dressed with a narrow cultivator, after plowing well in spring with one horse, he can keep everything clean by going over it once a week, with little trouble, and the vegetables will grow rapidly under such treatment.

2. The next thing, after laying out the garden, is to give it thorough drainage, by placing the tile as near as twenty-five feet. It will be a waste of labor to try to raise anything on badly drained ground, and you would lose all chance for early work and early crops, in waiting for the soil to become dry. Perfect drainage is the all-essential requirement for early gardening.

3. The next thing is plenty of manure. It must be broken fine as it is thoroughly mixed with the soil, and the intermixture will be more complete if several applications are made, and each one plowed and harrowed in separately. This repeated work will put the ground into excellent order—through pulverization being a great leading element of success. Subsoiling two or three times will aid in giving depth, which will not only afford the chance for the roots to run to a greater depth, but it will enable the plants to draw moisture from below in time of drouth. Soils which are benefited by superphosphate may have an application in connection with barn manure; or ground bone may be used by placing it some weeks before applying in thin alternating layers with fermenting barn manure.

4. If the soil is too clayey, spread a thick coat of sand over it before plowing and harrowing. This will render it lighter, and the benefit will last at least a hundred years, for the sand will not evaporate, or wear out or wash away.

5. Very important it is to exclude all weeds. They rob the soil, and rob the growing crops. If the ground has already become foul, take extra pains to destroy weeds by using the horse cultivator very often. By frequently stirring the soil, you will kill the young weeds just as they are sprouting and before they have reached the surface of the ground. This extra labor will not be one-half of that required to kill them after they have grown half a foot.

You will now say, perhaps, that all this care and labor will be greater than you have ever had, with your present weedy and unproductive garden. This may possibly be true, but there will be one great difference; by the mode we recommend you will have an abundance of all that a garden can produce; while by your present management you have little or nothing, or very poor returns. After you have made the necessary preparation, and have matters fairly under way, you will be surprised at the moderate labor and rich returns. If you make a fair estimate, you will probably say that your garden supplies obtained by the improved mode, will not cost you one-tenth the labor required for the same quantity by the old way.—County Gentleman.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEOP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond."—Witness.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful arrest and confinement of Morgan in the Ossandung jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his signature to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies.'"

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the best historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 6 cents.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The projected convention of hotel men in Washington during the month of May has grown into unlooked-for proportions, and it is now estimated that at least a thousand hotel people will be in attendance. As the National drill will be in progress at the same time the local hotel-keepers will be considerably embarrassed to accommodate their pay customers and their invited hotel-keeping guests.

Secretary Lamar's oration, to be delivered at the unveiling of the statue of Calhoun at Charleston, has been given to the Associated Press. The synopsis makes over 12,000 words, and it is therefore believed he has endeavored to cover the whole ground. Pres. Cleveland declined the invitation to attend the Calhoun celebration.

An old gray-bearded man was arrested for drunkenness, and was found by papers in his possession to be a Polish Count, born in 1791, a soldier under the first Napoleon, an exile to this country with Kosciuszko, drill master at West Point until the war, a gallant soldier in the Tenth Pennsylvania during the war, and now a tramp. He will probably be cared for at the Soldiers' Home.

The Apache Indians who were removed from Arizona to Fort Marion, Fla., last fall, are to be removed by direction of the Secretary of War to Mount Vernon Barracks, Ala. They number about 450 in addition to Geronimo and the seventeen who are confined at Fort Pickens. The wives of the latter will be permitted to join their husbands at Fort Pickens. Captain Pratt, superintendent of the Carlisle Indian school, has gone to Fort Marion to select thirty or forty young Indians before the removal, to be instructed at his institution. The removal is made on account of the crowded condition of the quarters at Fort Marion.

COUNTRY.

The high-license bill passed the Massachusetts House Wednesday—188 to 89.

The Delaware House, April 19, by a vote of 15 to 6, passed a high-license bill grading liquor licenses from $400 for Wilmington down to $200 for villages and country taverns and limiting druggists to the sale of liquors on physicians' prescriptions only and to one sale on each prescription.

A high-license bill intended to cover the objections raised by Gov. Hill to the Crosby bill was introduced in the Senate Tuesday. It divides all saloons into two classes, the first-class comprising places where all kinds of liquors are sold, and the second where malt liquors, wines, and cider only are sold. The rates established are as follows: New York and Brooklyn, first-class $500, second-class $100; Buffalo, first-class, $300, second-class, $60; all other portions of the State, first-class, $100, second-class, $30.

The Queen of the Hawaiian Kingdom, accompanied by a princess and a number of high officials, reached San Francisco Wednesday morning. The special object of the Queen's journey is to attend the jubilee celebration of Queen Victoria at London.

Lieutenant John W. Danenhower, of arctic expedition fame, commander of the Jeanette, committed suicide at the Annapolis Naval Academy. It may be remembered that Lieutenant Danenhower was one of the survivors of the ill-fated Jeanette, and at the time of her sinking was prostrated with blindness. He commanded the remnants of the band that made the perilous winter trip across Northern Russia. After his return he recovered his sight and health; but it appears that his mind never fully recovered from the morbid experiences of that voyage.

Hon. James G. Blaine, whose mysterious sickness in Arkansas last week was the comment of all the press, reached Chicago last Wednesday but too unwell to see any but a select few of his friends. His brother, Major John E. Blaine, died Thursday morning at Hot Springs, Ark.

John A. Roche, who succeeds to the mayoralty of Chicago after Carter Harrison's eight years of demagogue rule, is overrun with office-seekers. Much is expected of him against the low doggeries and gambling dens.

At Galena, Ill., Thursday morning, the proprietor of the Desoto House ordered from the dining-room a colored man who had accompanied the National Guard Company of Freeport to Galena, and who was breakfasting with the men. The military guests left the place in a body, and went to another hotel.

The Western Union Telegraph Company has increased its capital stock $1,200,000, making the total capital $81,200,000.

Newton Watt and Harry Schwartz were found guilty of the murder of Kellogg Nichols, the Rock Island R. R. express messenger, Tuesday evening, and their punishment was fixed by the jury at imprisonment for life.

Petroleum has been discovered near Herscher, Kankakee county, Ill., and experts from Pennsylvania have leased all the land obtainable in the district.

Capt. William Wirt Brush, said to be the first volunteer who enlisted in the war of the rebellion, died Tuesday morning at Lockport, N. Y., in abject poverty. He was in his 55th year.

The St. Paul Road has made special arrangements with the Signal Service Department for frost warnings from May 1 to Oct. 1 each year for the special benefit of tobacco and cranberry raisers along its lines.

Three men were killed and several wounded, all laborers and train hands, by a collision between freight trains near Huntinburg, Ind., on Wednesday afternoon.

Alexander Mitchell, the Milwaukee millionaire and railway magnate, expired Tuesday afternoon at New York, Messrs. Armour, of Chicago, and Plankinton, of Milwaukee, are mentioned for the Presidency of the St. Paul Road, made vacant by the death of Mr. Mitchell, who leaves an estate valued at between $15,000,000 and $25,000,000.

Fire in a stable district at New York early Friday resulted in seven horses being burned to death, forty others receiving such injuries that half of them will have to be shot. The movements of the frightened animals seriously impeded the work of the firemen. The losses will aggregate $50,000.

A bomb was mysterious exploded at noon Friday in a public street at Milwaukee, but no person was hurt by the flying missiles. It is believed the diabolical contrivance was thrown by a man who stood on the rear end of a street-car.

STORMS.

A heavy storm, which originated in Kansas, swept over the northeastern part of Vernon county, Mo., Thursday night, between 8 and 9 o'clock. There were four persons killed outright, and several so dangerously wounded that they will probably die. Considerable injury to stock is reported from the hail, but, so far as learned, no persons were injured by it. The storm entered this county a short distance from Fort Scott, Kan., and traversed a distance of nearly thirty-five miles, entering the county at a point two miles south of Schell City. The path of the wind was from 300 to 400 yards wide, and the track was left desolate. It is thought the number of persons killed will reach twenty-five. Four members of the Miller family perished. Their 3-year-old baby was blown out of the house, dropped in the yard, and found unhurt Friday morning.

A terrible cyclone swept Prescott, Kas., Thursday evening at about 6:30 o'clock. There were fifteen killed at different points throughout the county, and an incalculable amount of damage was done to all kinds of property. Prescott was literally wiped out of existence, not a single building being left standing to mark the site of a once prosperous and thriving place. Reports are coming in from all over the country of damage by the terrible storm. Hail fell all over the county, some stones measuring thirteen inches in circumference.

A cyclone swept through Franklin and Johnson counties, Arkansas, early Friday morning, causing devastation in Zank, Coal Hill, and Clarksville. Near the latter place the storm killed six persons, badly wounding twenty others, and blew the dwellings and barns of twenty-six persons to splinters. Considerable live stock also perished.

Many buildings at Paris, Ky., were wrecked by a tornado Friday morning. At Saundersville the roofs of the Commonwealth Company's distillery and warehouses were blown off.

A heavy snowstorm is reported from Northwestern Wisconsin. Seven inches are reported at Eau Claire, and at Ashland trains are blocked. A fierce gale is piling the snow into drifts.

Windows were smashed at Centralia, Ill., Friday, by huge hailstones, the storm being followed a few hours later by a heavy fall of rain.

FOREIGN.

A special from Key West, Fla., to the New York Herald says: From private letters from Havana it is learned that a party of kidnapers or outlaws, comprising much of the dangerous elements of Cuban banditti, had arranged to capture Senator John Sherman on his recent visit to Cuba. The project only failed by a difference in time. The plot was well arranged, the banditti were in sufficient force to capture Sherman's party.

The low-lying district of Montreal is flooded, and a large amount of live stock has been drowned. The ice is jammed at Sorel, and the river will continue to rise until the gorge is broken. The losses will be very heavy.

Seventeen thousand seven hundred and fifty-eight emigrants sailed for America via Bremen from January 1 to April 1, this year.

At a meeting of the Austrian Cabinet Thursday, the Emperor Francis Joseph presiding, it was resolved not to claim the unexpended balance, amounting to 28,000,000 florins, of the extra military credits aggregating 52,000,000 florins, which the delegation voted last winter for the purpose of enabling the government to put the country in what was then deemed a necessary state of defence. The resolution declares that the adoption of the extreme measures then thought advisable is no longer necessary, owing to the peaceful aspect affairs have resumed.

OF

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

We must speak a word for our new mayor, for whose patronage the Freemasons have made loud claims through the daily press. It is a misfortune to the city and an evil thing for Mr. Roche that he has been halted by the lodge; but it is honorable that he does not seem greatly bound to it. His appointments have given general satisfaction, and some of them are excellent. The Freemason Dixon has yet no place, as we lately feared, and is not likely to get one. There is a general bracing up by the police. The low dives have been listed by the order of the mayor and they will be no longer licensed. The gamblers who have run the city so long find their game played out, and the Illinois Central railroad corporation, which was making all the land it wanted out into the lake, has been taken by the collar and made to respect the rights of the public. The police justices take hold of their work like a new-set saw, and altogether there is promise of a vigorous enforcement of law against evil-doers which makes every virtuous citizen of Chicago breathe more freely and walk more securely.

The New York Graphic beside a striking cartoon on the honest artisan and his usurping Knight of Labor master, has also several pictures of Powderly's workmen's palace in Philadelphia, where the "Master Workman" performs his daily toil amid the unhealthy and depressing surroundings of velvet carpets, great mirrors, paintings, frescoed ceilings, marble floors, magnificent chandeliers, etc. If Mr. Powderly had bought these quarters with the savings from his Scranton mayoralty, there would be nothing to say; but he has used instead the fees his gigantic monopoly lodge has choked out of poor men, and now luxuriates upon his ill-gotten "trust" funds. He is being found out little by little. Workingmen are beginning to understand it, and Miss Willard will also, and withdraw her hand from his. One of the former in New Jersey, remarking on the severity of Powderly toward his section of the order, says: "One of the reasons for our unjust treatment is that we opposed the new constitution which the salary-grabbers rushed through in such hot haste at Richmond. To pay $30,000 a year in salaries to a board of officers who are not able to earn one-fifth that amount at their occupations is more than we can stand, not to speak of paying $50,000 for a mansion for them to repose in."

If there should need to be any confirmation of the letter of Dr. McNiece to Joseph Cook's Tremont Temple congregation, the late numbers of the Deseret News, Mormon organ, are full of it. The epistle of the First Presidency fills two pages of solid type. It is signed by John Taylor, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, and is poked out of the rat holes where these worthies are hiding—as they pretend, for the kingdom of heaven's sake. They denounce all the action of the nation through Congress as infamous violation both of constitutional and natural right. The test oath especially is a nauseous gag, but the Mormons, "having tender consciences," have swallowed it in big gulps, having "generally resolved to take the oath,"—for the sake of keeping their political supremacy, they make nothing of perjury. Their tender consciences probably regard this oath as forced upon them by tyranny—taken under duress in short. The removal of the United States Attorney Dickson was hailed with jubilation by the Mormons. It is another doubtful step by President Cleveland which disheartens the only men by whom the nation can hope to be rid of this Mormon curse—the real American citizens of Salt Lake City. God help them to stand firm and be of good cheer. Their trials are the readings which must be endured with the casting out of this devil.

Notes of the temperance work have an unhappy interest this week. The official report of the vote on constitutional prohibition in Michigan, completed Saturday, show a majority of 5,941 against the measure. That settles it no doubt, for to begin a contest and prove fraud would, even if successful in changing the figures to the other side, yet give for the right too small a majority to quarrel about. It is mentioned among the significant facts of this vote that forty-two counties in the State voted overwhelmingly for the amendment, and thirty-one against it. The forty-two represented the homes, the brawn, and the conscience of Michigan. The heavy vote for prohibition opened the eyes of its opponents, too, and the city of Detroit has certainly grown virtuous, finding it best at last to convict the saloon-keepers who are prosecuted; something that has not been known in years. Let the Michigan friends rejoice in the good fight for God and their homes already made, and begin work immediately for a renewal of the battle on this line in a year or two. Stepping on and up from the advantage already gained, let us expect for next time such an overwhelming majority that the enemy will be amazed into humble submission to the triumph of right and virtue.

But there are graver passages in this battle against the rum devil which give us quick and dreadful revelations of the fiend spirit possesses that the liquor dragged brain. At Cochranton, Pennsylvania, an effort for local option was followed by the burning of several houses by saloonists, whose owners had been prominent against their trade. Last Wednesday another Haddock case took place in Haverhill, Ohio. Dr. W. T. Northrup, a prominent physician, had been active for local option, and had been singled out by the saloonists as a victim. A gang as in the Haddock case prepared to assassinate him. They were McCoy, a saloon-keeper, and his brother, the postmaster, and two sons of the latter. They were too angrily impatient to form a secret society, but assailed their unarmed victim in daylight on the street with revolvers and shot-guns, shooting him down in cold blood. With the recollection of the Haddock jury before them the citizens of the place may make a short appeal to Judge Lynch. Another case is that of Joseph L. Hakes of Ansonia, Connecticut, who was nearly murdered last October, for daring to give evidence against a saloon-keeper. He was twice attacked for the same reason, and so severely as to be in continual suffering, and unable to walk, or work for the support of his little family. A fund has been raised to partially meet the emergency, but it should be much increased.

If any man doubts the interposition of a special and divine providence overruling to preserve this nation during the rebellion, let him read any honest review of General McClellan's book, giving his own version of his part in the war; or let him investigate the book for himself. The last Atlantic Monthly has such a review which deals fairly with McClellan, but shows from his own letters and reports that he had a singular disregard for facts, which he must have known to be such, an all-devouring self-conceit, and such contempt and insubordination toward the government that it is a question whether it was not a great fault in not sending him home months before he was superseded. Verily, we may well imagine Lincoln and Stanton while in their perplexity and trial on McClellan's account crying out in their distress, "Oh, that mine enemy had written a book!" No more complete vindication of the administration was ever attempted, or could well be imagined than this book of McClellan's. The Atlantic article, beside being a review, is a remarkable analysis of McClellan's character and exploits as a general.

IS LODGE WORSHIP THE WORSHIP OF DEMONS?

BY REV. WILLIAM WISHART, D. D.

To assert that the worship of the lodge is the worship of demons, may seem like harsh and extreme language, especially when we consider that so many professing Christians, and even Christian ministers, participate in such worship; yet, after a careful examination of the subject, we think that we are warranted by the Word of God to make the assertion. For the Scriptures clearly teach:

1. That no Christ-excluding worship can be the worship of the true God.

2. That all worship of false gods or imaginary deities is in reality the worship of devils.

Let us, then, carefully and prayerfully endeavor to ascertain the mind of the Spirit on this most important subject.

That no Christ-excluding worship can be the worship of the true God, will appear if you consider that the true God is a trinity in unity, three persons in one and the same essence, and he who rejects one of these persons as the object of worship necessarily rejects that God who subsists in a trinity of persons. He who rejects Jesus Christ as the object of worship rejects the true God, for "He is the true God and eternal life" (1 John 5: 20), and "God over all blessed forever." Rom. 9: 5. The eternal Son of God who was manifest in the flesh and who is "the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person," is so identified with the eternal Father as the object of worship, that he who rejects the Son, also rejects the Father himself; that is, he rejects the only true God and worships an imaginary deity. "He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him." John 5: 23. "Whosoever deneth the Son, the same hath not the Father." 1 John 2: 23.

Let me quote from two out of many commentators who all agree on this point. Says Scott, "The supreme being, the supposed deity, which ancient and modern deniers of the personal and mediatorial honor of the Son have professed to worship, is in fact the creature of their own imagination, and not the wise, just, holy, merciful and faithful God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Comment on 1 John 2: 23). And says Barnes: "Those who do not render proper homage to Jesus Christ do not worship the true God. There is no such God as the infidel professes to believe in. There can be but one God; and if the God of the Bible be the true God, then all other gods are false gods and cannot save" (Comment on John 5: 23). Masons, Odd-fellows, and other secret orders, then, by rejecting Jesus Christ as the object of their worship, really reject the true God and worship a creature of their own imagination.

But we have also affirmed that all worship of idols, false gods or imaginary deities, is in reality the worship of devils. When the children of Israel under the former dispensation forsook the true God and worshiped idols or false gods, they were charged by the Spirit of God with "sacrificing to devils." "They provoked him to jealousy with strange gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger. They sacrificed unto devils and not to God." And in Psalm 106: 37, 38, it is said, that "they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils. And shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan." "Had they but thought for a moment they must have seen that a deity who could be pleased with the blood of babes spilt by their own sires, could not be a deity at all, but must be a demon" (Spurgeon). We are informed by Gesenius that "the Jews regarded idols as demons which caused themselves to be worshipped of men" (See Lex., p. 1046, article Shehd). And we have clear evidence of the prevalence of this opinion among the Jews in the version of the Seventy. There are various Hebrew words used to designate the objects of idolatrous worship which by the Seventy are translated demons (daimonia), while they are not so rendered in our English version. We have an example in Psalm 96: 6, where the original word rendered "idols" in our version, is by the Seventy translated devils. "All the gods of the nations are devils" (daimonia). The original Hebrew term literally denotes nonentities or vanities, and is most appropriately applied to the idols of the heathen. See also Isaiah 13: 21, where the original word rendered satyrs in our version, is by the Seventy translated devils—"devils shall dance there." The original word literally denotes the he-goat, which was an object of idolatrous worship, and it is rendered devils in two passages of our English version. See Lev. 17: 7, and 2 Chron. 11: 15.

Now this opinion which was so prevalent among the Jews was by no means a mere superstition. It was founded on fact. The Apostle clearly teaches in the New Testament that whilst the supposed deities which idolaters worship have no real existence, yet there are devils or fallen spirits which are always present in such worship, and are the real objects upon which it terminates. "What say I then? that an idol is any thing, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is any thing? But I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to devils, and not to God, and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils." 1 Cor. 10: 19, 20.

On this passage the late Dr. Charles Hodge of Princeton, N. J., comments as follows: "We must understand the Apostle as saying on the one hand, that the gods of the heathen were imaginary beings, and on the other, that their sacrifices were really offered to evil spirits. In what sense, however, is this true? The heathen, then, certainly did not intend to worship evil spirits. Nevertheless, they did it. . . . We are shut up to the necessity of worshiping God or Satan; for all refusing or neglecting to worship the true God, or giving to any other that worship which is due to him alone, is the worshiping of Satan and his angels. It is true, therefore, in the highest sense, that what the heathen offer they offer to devils. Although their gods have no existence, yet there are real beings, the rulers of the darkness of this world, wicked spirits in heavenly places, on whom their worship terminates."

Now we are informed by Albert G. Mackey that "it is thought to be expedient only to oblige Masons to that religion in which all men agree." And of course, then, Masons must have a god as the object of their worship, upon whom all men can agree; but a god whom Christians, Jews and pagans can agree to recognize as a god and to worship in common is not the true and living God revealed in the Bible—not the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Nay, that blessed name by which we are called and which is above every name, cannot lawfully be named in the lodge. Masons have rejected the true God, and have devised and formed a god for their own purpose; not, indeed, out of wood or stone, but out of their own imagination. He is a being like themselves—"the Grand Architect of the universe," or "Grand Master Mason who presides in the grand lodge above." He is the deification of Masonry, as ancient idolaters were wont to deify every thing which they admired or loved. But he is purely an imaginary being, an empty idol, a non-entity; and yet to this ideal divinity thousands of costly temples are erected and altars dedicated in this Christian land. In these temples thousands of worshippers assemble from week to week and employ in honor of this imaginary deity those very symbols and ceremonies which, according to Albert G.

Mackey, are derived from and identical with the symbols and rights of ancient idolatrous worship, such as the "all-seeing eye," the "point within a circle," and the rite of "circumambulation."

Masonic lodges are in reality temples of idolatry. Those who worship in them may not intend to worship devils, yet in reality they do so. They are directed and actuated by the cunning of the prince of darkness. And while by such worship they dishonor the true God and provoke him to jealousy, they at the same time honor and please the great adversary of God and man. What but an infernal enchantment from the prince of darkness can cause men to reject God's beloved Son as the only Saviour, to profane his name by horrid oaths and imprecations, to insult his majesty by mock prayers, and to supersede his supreme authority by requiring an absolute and blind subjection to the authority of man. Those who do such things do but honor and please the wicked one, become assimilated to him in his wicked character and have fellowship with him in his wicked purposes. It is strange, indeed, that professing Christians, and especially Christian ministers, should enter into these temples of idolatry and participate in this idolatrous worship.

It has ever been the aim of that proud and ambitious spirit, the devil, to rival the true God or obtain that worship and homage which is due to him alone. When he was permitted to tempt our Saviour, he offered him the kingdoms of this world and the glory of them if he would fall down and worship him. Matt. 4: 9. And he still continues to tempt the professed followers of Christ in the same way. He offers them earthly possessions and worldly honors if they will come into his idolatrous temples, the lodges, and fall down and worship him. And is it not a matter of lamentation that so many should yield to his solicitations. Followers of Jesus, let me in all sincerity and earnestness say to you, "Ye cannot drink of the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils; ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils." 1 Cor. 10: 21.

DR. TALMAGE AND THE LODGE.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

Dr. Talmage in his sermon says:

"Every family is a secret society, every business firm and every banking and insurance institution. Those men who have no capacity to keep a secret are unfit for positions of trust anywhere. There are thousands of men whose vital need is cultivating a capacity to keep a secret. Men talk too much, and women too. There is a time to keep silence as well as a time to speak."

This is simply untrue. A secret society is an organization based on secrecy and excluding from its membership and its meetings all who are not sworn or pledged to conceal its doings. A family conducted on such principles would be an object of suspicion, and would scarcely find toleration in any community. Families have their privacies, but most that is done in the family is known to the world, and in every virtuous family, there is nothing but what is common to all virtuous families, and is known to all mankind. Banking institutions are not secret societies. Their records are open to inspection. A bank that conceals all its doings is manifestly a fraudulent institution. It may be true that some men are incapacitated for public employment because too little disposed to keep silence (though we seldom or never hear of such an instance), but it is also true that there is a thousandfold more danger from that "cunning craftiness whereby men lie in wait to deceive."

Men and women talk too much, sometimes. Of this Dr. Talmage is a marked example, especially when he darkens counsel with words without knowledge. Thus he says:

"Although not belonging to any of the great secret societies about which there has been so much violent discussion, I have only words of praise for those associations which have for their object the maintenance of right against wrong, or the reclamation of inebriates, or like the score of mutual benefit societies called by different names, that provide temporary relief for widows and orphans, and for men incapacitated by sickness or accident from earning a livelihood. Had it not been for the large number of secret labor organizations in this country monopoly would long ago have, under its ponderous wheels, ground the laboring classes into an intolerable servitude. The men who want the whole earth to themselves would have got it before this had it not been for the bawling together of great secret organizations. And, while we deplore many things that have been done by them, their existence is a necessity, and their legitimate sphere distinctly pointed out by the providence of God. Such organizations are trying to dislodge from their association all members in favor of anarchy and social chaos. They will gradually cease anything like tyranny over their members, and will forbid violent interference with any man's work, whether he belongs to their union or is outside of it, and will declare their disgust with any such rule as that passed in England by the Manchester Bricklayer's Association, which says any man found running or working beyond a regular speed shall be fined two shillings and six pence for the first offence, five shillings for the second, ten shillings for the third, and if still persisting shall be dealt with as the committee think proper. There are secret societies in our colleges that have letters of the Greek alphabet for their nomenclature, and their members are at the very front in scholarship and irreproachable in morals, while there are others the scene of carousal, and they gamble, and they drink, and they graduate, knowing a hundred times more about sin than they do of geometry and Sophocles. In other words, secret societies, like individuals, are good or bad, are the means of moral health or of temporal and eternal damnation. All good people recognize the vice of slandering an individual, but many do not see the sin of slandering an organization."

It is not true that there has been much and violent discussion about these great organizations. It is true that they have been strongly assailed, but they have never been defended from a Christian standpoint, for they are incapable of such defence. Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship do not profess to be Christian institutions. They are eminently religious, but it is a religion in which all men agree, and a religion that carefully eliminates the prime article in the Christian's faith. No man ever did or ever can defend such a religious worship on Christian principles. Their main defence is a "conspiracy of silence." Of the so-called benevolent societies, which the doctor so much commends, he knows, or ought to know, that only from 10 to 33 per cent. of the money paid into their treasury goes out for relief or to enrich anybody but its officers and those they patronize. He says that "one of these secret societies gave for the relief of the sick in this country in 1873, $1,490,274." This, I presume, was the Odd-fellows, as they are about the only secret society that keep and publish a full record of their relief fund. Unless this was an exception it cost just about double that amount, say $2,981,548, to dispense this charity. The man who "with his right hand put a penny in the urn of charity, and with the other took a shilling out," had the same kind of benevolence that the doctor commends.

What the condition of our country would have been had there been no secret labor organizations, no one can tell, but it is pretty certain that some hundreds of lives and many millions of property would have been saved, and that the aggregate wages earned and enjoyed by the laborers would have been vastly increased. He hopes and expects that these societies will eliminate their evil elements so that they will not favor anarchy or practice tyranny over each other, and over those who are outside of their order. He hopes they will cease to set a premium on idleness and incapacity by fining members for doing more than the slowest and dullest are capable of. Such hope finds no warrant in their past history or their present conduct. The principles on which all these secret orders are based are secrecy and blind obedience. However good may be their object, a society conducted on such principles will be sure to abuse its power and become the instrument of tyranny. Such principles are autocratic, and autocracy cannot be safely tolerated in a free republic. When we come to have saloons conducted on Christian principles, and houses of ill-fame run under the direction of the Social Purity movement, we may expect these despotic orders to be kindly considerate of the rights of all.

The implied charge of slanders of organizations, is doubtless a fling at the Congress of Churches in Chicago. Let the doctor produce his specifications and sustain them; or if he cannot, let him stop pleading for Baal.

6. The "good man" argument is thoroughly elaborated. He sums it up by saying, "a bad man will not stay in a good society. A good man will not stay in a bad society." This is so utterly untrue that it is marvelous that he should have said it. There are thousands of bad men in the churches. The great trouble is to get rid of them. Multitudes of good men have belonged to evil societies. The Jesuits, the Know-nothings, and even the Ku-Klux Klans have included men who professed to be Christians and would scorn to do a dishonorable act. So long as we claim Abraham, David, Samson and Solomon in our list of saints, we cannot seek to justify the conduct and associations of any man because he in his general character meant to do right.

7. He admits that there are bad secret orders (yet according to his rule he would be unable to prove it) and points out certain tests by which they may be determined.

First, their influence on home life. In this he is not very definite, except to berate the women who protest against their husbands belonging to the lodge, instead of to them. He evidently fails to see that sworn and life-long secrecy between husband and wife is a violation of the marriage covenant.

Another test is the effect that membership has on secular occupation. Any order that helps men in business is presumably a good order to join, and adhere to. Doubtless this is the reason why men join secret societies. They seek an unfair and mean advantage over the uninitiated. Sometimes they succeed. Sometimes by secret signs and grips; and others by boycotts and conspiracies they gain temporary advantage over their competitors and call it success. But no man can call such methods Christian, or republican, or just.

His third test is the effect on the spiritual man. He says:

Now, here are two roads in the future—the Christian and the unchristian, the safe and the unsafe. Any institution or any association that confuses my ideas in regard to that fact is a bad institution and a bad association. I had prayers before I joined that society; did I have them afterward? I attended the house of God before I connected myself with that union; do I absent myself from religious influences?

There are a good many things that are calculated to confuse men's minds about religious obligation. To be "unequally yoked together with unbelievers," in a sworn brotherhood controlled by ungodly men, and having a religious worship carefully devised to suit their unregenerate hearts; to be under an oath of sworn secrecy and obedience to an unknown obligation; to unite in worship from which the name of the Divine Savior has been carefully excluded, must be terribly confusing to men's moral ideas. The practical effect on men's minds is seen in the membership of the churches. More than two-thirds of the members of our evangelical churches are women. The obvious reason is that men find their moral ideas so confused by the lodge that they fail to appreciate Christianity. Alas! that men who stand on the walls of Zion should "call evil good and good evil; put light for darkness and darkness for light."

DEAR EDITOR:—One of your constant readers asks you, as a favor, to reprint the following lines, which were clipped years ago from the New York Independent. They were written by Pres. J. Blanchard for the "North Star," a book of poems, where, but for Whittier's modesty, they would have appeared. The editor of the Independent saw them, and gave them to the world. Many, we think, will enjoy reading this well-deserved eulogy of one so gifted and so good.

Thy soul is gentle, Whittier—yet thy mind
Was made to startle and instruct mankind.
And tyrants dread thee, gentle though thou art—
A lamb in temper with a lion's heart—
Yet so averse to scourge the sins of men,
That other's sufferings only move thy pen.
If thou alone hadst felt the oppressor's wrong,
The world had lost the lightning of thy song.
God in thy genius, crowned thee with the art
To pour thyself upon the human heart;
Bid thine own soul to thrill along thy line
An inbreathed fervor only not divine.
New England yet shall hail her gifted son
When Freedom's work (and Slavery's) is done;
And own thy fire caught from her pilgrim graves,
Hath taught the world that poets are no slaves.
The slave shall hail thee, when his sorrows end,
In nature, as by name and birth, A Friend.

WHAT IS PROHIBITION?

BY I. N. KANAGA.

"Prohibition is the song
We'll shout thro' the nation;
Prohibition of what's wrong,
Is right through all creation!"

We prohibit stealing by stringent laws, forbidding all theft whatever. And to the violation of these laws we affix heavy penalties as a warning to evil doers. We prohibit murder likewise. Why, then, shall we not prohibit that which is the fruitful cause of murder? We should do so as a nation, yea, further, we must as a great commonwealth, if we value our prosperity, honor, and perpetuity. For if we do not put an end to the power of rum it will put a speedy end to us. If we do not, by the strong hand of the law, destroy all intoxicants, sooner or later they will prove our destruction.

Then we favor a direct, legal, and a radical prohibition. Nothing else will rid us forever of this colossal evil. Give us, therefore, prohibition that will secure us from all the woes, crimes and curses of this dark and damning fiend. This is the weapon that the advocates of the rum traffic most deprecate and dread. If you would stop men from drinking and being drunkards, you must stop its manufacture and its sale. If you would save millions from a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell, save us forever from all intoxicating liquors. Then prohibit the terrible traffic and that perpetually. Then the demon of rum will no longer dominate to hasten the downfall and ruin of the nation. Are you ready for prohibition? Echo answers—"Ready!" Then

"Stop the cause, and then the crime
Will never have beginning;
The surest way to stop a sin,
Is just to stop the sinner!"

SECRET SOCIETIES IN INDIA.

While the land teems with secret societies in which members are oath-bound, any inquiry into their real moral character is deprecated by many and scouted by others. Every public institution or person is subject for observation, criticism or approval. We do not take up our pen to say that all men who have been led to join secret societies are bad men; but inasmuch as secret societies are bidding fast for the patronage of the natives of India—and even native Christians would now and then look behind the bewitching screen—we deem it absolutely necessary to call the attention of Christians in India to the character of all secret societies as compared with the Word of God, for they come to us with charitable, humane and temperance pretensions. As we begin to look at their character we must say the name secret society is a misnomer, for there is scarce a secret society in the world existing for a period of five years, whose every secret oath, obligation and ceremony has not been revealed and published, as the members of those societies well know. All these secrets can be bought for a few rupees and that without any thanks to lodges.

Jesus Christ wrought in the day, and so did the apostles. We search the Bible in vain for any authority for secret and oath-bound societies. The secret oath required before admission to secret societies is anti-scriptural and unreasonable. You are required to swear to keep secret, you know not what. If all the members of oath-bound societies were holy men, the candidate might feel some confidence in the safety of taking such an oath. But when we see so many who know not God, some desperately wicked, intemperate, dishonest, while others are good men, we may well be filled with horror at the possible moral character of secrets that all kinds of good and bad men keep. The principle is wrong, the oath foolhardiness. An oath to keep secret what? The candidate does not know. If God should ask, the candidate could only answer, "I do not know." Again, it brings, contrary to Scripture, all kinds of people together in so-called religious fellowship. The Christ-hating Mohammedan, the fire-worshiper, and the idolater, all become "brothers" to the Christian in "Lodge." The tendency of these societies to banqueting and dancing in India make them of the world and not of Christ. Missionaries are in them!

We, therefore, urge everywhere an inquiry into the character of any secret society, ere a thought of joining be entertained. Let every Christian ask God for orders before he becomes a candidate. We shall say more another day.—The India Watchman, Bombay.

MASONRY IN MEXICO.

As Freemasonry has recently seemed to have received a new impetus in Mexico, I chronicle a few items respecting the present status of that organization in this country. There are at present six distinct grand bodies of Masons in the Republic of Mexico. Three of these are working according to the Scottish Rite, and their transactions are carried on in the Spanish language; there is one lodge in which the German tongue alone is used—this exists under a warrant from the Grand Lodge of Hamburg; another transacts its business, etc., in French, under a warrant from the Grand Orient of France; that in English is under a warrant from the Grand Lodge of Missouri, United States of America.

The oldest Masonic organization here is called "The Supreme Grand Orient of Mexico." Its present Grand Master is Senor F. Xochihau, who is Past Master General of Mexico. This Supreme Grand body has lodges in every State of the Republic.

Another important Masonic body is "El Gran Consejo de Mejico," the Grand Master of which is Alfredo Chavero, a distinguished Mexican statesman, who is well known throughout the United States as an archaeologist and advertiser. This "Gran Consejo" has a few lodges under its jurisdiction in different States.

The Grand Lodge of the Federal district, of which Don Carlos Ruiz was the last Grand Master, has only two subordinate lodges in the Federal district, the others having withdrawn from it on account of certain disputes relative to money matters.

All members of the German, French and American lodges are generally merchants, clerks and railroad employes, and hold but slight intercourse with those lodges where Spanish alone is spoken.

Some years ago many foreigners joined the Masonic lodges, but having subsequently visited lodges in which their native languages are used, they have gradually resigned and joined those where they feel most at home.

Those lodges where the Spanish language necessarily prevails—in other words, those which are purely Mexican—are not recognized outside of the Republic. The Grand Lodge of the Federal District has made strenuous efforts to obtain recognition in the United States, but so far has only succeeded in securing full indorsement by the Grand Lodge of Arizona.

In retaliation for this discourteous treatment—if that is not too mild a term to use by way of qualifying the case—the Grand Master of the principal lodge of the Federal District has issued an "edict," in which he prohibits the recognition of members of the French, German and American lodges as Masons.

This ostracism does not seem to have grieved or even mortified the foreign Masons. On the contrary, many feel rather relieved from a burdensome taxation, for they now escape demands for funds, etc.

Owing to the "great army of Government employes," those lodges which are strictly Mexican are frequently used as means of political advancement, and there are Government officials who, while maintaining good standing as a Mason, manage to secure the adhesion—we won't say suffrages—of many Conservatives. It is not possible for the masses to comprehend the sort of Machiavellian policy by which these men preserve amicable relations with diametrically opposite parties; your correspondent does not attempt to explain it; he merely states a fact. However, these are exceptional cases. As the foreign Masons do not hold office, they, of course, have no parties or Caesar to propitiate, consequently it is easier for them to live up to "the golden rule."

Each grand body and foreign lodge has its own hall in different parts of this city; visits are rarely exchanged. Masonic processions are not allowed. Masonic funeral rites are only performed when the deceased Mason has belonged to a foreign lodge.—Correspondence Chicago Times.

MORMON PERJURY AND DISLOYALTY.

At the last of Joseph Cook's Boston Monday lectures this year, a letter was read from Rev. Dr. R. G. McNiece of the Presbyterian church, Salt Lake City, who is recognized throughout the country as one of the best informed men on Mormon affairs as well as most earnest in opposing their infamous and despotic system. The greater part of this letter appears below:

1. Let me speak of the recent legislation by Congress. Although Eastern people, as I learn from some of my friends here who have recently returned from the East, seem to think the new Edmunds Bill (it is not fair to call it the Edmunds-Tucker Bill now, since the grand and really vital parts of the bill were ruthlessly stricken out before it passed the Senate) is going to secure a complete settlement of the Utah question at once, the intelligent and patriotic men here, who have borne the brunt of the conflict for years, are sadly disappointed over this new legislation. They admit that this new law has many excellent features, such as the abolition of woman suffrage because of its shameful abuse, the restoration of the rights of dower for the first wife, which Brigham Young had taken away; the punishment of sexual crimes, which the laws of the Territory ignored; the re-districting of the Territory for elections to the Legislature, etc. Still, so far as any final settlement of the Mormon question is concerned, the new bill bids fair to be a practical failure, like all its predecessors, and for the same reason; namely, that it still leaves the civil power of the Territory in the hands of the same anti-American priesthood that has steadily merged the state in the church, and trampled a republican form of government in the dust, for nearly forty years. I am forced to reiterate what I have so often called attention to, that there is not now, and never has been, a republican form of government in this American Territory. The only local government that has ever existed here is the government of the priesthood, for the priesthood, and by the priesthood. Taxation of Americans without representation has existed here for a score of years; for only once in that time has an American been allowed to be a member of the Legislature, although for ten years the Americans have paid about two-fifths of the Territorial taxes. Just one American for one session allowed to be a member of the Legislature in twenty years!

Now, this new bill simply prolongs this grievous injustice. As it came from the House it was a remedy for this wrong; for it allowed the President to appoint the upper house of the Legislature, and also put the appointment of all county and municipal officers in the hands of the President and governor, until a new Legislature could be organized. Why Senator Edmunds should have taken the lead in cutting out these most important and vital parts of the bill, and giving us a superficial measure which continues the strife and most of the old government abuses, is a mystery to us here. It is now twenty-five years since Congress gave this Territory the first anti-polygamy legislation. Certainly that is long enough to experiment with superficial measures which carefully evade the vital point of the whole difficulty; namely, the anti-Republican rule of a disloyal priesthood.

And it is a significant fact that the most strenuous and unreasonable opposition to needed legislation has come from Boston. Mormonism as it is, with all its social, civil, and moral rottenness, has had three public champions from Boston. One is no less a person than ex-Secretary Boutwell, who did not hesitate to go before the House Judiciary Committee last spring, in the interests of the priesthood, and use his utmost endeavors to prevent legislation which would deprive them of their outrageous tyranny. Another is Patrick Collins, a member of the House from one of the Boston districts. Both in the House and on the Conference Committee he left no stone unturned to perpetuate the power of this same priesthood. The third is Capt. John Codman, correspondent of the New York Evening Post, who never loses an opportunity to apologize for Mormonism, and to grossly misrepresent and slander the patriotic Americans of Utah.

2. But how about the practical results of the new Edmunds law? Well, if the Senator supposed that the test oath, which is about the only important feature of Judge Tucker's rigorous bill he allowed to escape his pruning knife, would settle things here, and purge the Territorial and municipal governments of notorious law-breakers and disloyal enemies of everything American, it shows that he has not a clear understanding of the situation here. In order to vote in Utah, the oath requires a man to swear that he will obey the laws against polygamy and other kindred crimes, and this new law in particular, and "will not directly or indirectly aid or abet, council or advise, any other person to commit any of said crimes." Now, how a man can be a devoted member of the Mormon Church which constantly inculcates polygamy as one of its central doctrines and pay tithing to support that Church in pushing forward polygamy, and still take the above oath without hesitation, may not be apparent to Senator Edmunds. But it is very clear to those of us who live here, and understand the Mormon character. We have never doubted that the Mormons would swallow that oath with as much readiness as a child drinks milk. This matter was fully settled at the municipal election week before last in Brigham City, eighteen miles northwest of Ogden, where the Mormons as a whole, including the most notorious champions of polygamy, gulped down the oath, and voted the priesthood's ticket with the utmost dexterity.

About two weeks ago, a list of petit jurors was sworn before the third district court in this city. Many of them were Mormons, and all took the oath very readily. The next day several of these Mormon jurors were called to sit in a polygamy case; and when Mr. Dickson, the United States District Attorney, examined them as to their qualifications, they swore they believed polygamy to be right, because a divine institution, and of course were discharged from the case. Look at it. The same men who on the day before swore they would obey the laws of Congress condemning polygamy as a crime, did not hesitate on the day following to swear, in substance, they believed polygamy to be right, and that the laws against it should not be obeyed! Is it any wonder, with such an anti-American system to deal with, that we are aggravated to see Congress continue, after twenty-five, yes, forty years of experience, to pass superficial measures which the priesthood snap their fingers at, and continue, as of old, to merge the State in the Church? One of the excuses given in one of the Mormon papers, for this peculiar and contradictory way of swearing, is that Congress has disincorporated the Mormon Church, and hence they are no longer members of it, and so do not aid and abet the crime of polygamy!

3. What of the future? Well, it is certainly full of perilous omens, so far as Utah is concerned. There is circumstantial evidence of a deep-laid scheme to admit Utah as a State, and thereby secure three more presidential electors to tip the political scale. I cannot stop now to outline this evidence. And it is because of this scheme that all the patriotic men of Utah, with hardly an exception, are opposed to the anti-polygamy amendment to the Constitution. In the first place it is no more needful than an amendment against horse-stealing; and, in the second place, it is dangerous, because a preparatory step to the Statehood of Utah. Notice the men who are advocating this amendment, except Judge Tucker.

We are not a little mystified and troubled here over the President's shifting and uncertain attitude on the Utah question. It would seem to be through his approval, if not advice, that Gov. West, shortly after his arrival here last spring, made that notorious visit to the penitentiary, and promised the polygamists there, if they would agree to obey the laws of the land hereafter, he would try to secure a pardon for them from the President. Why he should have selected polygamists for this privilege rather than horse-thieves, the most of us here could not see. In his December message, the President ignored Utah altogether. Then he not only failed to sign the new bill, but followed it up, on March 5, by the pardon of the notorious polygamist Joseph Evans, although the President was forced to admit that Evans would not promise to obey the law against polygamy.

There was no hardship in Evans's case. He is a man of vigorous health, and was sentenced for three years instead of five. Moreover, Judge Lane, before giving the sentence, gave him a chance to keep out of the penitentiary, if he would promise to obey the laws. It would seem that the President has allowed himself to attach more importance to the statements of the lying and immoral representatives of the priesthood in Washington, than of those worthy men and women who have been here for years fighting the battles of free government and good morals. We certainly have a right to expect that the President will not allow himself to be imposed upon by the crocodile tears of female adventurers representing the priesthood, who go to Washington, and taking advantage of their supposed womanhood, gain access to the President, and act their part by presenting lying but pathetic appeals, when some of them are well known here to be of the most disreputable and immoral character.

Now, Mr. Cook, I have mentioned these things to give you an inside view of the mighty but immoral forces and influences which obstruct the path of civil and religious liberty in Utah, and to let the public know, through you, how important it still is to be vigilant and active in behalf of free government and good morals here. You know I have nothing but kindness and good-will toward the masses of the Mormon people, and wish to see them put in possession of the education which will prevent the priesthood from enslaving them. But to me the priesthood is another form of that tyrannical Carthage which of old threatened liberty. And so, on all occasions, I am ready to unite with yourself and the patriotic Cato in saying, "Delenda est Carthago," "Carthage must be destroyed."

I may conclude by saying that the great Christian denominations are pushing forward the religious and educational reformation of the Territory with more vigor and success than ever. They have American schools in about eighty different communities, employing about a hundred and sixty-five Christian teachers, and educating over five thousand children, seventy-five per cent of them from Mormon families. Now, let Congress arise and do its duty by giving us American government here.

As ever, most cordially and gratefully yours,
ROBT. G. MCNEICE.

LETTERS FROM BAVARIA.

The fogs and public squares of Munich.—American public spirit.—Preparing for the Carnival.—Beds or balls.—The celebrated dead house.—Cemeteries and pestilence.—No humane society needed.—Tattle and Beer.—And more Beer; even to the church steeples.

MUNICH, Jan., 1887.

We have been having very unpleasant weather lately; it is not so cold as we sometimes have at home, but there is no sunshine and the air is full of a frozen fog. It has been settling on the trees more and more until now they are as thick with frost as with leaves in the summer, and to-day when the sun came out a little while the open squares looked beautifully.

There are very many more open squares here than in cities at home. Around the public buildings there is almost always a block or more on each side filled with trees and quantities of lilac bushes. In the summer I must sketch some of them. There are many statues, too, in the squares, and several high monuments; but the only park there is called the "English Garden," and has the river Isar flowing through it. It used to be a swamp, but a rich American who was here drained and improved it and then presented it to the city. The Bavarians never would have done it. They have no enterprise at all. If they have a stove or anything else out of order they will let it stay so forever before they would take the trouble to have it fixed.

Everybody here is talking about the carnival now. It lasts about six weeks, and all that time there is nothing but balls and masquerades for those who go to such places. The artists had a torchlight procession last week in honor of the Prince Regent. It was so cold and damp we did not go. The lady artists have a masquerade soon with policemen at all the doors to keep the men out. Even the princes could not get in the last time and they can do almost anything here. All the ladies in the studio but myself are going dressed up for Greek boys and girls, and a German lady I know will be a knight. The people who have no money to go the balls pawn their furniture. Our milk woman said last year she sold her "over-bed" one night and went "to be gay." When she came home she found her husband had sold their "under-bed" and "been gay," too. So, as they could not sleep on a bare bedstead, they sold that the next day and both went "to be gay again." After that they slept on straw; but she laughed when she told it and seemed to think it was all right. There are some queer people in the world, and a good many of them seem to live in Munich.

Bavarians do not make their animals drunk. I think it is only the horses that get a drink of beer occasionally. But they feed them a loaf of bread for dinner and Mrs. N—— says in the country where they stayed a few weeks last summer, the woman used to bake a loaf every day for her pig. She gave it a bath, too, oftener than she took one herself, and it was the cleanest thing about. It is nothing unusual to see in the daily paper a notice that some one has a kitten to give away. But the funniest advertisement I have heard of here was that "A large beautiful Tom Cat has run away and a reward will be given for his return." The Bavarians are very good to their animals usually. I have not seen a horse whipped in the street yet. But the drivers have a whip with a very long lash which they snap and make a noise like the report of a pistol. Oxen are used a good deal, too. There is a steam engine that runs without any track, through the streets, which has something to do in cleaning them.

The ladies here go to the cafes about the middle of the afternoon and take their beer or coffee. Some of them stay three or four hours and talk and talk, but they do not get drunk or drink much beer. Some of the young ladies smoke. There is one in our class who goes into the hall and lights a cigarette in the recess. In the ladies "School of Painting" there is a notice on the wall that smoking is not allowed. All, or nearly all, the Russian ladies smoke. I was introduced to a very nice young lady at a reception of lady artists last week. She sat and talked with Mrs. C. and myself about ten minutes, and then she called the waiter and ordered three glasses of beer. She was very much surprised that we both refused, and yet more so when Miss N. and Miss E. said they never drank it. It happened that she had never met any Americans before, or any one that did not drink beer. She asked if she could not come to our studio to see us; and when we asked her to come she was so pleased that she drank all three glasses herself. I suppose she thought we were curiosities as we did not drink. To drink three glasses of beer is nothing at all here.

The largest church here is immense and very old. The two towers are so high above the city that they can be seen in any part of it, and they call them the "two Beer Mugs." Munich is called the "City of Beer Mugs" from this church. The real name means the church of "Our Lady." It was built some ten or twenty years after 1400. Inside are the tombs of several great kings of Bavaria. R. J. NUTTING.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, April 29, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Orlando is represented in Shakespeare's "As You Like It," going through the forest carving the name of Rosalind in the bark of the trees and hanging odes to her on their branches. It is my lot to pass through the forests of American citizens, carving the name of the King of kings upon their hearts, in the hope that by and by with this people will lift up their soul to him and say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Last Sabbath morning I preached in the York St. M. E. church, Rev. I. W. Fee, pastor, on "the Prince of the kings of the earth." This is an old congregation. They have 300 members. Their church is a plain brick, but very neat and comfortable. They received National Reform principles with great enthusiasm. They regard them as having the promise of a millennium. I was cordially invited to return and give them another discourse. In the evening I preached in the Lawrence St. Welsh Congregational church, Rev. David Jones, D.D., pastor, from the words, "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." This congregation has a membership of 250. Their pastor gives half his sermon in English and the rest in Welsh. They all understand English, but the older members wish to keep up their mother tongue. I never heard such good singing in any church as they did there. Welsh hymns were used.

Monday morning at 10:30 I attended the Methodist preachers' meeting in the M. E. Book Concern. The subject was "Camp meetings." Rev. Dr. Var. C. Coe read the paper. He said no one could charge him with being predisposed to condemn them, as he had been instrumental in locating the Urbana and Loveland camps. But modern camp-meetings with their gate-fees, barber shops, refreshment stands, costly cottages and pavilions, hired evangelists who berated ministers and excooriated worthy church members, pushing aside regular pastors to give place to men who made the same little speech all over the land in the interests of their paper or book, and the continual drumming for collections to meet these unnecessary expenses, were not a blessing but a curse. Drs. Leonard, Joyce, Pearne, et al. supported his sentiments. Sabbath excursions to them were deplored.

The Welsh Calvinistic Methodist General Assembly meets in this city the 12th of May. They have one congregation here. It has been vacant for the last eighteen months. Profs. Evans and Roberts, of Lane Seminary, both of whom were born and raised in that church and speak Welsh, have supplied them the past winter.

The streets of Cincinnati are badly torn up with granite paving and laying of cable roads. The cable systems, stretching four miles from Fourth Street into the suburbs will be of great advantage to our city. But as long as such corporations continue to rob God and man of the holy Sabbath, there can no permanent blessing come from them. It is unjust in them to require their employes to do seven days' work for six days' wages. It is unmerciful to require them to work on the Lord's day upon pain of losing their position. Greed of gain is intensifying "man's inhumanity to man." It is written, "I will have mercy and not sacrifice." The words of Portia to Shylock ought to be written upon the American heart:

"The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice blessed;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes:
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings.
It is an attribute to God himself."

Lane Seminary examinations begin next Monday. This institution ranks with the best in the land. The year just closing has been an exceptionally good one. J. M. FOSTER.

THE MORMON ROW AT BAY PORT.

A TRUTHFUL PICTURE OF AN INFAMOUS SYSTEM.

BAY PORT, Mich.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Some erroneous accounts having been published in several papers in our midst and abroad in regard to the debate between Elder J. J. Cornish, Mormon, or Latter-Day Saint preacher, and Rev. Wm. F. Davis, general missionary and evangelist, I deem it proper to make the following statement of facts in reference thereto. Elder Cornish had been holding a series of meetings near here for six weeks or more with but slight interference. By his shrewdness, craft and cunning, as well as by the audacity and boldness of his claims, he had led captive a large portion of the community and filled them with a large share of his own spirit of hatred and dislike to all persons and ideas opposed to Joseph Smith and his Mormon Bible.

Rev. Mr. Davis came here by invitation to hold Gospel meetings, or to take up the Mormon question as he should think desirable.

The school-house was the only available place in the vicinity for holding public meetings. It was there that Mr. Davis was to hold his meetings, Mr. Cornish having transferred his appointments to other points near by, with the exception of an occasional sermon. At the close of his first meeting Mr. Davis submitted to the congregation the matter of taking up the Mormon question. By an almost unanimous vote he was requested to do so. Mr. Cornish expressed a desire to take part in the discussion. It was accordingly arranged that the debate should commence on the next Tuesday evening, March 1st, each speaking alternate half hours for two hours, Mr. Cornish to lead. Mr. Cornish, however, and his friends insisted that Rev. Davis should lead, although he had never heard

Mr. Cornish. By three o'clock in the afternoon of Tuesday the seats began to be filled, mostly with Cornishites. When the speaking began at 7 p. m. the platform, aisles and vestibule were packed, and men stood outside at all the windows, though they were not open at the bottom. The ground was covered with snow and the weather cold.

Mr. Cornish in both speeches confined himself to the setting forth of their religious views upon the subjects of baptism, the millennium, the resurrection, future punishment and so forth, but not going beyond our Scriptures. Rev. Davis endeavored to draw him out on Jo. Smith and his Mormon Bible, but did not succeed, so the discussion had only been initiated at the close of the first evening. There was some talk of continuing the debate for an hour longer, but a gentleman in the middle of the audience said his wife was sick and he must be let out. Mr. Cornish made a very insulting reply; and the chairman, a Cornishite, sprang to his feet and remarked that this woman was "in the habit of going to meetings and getting sick"—an entirely gratuitous statement.

High words began to pass. The man with a sick wife declared "he would get out if he had to force his way," and express the wish, "that he was here he could lay his hands on Mr. Cornish." The confusion increased and a tumult seemed imminent. A number of women and children were helped out of the windows. But the crowd dispersed without violence.

The next day Rev. Davis saw a Justice of the Peace, and earnestly requested him to be at the school-house early, and to keep open two aisles so that egress could be had, as he did not think a house so filled as that was on the previous evening either safe or lawful. However, when he reached the house a little after 6 p. m. he found the condition about the same as that of the previous evening. Making his way into the body of the house, Mr. Davis called the attention of the chairman to the packed and still packing condition of the house, and said he could not consent to speak unless two aisles should be cleared (there being five) so as to give ingress and egress when required. At once there arose an unseemly confusion. Mr. Cornish told the people not to move; others called out that, "Davis was a coward, and wanted to back out." The chairman told him to come forward to the platform or own that he was beaten; and much more of the same sort of talk was heard. A motion was passed that Mr. Davis should come forward "like a man, and proceed with the debate." From the show of hands it plainly appeared that the body of the house was almost entirely filled with Cornishites, they having come first. Rev. Davis, who fears nothing so much as wrong-doing, was unmoved by all these taunts and jeers and insisted on his points. Failing, however, to accomplish anything, he made an appointment for two o'clock p. m. the next day, when he would proceed with his examination of the subject in hand, and then retired, followed by his friends.

Scarcely had Mr. Davis left the house when quite a tumult arose. A young man near the front sprang up and rushed over the desks toward the door to reach some one who had made an insulting remark that he fancied was addressed to himself. A rush of the Cornishites from near the stand at once followed; some to take part in the fight and some to prevent it.

The crowd became alarmed; egress at the door was impossible. Many women and children were helped out of the windows, followed by men. A constable seized the beligerent young man near the door, so the fight was prevented; but there was great confusion. The chairman, a stalwart six-footer, threw off his coat and vest, laid his pocket-book (but not his revolver) on the table, and seizing his chair hastened out into the tumultuous mass and demanded order at the point of his chair legs. After the lapse of some time and the departure of many people, order was finally restored. Mr. Cornish and his friends indulged in a good deal of foolish and high-sounding talk about their so-called victory, and passed some equally foolish resolutions, and then Cornish proceeded alone with his part of the discussion.

Subsequently the writer learned from different persons, friends of Cornish, that poles were brought to the school-house on the second night of the debate for the ostensible purpose of rail-riding Mr. Davis, and the chairman distinctly stated to him that he had done his best to raise a fight on the second night; but the friends of Mr. Davis had no disposition to create any disturbance.

Mr. Davis continued his appointments afternoon and evening until he had gone over the whole subject, including the history of the Mormon Bible and Joseph Smith. He distinctly pointed out many false deductions that Mr. Cornish drew from his Scripture quotations, chiefly from the Greek text, in order, that the true sense might more distinctly appear. All who heard him through must have been convinced that the claims of Jo. Smith, for himself and his Bible, were stupendous frauds.

From the best information derived from a variety of sources, it appears that Mr. Cornish pursued here the usual course adopted by the "Latter-Day Saints." They first set forth those religious doctrines founded on a literal view of the Scriptures, and which have been held by many Christians for centuries, and which will not be likely to be offensive to the common people. At the same time a systematic and continuous attack is made upon the honesty and integrity of the clergy of all other denominations, and so also of all history and all testimony that comes from outside their own sources. They are all the time telling their hearers that other ministers are after their money, and then "pass around the hat" after almost every sermon. The encyclopedias he calls "novels," and to prove it points to some statement therein in regard to themselves which he claims to be false, but which upon investigation will turn out to be substantially true. He said the mobs that tarred Jo. Smith and Sidney Rigdon, and that assassinated Joseph and Hiram Smith, were led by Rev. divines; and so of any other acts of violence that the Mormons may have suffered from the incensed people.

Many persons run after those swindling advertisements that promise large value for mere nothing because they hope to obtain something valuable without the toil and sacrifice of fairly earning it. So people are over anxious to pry into the mysterious and unknown, and many are ready to take a short-cut to a knowledge of divine things through false prophets and cheap revelations; when the only way to obtain them is to do Christ's will if we would know of his doctrine. Mrs. J. W. SNELL.

POMEROY'S HISTORY AND TALMAGE'S SERMON.

HIAWATHA, Kans., April 27, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I feel like saying to you how much I have enjoyed reading Senator Pomeroy's letters in the Cynosure. I trust they will be published in pamphlet form, as they furnish interesting matter not found in any history of the war. Will you please to send me the pamphlet exposing the base treachery of the Masons in the Pomeroy case? I have loaned out the copy I had till I have lost it entirely.

I am out of all patience with Talmage. I have just been reading his sermon on secret societies. It does seem strange that such a man as he should stoop to an apology so shallow and stupid as this! Where is the consistency of signing an approval of the recent congress and then publish to the world a defense of the whole horde of secret societies that Mackey, Morris, Sicksels & Co. would cheer to the echo? Verily, how are the mighty fallen! I trust the editor of the Cynosure will do justice to that sermon, if sermon it can be called.

It seems to me that we are living in perilous times. The pulpit and press are muzzled. A popular minister in a popular Congregational church not a hundred miles distant said to me not long since that "the vicarious atonement of Christ was more a jumble of words than anything else." It is not strange that such a church and such a minister should celebrate a silver wedding in the church and then adjourn to a hotel to partake of a sumptuous repast, with presents, toasts, etc., and this all on the Sabbath day! I might also remark here that the bridegroom is a high Mason. And apropos to this, the new minister sent to the M. E. church in this place led in the Easter tomfooleries of the Knight Templars on Easter Sunday! "Oh Lord, how long?" Yours for reform. J. W. MARGRAVE.

DR. DOY'S RELEASE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I find that my valued friend Geo. W. Clark has corrected me in one of my articles.

The name of Dr. John Doy is correct. And after writing my manuscript, fearing I had written Day—I telegraphed at once, to "put the name Doy—not Day;" still your printer had it Day. This is purely a mistake that's all. [It was the dispatcher's mistake, after all, for he sent the message to us written "Day"]—ED. CYNOSURE.]

But he says "Dr. Doy's son with twelve stalwart comrades crossed the river in a dark night, and rescued his father." The son, then quite young, and a party of a dozen stalwart men did rescue the father. This, too, I think is correct. But that it was done in a dark night, and without John Brown, does not correspond with my recollections. I knew them all very well; attended closely the trial, and Dr. Doy's sentence to the penitentiary was an outrage which we all resented.

My recollection is that it was in midday. Several of the Kansas books which have been written speak of it as "done in broad day-light." And John Brown's connection with it has always been conceded. Indeed the Missourians then all said, or did soon after, "It was old Brown's raid," though at that date Brown was little known. His exploits were afterwards. I make this statement with all fairness to all parties.

Very Respectfully,
S. C. POMEROY.

DR. TALMAGE MAY LEARN FROM AN EX-MASON.

WINFIELD, Kansas.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am glad the Lord kept the great Dr. Talmage away from the Congress of Christians recently met in Chicago. His sermon on Secret Societies will do a vast amount of harm. It is "Good Lord—good Devil." The very text he has taken to prove secret societies right will knock every secret society in God's universe "into a cocked hat,"—Discover not a secret to another." A Mason not only discovers his secret to another, but makes the other pay for receiving it. If people would obey the Word of God there would be no secret societies. "Thou shalt not foreswear thyself," would kill every oath-bound secret society in the world.

A man is very foolish to try to prove secret societies to be right by the Bible. He cannot do it, because God's Word condemns them. "Thou shalt not foreswear thyself," sent conviction to my heart, then I obeyed Leviticus 5: 4 and 5. I confessed I had sinned in that thing, and God for Christ's sake, pardoned my sin. Praise his holy name forever! I am now discovering the secrets of Freemasonry to the whole world, and I suppose according to Dr. Talmage's opinion I am a perjured villain. But I know before God that I have only delivered my own soul. I am purified, made white and tried, "and am willing to be tried again" by the judge of all the earth at the last day. Amen. ISAAC PENNINGTON.

THE TALMAGE SERMON.

SENECAVILLE, Ohio, Apr. 25, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have just heard read and read Dr. Talmage's famous sermon in the New York Weekly Witness on, "What is the moral effect of Freemasonry," etc, and believing it to be calculated, if not designed, to encourage the prevalence of lodge secrecy as not only harmless but profitable, and that it will be made use of extensively to feed and foster the dangerous and damnable lodge system in our country, to the shame and detriment of Christianity and an enlightened civil government, I hope and advise that Dr. Blanchard, the editor, or some other competent person give us a searching and thorough review of the discourse and its bearings on the burning question to which it relates.

I am satisfied that however he may discriminate between the object and the management, the use and the abuse of the lodge system, the whole thing had better be opposed and, if possible, crushed out of existence, for it does no good that might not be done more certainly and safely and openly by churches and other benevolent societies; and it does much harm in various ways, by the foulest means and to the most fearful extent, as has been often shown and can be demonstrated more fully. And for such a popular and powerful preacher of the Gospel to be arrayed in behalf of the lodge is more than I or any other anxious Christian can tamely sanction and silently endure. If I am mistaken about the drift of this discourse, I would like to be convinced of it; if not, I hope my wish will be fully met as early as practicable. Truly yours, WM. G. KEIL.

THE FRUIT OF AN EVIL PLANT.

BEACONSFIELD, IOWA.

The work of the United Brethren Commission is the fruit of the lodge. Years ago a cable-towed preacher of our of our church said to a supposed friend of the lodge, "Secrecy will be admitted into this church. It will be like a clap of thunder from a clear sky." The trap which was set in the dark was sprung at the last General Conference. Liberalism was hatched in the lodge the same as secession was in the lodges of the South from the time Jackson and others became members of a Masonic lodge. The plant of liberalism has grown like a noxious weed among corn ever since the lodge began to hoodwink and cable-tow U. B. preachers, till now a portion of the church has "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." The church is becoming "divided against itself," and cannot stand in this way any more than the nation could, "part slave and part free." The devil knows Scripture is true so he secretly plots to divide a good church.

We are happy to know the Lord is using part of the church as an instrument in his hands and that the church is likely to be as successful in opposing "the god of this world" (the secret deceiver of Israel) as was the nation in opposing slavery sheltered by the lodge. This plant after Masons murdered Morgan took root and flourished on slavery soil, where free speech was denied. Freemasonry came back North under a terrible war cloud, and seeks to force the church of Christ to shelter it by silence on the part of the preachers, whom God has called to "Cry aloud and spare not."

He who spake as man never spake said, "Every plant which my heavenly father hath not planted shall be rooted up;" and if God did not plant the lodge it "shall be rooted up." Let us trust in God. It is hoped our Bull Run is passed and that honest men will no longer "halt between two opinions," as did Abraham Lincoln for a time in regard to emancipation. "Come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty" and serve the God of the Bible with the whole heart. He is willing to lead by his Spirit into "every good word and work." Although it is a cross to be "workers together with him" in "uprooting" plants which he never planted it is the best way, for it is our duty to prevent the growth of plants in the church and in our hearts the fruit of which is not unto holiness. May the Lord bless, save, lead and work in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. CYRUS SMITH.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM A FORMER NATIONAL CONVENTION PRESIDENT.

Thanks for the good paper you are giving us. Illness prevented me, much to my regret, (if one may regret anything so directly from the Lord) from attending the late Congress in Chicago. The Lord speed the day when such conventions shall not be needed. "Thy kingdom come."—S. COLLINS.

BRO. CLARK'S MISSION.

Bro. Geo. W. Clark of Detroit, Mich., has been down here making us a new people. Please send the Cynosure and all the help for good you can.—A. M. MIDDLEBROOK, Corner Stone, Ark.

NOT ALL CHEERLESS.

I have tried only in vain to get at least one more subscriber to the Cynosure before I renewed my subscription. But, notwithstanding all discouragements, I believe that the shadow of your reform influence is perceptibly falling on the nation so that the Masonic muzzle is dropping off of even the political press. The La Fayette Daily Courier gave a fair account of the Congress of Churches in Chicago. It does my heart good to read it and may great good be the result of it.—L. D. BROWN, Morenci, Ind.

PROPHESYING IN SAN FRANCISCO.

I am now holding Anti-masonic meetings in my "own hired house," and receive all that come in to hear. The Masons have suppressed free speech on this coast. They have driven me from the streets and halls, by sending in their ruffians to break up the meetings, and they try to in my house. The times are so hard it seems almost impossible to get one subscriber for the Cynosure. I believe the Cynosure will be more interesting this coming year than it has ever been before.—N. KEYSER, San Francisco.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VII.—May 15, 1887.—The Call of Moses.—Exodus 3: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I will be thy mouth and teach thee what thou shalt say.—Ex. 4:12.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Burning Bush. vs. 1-6. All the forty years since Moses had fled to the desert an outlawed fugitive, he had devoted himself to what his early education must have taught him to regard as a menial occupation; and doubtless with the belief growing more fixed as the years went by that he must spend his days in exile. There is no grander page in history than this uncomplaining, patient, brave endurance while his life seemed to be wasting uselessly. But the call came at last and it found him fitted for the work. He had lost none of the fire of his youth. He had gained the calmness, the coolness, the decision of a great leader. The chief reason why so many people complain that they have no mission in life is because they want none. Their ears are not opened to the call of God, nor their eyes anointed to see the burning bush of opportunity. The bush burned with fire but was not consumed. It was still living and green with its nature unchanged, though made for the time being the shrine of God's visible presence. Religion does not change the face of outward objects, does not alter a single duty, does not do away with one innocent habit or taste. The chief difference between the religious and the irreligious is not that the latter never think of God, but the one has an habitual daily recognition of him, while the other ignores him entirely in the common, ordinary actions of life. God is not in all his thoughts. "I am the God of Abraham," etc. This was the sure token that he had not forgotten Israel, and more than this, it bridged the awful space between them and deity with a sense of divine fatherhood, and made what followed easier to believe.

2. The Call of Moses. vs. 7-12. In all their affliction he was afflicted, the prophet tells us. God sees and feels for the afflictions of his people. He knows the sorrows of every child defrauded by rum or any other evil agency of its birthright of innocent happiness.

"Think not thou canst see a sign,
And thy Maker is not nigh."

But his pity for sorrow will only make more intense the fires of his indignation against every evil system which works woe and suffering to humanity. The blood of the martyred Haddock not only cries to God against the business which murdered him, but the lodge power which has spread its dragon wing to shield his murderers. "Come now, therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh," etc. Moses's hesitation was very natural. An outlaw, who was he indeed that he should go unto Pharaoh? Self distrustful, slow of speech, how could he be the leader to deliver his people, and rouse them by harangues of fiery eloquence to throw off their yoke. But God's answer to Moses is the answer to every one of us who may feel like him, Who am I, weak and unknown, that such a task or such a duty should be laid upon me: Certainly I will be with thee. And with the promise of Jesus, Lo, I am with you always—all the days, as the original Greek reads—not giving us at once a treasury of strength which we might squander, but portioning it out to us as our needs require, what can we want more.

From Peloubet's Notes.

God leads us often through the desert to paradise, through retirement and silent meditation, to our life's work. All persons need these periods.

In the humblest duties we may be learning the highest lessons, and become fitted for the noblest work. God calls us to our work in his own time and way. God is light, immaterial, glorious, pure, purifying, cheering, life-giving.

The commonest object is made glorious when we see God's goodness and love in it. The barren mountain is transfigured by Christ's presence; the humblest duty glorified by the love of God and man.

God's people are like this burning bush, safe and glorified in the midst of the flame, because, as with the three men in the furnace, the Son of God is with them.

We should always come into God's presence with reverence and proper expressions of worship and careful preparation. As Moses took off his shoes, defiled with the dust, so should we put off our worldly thoughts and cares.

We are ready to say that those favored men of old were happy in being permitted to enjoy such immediate intercourse with God; but happier are we who enjoy the full revelation of the precious Gospel.—Bush.

God sees and knows all the trials and afflictions of his people, and is preparing deliverance for them.

When men turn to God and cry to him for help, their afflictions and trials have begun to accomplish their work, and the time of deliverance is near.

We are appalled before the greatness of the work of redeeming the world from sin.

Consciousness of our own weakness, joined with unbounded trust in God, fits us for our work.

God kindly and lovingly answers our excuses and removes our difficulties, if we will listen to him.

The more we know of God, the stronger will be our trust in him.

We can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth us.

—Miss Caroline L. Wolfe, said to be the wealthiest unmarried lady in the United States, died recently in New York, in the 58th year of her age. She will be remembered chiefly because of her enormous benefactions. For fifteen years she has given away an average of fully $200,000 a year, and many believe that the aggregate exceeded $4,000,000. Her work was through the Protestant Episcopal church in great part, although many of her important benefactions for which she will be gratefully remembered by the people of New York, were undertaken independently of the church. The East Side Lodging House for Homeless Boys, and the John D. Wolfe Cottage at the Sheltering Arms, are among her gifts. The Wolfe expedition to Babylon some years ago was carried on at her expense, and she also contributed to Dr. Sterell's expedition to Asia Minor. The American chapel at Rome was built chiefly at her expense. She also established the Wolfe fund for the support of infirm clergymen.

SECRET SOCIETIES CON- 'DEMNNED

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

PRESIDENT F. H. M. HENDERSON, Bowdon College, Ga.—I regard all secret societies as extremely liable to be perverted.

PRESIDENT NOAH PORTER, Yale College.—That there are serious evils connected with them cannot be questioned; that they accomplish some good is equally clear.

PRESIDENT HITCHCOCK, Amherst College.—These, at different periods, have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy, and heart burning among the students.

JOSEPH MOORE, President Earlham College.—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

HOWARD CROSBY, D. D., Chancellor University, New York.—Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and while I had upright fellow-members, and we encouraged literary culture, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice.

PROF. J. R. JACQUES, Illinois Wesleyan University.—Among college students, at an age when most susceptible, secret societies tend to breed that secretive disposition which is the very opposite of the truly candid, generous, and magnanimous character.

DR. BEYS HLAG, Professor in the University of Halle.—Never entertain the idea to join the lodge for popularity's sake. It is utterly degrading to imagine pastors, men who have to deal with Christianity, the most universal and opening thing in the world, wrapped up in the mummeries of Freemasonry.

PRES. J. BLANCHARD.—There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was a government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The Cains of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrod have denied justice and practiced oppression. But both are combined in the lodge.

PROF. J. R. W. SLOANE, D. D., Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary.—But my strongest opposition to Masonry is because of its rivalry with religion. It steps in before the church, and is a false, an idolatrous religion, a religion without a Saviour and, therefore, a delusion and a snare to all who engage in it, or rest their hope upon it.

PROF. BURT G. WILDER, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.—I am willing to hazard my position . . . upon the truth of the proposition that secret societies are unknown in heaven, but that they form a prominent and essential feature of life in the other locality. Light versus darkness; openness versus mystery; mutual confidence versus suspicion and distrust.

PROF. S. C. BARTLETT, D. D., Chicago Theological Seminary.—There are certain other wide spread organizations, such as Freemasonry, which, we suppose, are in their nature hostile to good citizenship and true religion, because they exact initiatory oaths of blind compliance and concealment, incompatible with the claims of equal justice toward man and a good conscience toward God.

PROF. J. O. CARSON, D. D., Xenia, Ohio.—These associations are inconsistent with the genius of Christianity, because the secrecy which they affect, and to which they bind their members by promise or oath, is unnecessary and so unwarrantable, dangerous, and ensnaring to the conscience, and, therefore, utterly opposed to that openness and publicity which Christ enjoins on his disciples both by example and precept.

PRESIDENT C. G. FINNEY, of Oberlin, 1838.—We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully but solemnly pronounce this judgment.

PRES. E. F. REID, Ohio Central College.—We believe secret societies to be anti-republican as well as anti-Christian.

REV. A. L. CHAPIN, D. D., Beloit.—It has been the uniform policy of Beloit College to exclude secret societies.

PRES. THOMAS HOLMES, Union Christian College.—I am the uncompromising foe of secret societies in any form whatsoever.

REV. JAMES W. STRONG, D. D., Pres. Northfield College.—We do not favor secret societies; hope there will never be one in this institution.

REV. P. M. BARTLETT, D. D., Maryville College.—I believe that secret societies, generally speaking, are fraught with mischief and should be discouraged, especially in our institutions of learning.

PRES. JOSEPH MOORE, Earlham College.—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

REV. ALEX. BURNS, Pres. Simpson Centenary College.—Although a Mason myself, I have not a very exalted notion of the importance or influence of Masonry. In fact I don't see much necessity of secret societies of any kind.

REV. S. B. ALLEN, D. D., Westfield College.—Deeming them (especially those best known) injurious to all the best interests of mankind and destitute of all moral right to an existence, we cannot but pray and labor for their overthrow.

PRES. A. M. WESTON, Keweenaw College.—No human institution has the right to exact oaths. Even the church has, formally, none, and civil governments, if they require them, can only do so because they themselves are ordained of God. Freemasonry has no such right, having no divine origin.

PROF. BASCOM, Williams College.—Bind not the corrupt to your very bonds with bonds of secrecy, and hope to escape their influence. That breath of pollution, the breath constantly on you, which you draw into the seats of life as if it were air, is malarial, ready to creep stealthily through soul and body.

PROFESSORS EDWARDS A. PARK, ABNER PHELPS, E. P. BARROWS and EGBERT SMYTHE, Andover Theological Seminary, to the American Tract Society, Boston, 1865.—Asking for "a judicious and carefully prepared tract, tending to dissuade the members of the churches of Christ from joining secret societies."

REV. E. H. FAIRCHILD, D. D., Berea.—Secret societies are of two kinds, those which aim to secure special and unequal advantages for their members, in social, civil, political and business relations; and those which seek to promote some moral, social, or political reform. The first among which Freemasonry is the most prominent, we regard as selfish in their nature and essential aim, and hence antagonistic to the Christian religion.

HORACE MANN, the American apostle of Education.—Why do all languages ascribe an open countenance to a brave and high-souled man; but a close, shy, disguised, secretive one to villains? To what class do the secretive animals belong—the fox, the tiger, the cat, the snake? Should brutes imitate men as in Esop's time, would not those form the secret societies? . . . Where do gamblers live? Where do counterfeiters ply their trade? Where does licentiousness breed its pollutions? Do these seek daylight, the open street, the market place, the common resorts of virtuous men? No, they all belong as by the tie of natural affinity, to the order of secret societies.

REV. RANDALL ROSS, Pres. Lincoln College, Mo., 1873.—Take the report of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows for the year from which it appears their revenue amounts to $4291,071.12. Of this sum only $1,503,471.40 has been spent in "relief and charity." Only about one third of their revenue is thus expended annually. This leaves an immense sum of money unexpended by the order every year, which must in a few years become a dangerous power in the hands of the order. And this is but an illustration of all the secret orders of the land; and hence we look upon the power of such an immense amount of money in the hands of a power whose workings are in the dark, in secret, as far more dangerous to the financial affairs of the country than all our much talked about railroad monopolies.

REV. WM. M. BROOKS, Pres. Tabor College.—Our faculty is a unit in opposition to secret societies, not excepting those formed for literary culture.

PRES. L. H. HAMMOND, Lebanon Valley College.—My conviction is firm that the influence of Freemasonry is baneful in whole and in part; that, religiously, it is a stumbling block; and that, socially and politically, the benefaction it offers to one is a robbery of others.

PRES. E. K. HILL, Washington University.—I have long regarded the secret conclaves as unnecessary to any good cause, and dangerous from their irresponsibility. Especially do I think that Freemasonry, from its nature, record and prevalence, is an enemy to the political purity and social morality of our country.

PRES. H. H. GEORGE, D. D., Geneva College.—No man can, at the same time, be a lover of Christ or a Christian, and a sworn member of a Christ-dishonoring and disowning fraternity, provided he know the true character of that fraternity. No man can be innocent in going into such a fraternity without knowing its true character.

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD, Oberlin.—The tendency to organize in secret bodies, political, social, religious and literary, seems to indicate distrust of the ordinary institutions of society, and will surely generate the distrust from which it seems to spring. The very idea of a secret combination implies a barbarous age, or a state of social anarchy in which such arrangements are necessary for safety. There is no place for it in a Christian civilization.

REV. JOSIAH BRADLEY, Principal of Rock Spring Seminary, Illinois, 1829.—Masonry is a human, and cunningly formed system of deception. Is it not rightly named "Speculative Freemasonry?" Millions have been drawn within its veil, and led away captive by its false pretensions and exhibitions of morality, charity and brotherly love. And many may still rejoice for a season in their delusions, despise reproof, and perish without remedy.

PRES. L. N. STRATTON, D. D.—One other fact worth naming is, that the oaths and secret workings of Freemasonry are out and well-known to the world. They are published in the reports of several State legislatures, and in Wendell's Supreme Court Reports of the State of New York, Vol. XIII, pp. 9-26. Their oaths are no less murderous than those taken by the Mollie Maguires, for obedience to which latter twenty-one have been tried and hung in the State of Pennsylvania.

LEONARD WOODS, D. D., Professor in Andover, 1820.—Now I have never seen or heard of any evidence, of any kind or degree, in support of the pretended antiquity of Freemasonry; and I suppose the same is true of all others. What then can we do, consistently with reason and common sense, but to withhold our belief. As to probable evidence, it would be very proper to inquire, whether it could be reconciled to the acknowledged character of Solomon, and of the twelve apostles to suppose, that they belonged to a society, established on the principles of practicing the rites of Freemasonry. If these principles and rites are what the community at large understand them to be, and what Freemasons themselves understand them to be, an answer to this inquiry would be no very difficult thing.

PRES. TIMOTHY DWIGHT, D. D., in a Fast Day Sermon, Yale College.—These [the doctrines of Illuminism] were: that God is nothing; that government is a curse, and authority an usurpation; that civil society is the only apostasy of man; that the possession of property is robbery; that chastity and natural affection are mere prejudices, and that adultery, assassination, poisoning and other crimes of a similar nature are lawful and even virtuous. A large branch of the Masonic Societies in Germany and France had already adopted the same objects, as the great and controlling ones of all their personal and united labors. Here secrecy furnished the most advantageous opportunities for the formation of every design and the most advantageous opportunities for its successful execution.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1887.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM THE POET WHITTIER.

The day before the Christian Congress assembled in this city the loved Quaker poet wrote the following friendly and appreciative letter to the editor of the Cynosure. It would have been most welcome at that meeting and no paper or speech would have received more hearty applause: but no less cordially will it now be greeted, though a little time has passed until enthusiasm has calmed into earnest and determined labor:

AMESBURY, Mass., Mar. 29, 1887.

MY DEAR OLD ANTI-SLAVERY FRIEND:—I am right glad to hear from thee. I thank thee for thy kind invitation, but the years rest rather too heavily upon me to permit me to travel so far. God, my dear friend, has been good to us, in letting us live to see the end of slavery, and our country a united one. No one has a better right to rejoice than thyself, for no one labored more bravely than thyself in the great cause.

I suppose thee knew that the Society of Friends do not allow any of their members to join secret societies, or take any oaths. I wish other sects would take the same ground.

Ever and truly thy friend,

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

DR. TALMAGE.—We give several articles from different States on this honored and gifted brother. We hope he will heed them and weigh them. They are written by the sort of Christians to which he belongs, earnest ones and honest ones, and if Providence permits us, the Cynosure will, next week, lay before this brother and the public its theory of his sermon on secret societies, and how he happened to preach it. The apostles of Christ were not only humble and honest Christians, but inspired men. Yet Peter, the bravest of them all, flinched, at times, from facing the enraged multitude, and Paul "withstood him to the face because he was to be blamed." Peter afterward called him our beloved brother Paul." 2 Pet. 3, 16.

THE LATE DR. J. B. WALKER left a legacy of two thousand five hundred dollars to the Professorship of Intellectual and Moral Science filled by President C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College. The approbation of so great an author, and so good a man as Dr. Walker, who had been for years intimately acquainted with the College and its president, must be grateful not only to the recipient of the bequest, but to all the friends of the institution and its principles.

OPIMUM IN FLORIDA.—A Florida paper "takes pleasure" in learning that an English company is embarking in the culture of poppies and manufacture of opium on Indian river in Florida. The agent, Dr. Winthrop, has learned that poppies yield so abundantly in that climate that an acre of land there will pay interest on $1,000 in a year. We should be glad to hear from our friend Dr. J. N. Bishop on this Florida enterprise. We see that opium-eating is increasing in this country; and from what we have seen and heard of its use, we should about as soon rejoice at the increase of rattlesnakes' venom, as of the juice of poppies for the production of that terrible drug. Will some one give us its statistics, its necessity, use and the possibility of dispensing with it altogether.

An effort, begun during the last year, is being made to remove the Mission Chapel and Industrial school which were built by Deacon Ichabod Washburne of sainted memory, and given by him to the city of Worcester, Mass. He intended to benefit the masses who attended no church, and poor children who had little or no training at their homes. He endowed the chapel with $20,000 dollars and the school with $5,000. The project on foot is to sell these buildings, and with the proceeds build in another part of the city, quite removed from the classes they were intended to benefit. Those most in sympathy with the donor, and who best knew his wishes are opposed to the charge. Twenty-six evangelical ministers of various denominations in and near Worcester, signed a petition against it. These public charities they think should be left "intact and unchanged." The case has been ably argued before the Supreme Judicial Court in Boston, by Rev. H. T. Cheever, and being so strongly endorsed we think his reasons must prevail with the court.

POPEY AND THE LODGE.

Some years since the Cynosure said that in the fierce agitations of the last days, all secret orders, from the Jesuits to Sons of Temperance, will flow together, like globules of water on an oil cloth, when the table is shaken. It would seem that our prediction is coming true. Cardinal Taschereau of Quebec secured the Pope's prohibition of the Knights of Labor. But Cardinals Manning of England, and Gibbons of Baltimore, have come out in favor of the Knights, and the Pope's infallibility has gone back on Taschereau, and countermanded his prohibition.

Cardinal Gibbons has an official communication in the Moniteur de Rome, translated for the Catholic Review. It is an extraordinary article. No demagogue can beat it. He says Powderly assures him that the Knights have no oath, and no secrets which they cannot reveal to their priests, in the confessional or outside of it; that Catholics "are a majority of the officers and members" of the Knights of Labor, and influence Protestants more than they are influenced by them. (1) Indeed it would seem as if Powderly has a secret rule or understanding by which Romish priests are admitted to the privileges of membership in their assemblies; and so are entitled to all their secrets.

But the Cardinal also assures "His Holiness" that there is not in this organization any hostility to the authority and laws of our country." What a pity that Governor Oglesby had not, instead of a battalion of Illinois State troops, sent up to Chicago an "assembly of Knights of Labor," to quell the riots at the Stock Yards last winter! And yet the Cardinal seems to have forgotten this, when, further along he urges, as a reason why the Pope should not condemn the Knights, "that the people must earn their living; and labor is now so organized that, without joining the organization, it is almost impossible to earn one's living." Indeed! Nothing "hostile to authority and law" in compelling a man to starve or join a secret society!

But the Cardinal gives us a grain of comfort in the following, where he says: "It seems to me that the Holy See could not condemn an association when" (among other things) "it would be dangerous to the reputation of the church in our democratic country." This surely is comforting. In Spain, Mexico, South Ireland, or any Roman Catholic country, where the people have been trained to do without "private judgment," no such fear exists. But here "in our democratic country," where Protestantism has given the people the Bible, and taught them to think for themselves, "it would be dangerous to the reputation of the church" to condemn the Knights of Labor. Here, priests and despots have to truckle and huckster and look out for their "reputation" with the thinking masses.

But it is certainly alarming to see a Cardinal with his scarlet hat and robe, a man "forbidden to marry and eat meats,"—and calling that "holiness!"—hand-and-glove with a simple mechanic, who has arisen by abject submission to priests, so that, as he said in his circular, he requires "obedience, secrecy and assistance," of five hundred thousand laboring men, who when one working man is wronged can command ten thousand men to quit work!—whose government is a secret committee, and his religion a secret religion between him and his priest! Let us hope in God that such secret priests and secret rulers will soon give way, and the Angel who is to preach the Gospel to the nations shall fly openly in mid heaven; and he who rules the nations shall come as the lightning comes, where "every eye shall see him" and know what he does. Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus.

—The Illinois State Executive committee in a brief and modest note call on the thousands of their friends to help again financially. Since the annual meeting in September last Bro. Arnold has presented some of the strong arguments against lodge worship to larger audiences probably than have ever cheered our State agents. The contributions this year have been fair, but of those to whom a special appeal was sent in January some 250 have not responded. The Committee appeals especially to these friends to aid them without delay, not only to pay the lecturer, but to provide the means for engaging a colporteur to begin work immediately. Bro. Arnold has been the heaviest contributor this year by far. Let us have a happy emulation in this matter and keep Illinois at her place at the head of the reform list.

—The Free Methodist, in its able article on the Church Congress, notices the growth of the doctrine of disfellowship; and adds, "We may with as much propriety, extend Christian fellowship to Mohammedans as to Freemasons."

—Do you file your copies of the Cynosure? If not, do them up in a wrapper and send to some one whom they will benefit, after well reading them yourself. Many will be glad to read the paper who do not feel able to subscribe.

—Rev. Dr. Wishart, author of the able argument on Masonry as devil-worship in this number, called on the Cynosure Friday, on his way to Wisconsin. Dr. Wishart is one of our most logical writers, and promises to contribute more often to our columns.

—Bro. Hawley's report of Iowa work meets a regretful postponement this week. The notice in our last that Secretary Stoddard was to assist the Iowa agent was a mistake. He has been in Salem and Burlington and lectured in the latter city Monday evening.

—It reveals much of the disposition of the liberal wing of the United Brethren church to see with what approving haste the eastern organ, the Itinerant reprints Dr. Talmage's sermon. We hope editor Drury, who so unhappily and unfairly reported the late meeting in this city, does not include this sermon in his catalogue of approved utterances on secretism.

—A dispatch from Rome to the London Chronicle shows that Cardinal Gibbons is not yet through with his scheme for enlarging Romanism in America by adding the Knights of Labor. The Pope's decision has displeased some of the reactionary cardinals who have signed a remonstrance asking that the case be reconsidered. The Catholic press has been ordered not to discuss the matter.

—We are glad to note that the Watchman, the organ of the Y. M. C. Associations of the United States, has printed Mr. Moody's Bible reading on "Walking with God," in which he brings in a distinct condemnation of secret societies. His remarks on this topic are less complete and particular, however, than in his Bible reading on the same topic in this city in 1876.

—It would have been an instructive accompaniment to our Boston letter of this week if space would have allowed an abstract of Rev. Dr. Down's case as it is connected with the Freemasons. As we have before published, he is a member of one of the Boston lodges, and it was the vile and scandalous character of some of the fraternity who were also in the church which greatly helped on the difficulty. Some of these particulars we may, if permitted at some time give our readers.

—The Religious Telescope had lately a three column article from the Presbyterian pastor at Lawrenceburg, Indiana, in praise of Henry Ward Beecher. The writer says Lawrenceburg was "perhaps the chief commercial town in Indiana," when Mr. Beecher went there. New Albany, below Lawrenceburg, on the Ohio opposite Louisville, and the Southern terminus of the railroad direct from the Lakes, must have then outnumbered Lawrenceburg several times over. The whole article is equally inaccurate.

—Miss Mary Allen West, the talented editor of the Union Signal, was for nine years one of the most efficient Superintendents of Public Schools Knox county, Illinois, ever had. We are glad to note that several educational organizations and the Central W. C. T. U. of Chicago have presented her name to Mayor Roche for appointment on the Board of Education of this city. Miss West is eminently qualified for such a position, having been a teacher for twenty-five years besides her superintendency. The Cynosure heartily joins the recommendation.

—Through an error in directing the letter from Bay Port, Mich., our readers now first learn of the shameful attempt of a lot of Mormon fanatics, led by their missionary priest, to get up a mob and stop a discussion of their system and exposition of its lies and infamies. Such a striking picture of the genuine Mormon temper and behavior could not often be found in Salt Lake City itself. It is the same savagery which the lodge religion always shows, the same domineering spirit. It is providential that we may print it in connection with Dr. McNiece's letter to the Boston Monday lecture.

—The Crank of College Springs, Iowa, takes a few turns on Dr. Talmage, and between the editor and Dr. Johnston and M. N. Butler the Brooklyn sermon begins to pulverize. Some indication of the popular interest—and indignation, too—which this sermon has aroused, may be had from our correspondence this week. The New York Witness, which prints a Talmage sermon weekly, will also have an opportunity of publishing one reply at least: we hope it may be a hundred.

THE ILLINOIS STATE COMMITTEE.

The labors of Mr. I. R. B. Arnold for the Illinois Christian Association closed April 1st, 1887. The Committee are gratified with his winter's work, and congratulate him upon his entrance into a larger field of labor, a field which in some degree includes this State. A balance of forty dollars is still due him for his services, and the money is not in the treasury. Please forward this balance, friends. We are sure that you wish to have your agent settled with promptly. We are looking forward with interest to our next State convention, and urge that there be a hearty co-operation in the preparation for it.

MRS. E. A. COOK, Ch'm.

CORRECTION.—As a mutual friend of the Cynosure and the W. C. T. U. I desire to correct an intimation in the close of the first article on the 8th page, April 7th Cynosure in regard to the design of the white ribbon badge of the Union. That badge was adopted by them near the time of the great Temperance Crusade, at its organization, and long before the White Cross movement was added to its line of work. It has found favor as a pledge of union and means of recognition, so far; and we hope may so continue in the future. It is dangerous casting a breath of suspicion on the motives of those who are doing a good work and following Christ in his labor of saving the lost. Still caution and skill and wisdom from above cannot be too earnestly sought so that our efforts may be successful. M. A. B.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

IN THE ENEMY'S CAMP.

Probably until after the bill for damages against the Bowdoin Square Baptist Society, now being prepared by Rev. Mr. Downs' counsel, General Benjamin F. Butler, is settled in the courts, the church will continue to worship in halls. Owing to an exceeding high rent for one service, the church has removed from Bumstead Hall to the Paine Memorial Hall in a building dedicated to Tom Paine, at the South End. Mr. Mendum, proprietor of the Investigator, a leading infidel sheet, informs the Cynosure's correspondent that he has been severely upbraided for letting a hall that is dedicated to infidelity, to a Christian society which is known to be soundly evangelical. The substance of his reply was, that since as infidels, they advocated liberality, it would not have been consistent to refuse. He would let it to the devil, if that individual wished to speak in his own defence. "Although," he added with a twinkle in his keen eyes, "Mr. Downs would not allow us to lecture in his church."

It is not surprising that the Tom Paineites should oppose the preaching of the Gospel in a place dedicated to the memory of the celebrated opposer of the doctrines of Christ. What a commentary on the antagonism of an arch-foe of Christianity, to hear the Word of God read and expounded in the most orthodox manner, right in the camp of his most ardent followers! What a testimony on the imperishability of Christianity! Tom Paine is dead, and his offspring, called infidelity, is dying, and Christianity, which it had thought to crush, Phoenix-like, hovers over its dying couch. In spite of its pomposity and blatancy, infidelity in this city, is dying of consumption. Whether admitted, or not, the erection of Paine Memorial Hall is more of an obituary than otherwise. The letting of a splendid hall at an exceedingly low figure, and to a despised sect, too, is evidence enough of its ultimate decay. Side by side at the main entrance of the edifice, last Sunday, were two sign-boards. One bore this notice:

INDEPENDENT SECULAR SOCIETY.
Address by Wm. M. Chandler, at 2:45. Topic: "Mental Epidemics." Music: Barrow's Orchestra.

On the other, in large colored letters, this:

PAINE HALL.
Gospel Services of the Bowdoin Square Baptist Church, Sundays, Preaching by the pastor, Rev. Wm. W. Downs. Morning Service, 10:45. Prayer-meeting, 7:30 P. M. Seats all free.

The contrast between the purports of those two notices attracted much attention, which was, indeed, an amusing spectacle. While several free-thinkers were forced to smile, others had faces as long as the moral law. One well-known, fiery infidel, as his cold grey eyes fell upon the really conspicuous sign, grunted in almost inaudible tones, "That's the brightest Gospel sign I ever saw. Ugh!" There was a large attendance at the evening service. A large number of infidels were present, and listened attentively to the remarks of Mr. Downs, and the prayers and testimonies of the Christians present. Mr. Downs in a few well-chosen words referred to the oddity of the situation, and finished by saying, that while his own denomination had refused to open its doors to a church which it had been instrumental in turning into the street during a revival, the representative of this infidel society had shown more of a Christian spirit in letting its hall for services opposed to its views. A lady, who declared herself an infidel, arose, and said that such a frank acknowledgment of the infidel's kindness, coming from a Christian minister, had touched her infidel heart. From her tones and subsequent manner it was evident she had thought Christians too bigoted and selfish to credit infidelity with any good act. During the evening she entered heartily into the singing of Gospel hymns, and doubtless left the hall with a better opinion of Christianity than when she had entered it.

Truly, the ways of the Lord are past finding out. He chooses strange ways his wonders to perform. Who shall say that Providence has not dropped this Christian church into the very hot-bed of skepticism. There may be souls here which could not be saved in any other way. Mr. Downs has always declared this trouble to be a strange one. He was confident it was for his own higher sanctification. It might be that God was allowing them as a church to endure this great affliction to try them, to prepare them for some great work. General Butler, with the penetrating eye of his massive legal brain, looking down the almost endless line of incontrovertible evidence, confessions, etc., etc., overwhelming testimony in Mr. Downs' favor, very recently said:

"Mr. Downs has been surrounded by the worst horde of thieves, liars, drunkards, conspirators and worse, that I ever heard of! I only wonder there is anything left of him at all. But I propose to soon ventilate the whole affair, which will put quite a different face on things. Until that time comes Mr. Downs' friends must stand by him and be patient." Mr. Butler wonders how the Bowdoin Square pastor has withstood the tempest, but Mr. Downs solves the mystery in declaring that he placed himself in the hands of God, believing that he would carry him safely through. The result, so far, proves that his trust was not misplaced.

D. P. MATHEWS.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

SALEM, Iowa, April 29, 1887.

I began work here on Sabbath morning last and have held seven meetings in and about the town. The season is a very busy one, especially with farmers, who are planting corn. The interest has steadily increased and under the circumstances I have been much gratified with the attendance. Friends church was well filled last evening, the secret fraternities being fairly represented. Seeing the unabated interest and attention I continued my speech a little over two hours, and hear that as a result I am spoken of by some members of the fraternity in terms not very complimentary.

I am indebted to Christian friends here for marked attention and many acts of kindness. Bro. Isaac T. Gibson's house has been my home. Bros. Pigeon, Foss, Kellum, Davis, the McMillans (father and son Charles) Bro. Frazier, and many others have shown a devotion to the cause deserving the highest commendation.

The lodge religion in Salem has a history. It has striven for the ascendancy and seems to have attained a partial and temporary success. The upper chamber of the M. E. church is divided and on one side of the middle wall, Masons practice their incantations and on the other Odd-fellows worship at their altars. The pastor of the M. E. church, C. W. Shepherd, is a "Brother of the Mystic Tie" and zealous in defense of the lodge religion and its god. The F. M. Lodge has had at least one accession in third degree. During revival services when a neighbor minister was preaching he was much annoyed by rappings and trappings in the room above. Succeeding a vigorous struggle, came a heavy thud on the floor, jarring the ceiling, which was doubtless the prostration of a human sacrifice on the altar of Baal.

I speak at Cedar Creek this evening and spend Sabbath with the United Presbyterian church in Burlington.

J. P. STODDARD.

DOWN THE POTOMAC.

HAMPTON NORMAL AND AGRICULTURAL INSTITUTE.

HAMPTON, Va.

Fine river steamers leave Washington every day at 5 p. m. for Old Point Comfort and Norfolk, Virginia, reaching their destination at 7 or 8 o'clock next morning. A trip down the river in fine weather is always interesting. We left Washington on the 21st, stopping long enough at Alexandria to get quite a view of the quaint old city, which seems to be slowly awaking to a renewed life. We reached old Fort Washington—as needless as it is impotent as a means of defense—and passed Mount Vernon before the shades of night shut down upon us. As the sun went down the purple clouds reflected on the glassy waters appeared surpassingly beautiful. As the season for summer travel has not yet begun, our boat was not thronged and was very quiet.

When the morning dawned we were steaming down the broad Chesapeake with its numerous steamers and sailing craft. Soon we turned into Hampton Roads, which we saw was well filled with all manner of sailing vessels, waiting for a wind to take them to sea. Here we got a touch of Old Ocean; the swells reminded us of his power to unsettle the most quiet stomach. We passed the frowning fortress with its batteries of great guns and landed in front of the great Hygeia Hotel, one of the largest summer resorts on the entire Atlantic coast. A nice hack took us over a beautiful shell road, through the quiet old town of Hampton, past the National Cemetery and the Soldiers' Home to the Hampton Normal and Agricultural School.

Of all the beneficent institutions that have grown out of and been necessitated by the emancipation of the slaves and the adoption of the "peace policy" with the Indians, none excels and probably none equals this in practical value. We were received very kindly and most hospitably entertained by Gen. Armstrong, to whom, as principal, this institution mainly owes its success. We were shown through the various shops, the recitation rooms and the farm buildings. In all of these we found admirable discipline and careful, systematic instruction.

The following extracts from the last year's report will give a pretty good idea of the work that is being done though the whole number under instruction including the Bulter School is not far from 1,000:

"The Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute stands on the shore of Hampton Creek, a little below the town of Hampton, Va., two and a half miles from Fortress Monroe, on an estate of one hundred and twenty acres, once known as 'Little Scotland,' and during the war known as 'Camp Hamilton,' the base hospital of the Army of the James, where as many as 15,000 sick and wounded Union soldiers were cared for at one time.

"The first slaves brought to America were landed a few miles off, and here the earliest English civilization on this continent was established. The second church built in America stands in the town.

"In April, 1868, the school was opened with fifteen scholars, on a manual labor basis, under the auspices of the American Missionary Association.

"In June, 1870, the Institute received a charter from the General Assembly of Virginia creating a corporation, giving power to the trustees to choose their own successors and to hold property without taxation to the amount of eight hundred thousand dollars. They number sixteen and now hold and control the entire property of the school by deed from the above named Association. Their corporate title is 'The Trustees of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute.' No denomination has a majority on the Board of Trustees. This school is devoted to Christian education but is conducted in the interest of no sect.

"The school farm proper contains 191 acres of good land. An addition of five hundred acres of good grain and grass land four and a half miles distant called the 'Hemenway Farm,' from its donor, furnishes ample farm land for all agricultural purposes of this school. There are thirteen different workshops where as many trades are taught.

"In 1878, fifteen Indians who had been for three years in charge of Capt. R. H. Pratt, U. S. A., at St. Augustine, Florida, as prisoners of war, were received, there being no other school that would take them, or that could give the practical training they needed. The present attendance is one hundred and forty, chiefly from the Sioux tribes. One hundred seventy-five Indians have already been educated and returned to their Western homes, of whom two-thirds have made a fair or good record. Not one has become a renegade; ten per cent have died; most are doing remarkably well." There are sixty-four

THE SONG OF SONGS.

O the lark by Avon's side

When the less were wet with dew
Soaring heavenward, fain to hide
In the far celestial blue!

Light the wind of June went by;
Rose the mist in sunny mazes;
High o'er cloud and zephyr winging
To the angels soared he, singing
Golden sweet—then silently
Dropped to rest amid the daisies.

How the building thrushes sung
In gardens where the Linnet flows,
Just as morning's gate unswung
Flushing all the Alps with rose!
How the chorus jubilant
Floated over lake and river!
Life was joy and earth was young
While those building thrushes sung;
Ah! their melody will haunt
Zurich in my thought forever.

Lark and thrush, I love you well;
But I heard a rarer song
As a wild March evening fell
Bleak New Hampshire's heights along.
Trees were bare and brooks were still;
On Kearsarge the snow was lying:
One red cloud athwart the gray
Faded, faded slow away,
And the north wind o'er the hill
Like the dirge of hope was sighing.

Hark! the robin in the elm
Warbling notes so glad and free,
Straight he brought a summer realm
Over thousand leagues of sea!
High he sang: "A true to fear!
Frost and storm are but the portal
We must pass ere June befall,
And the Lord is love through all!"
Lark and thrush, your lays are dear,
But the robin's is immortal!

THE MAN WHO SPOILED THE MUSIC.

There was no doubt about it, he did, and yet it was the last thing he was likely to believe. He loved music; his voice was often heard ringing out a rollicking song in the tap-room. And now it kept coming to him, in at least a score of ways—he himself was the man who spoiled all the music!

He was not in the brightest possible condition for an argument, and certainly not in a humor to be convinced of a truth that he did not want to believe; and yet convinced he was, and every minute added to the conviction. Every sight about him, and the silence, if not the sounds, forced it home upon him, so that there could not possibly be any mistake.

It was Sunday afternoon about four o'clock. He was leaning against the wall by the dirty fireplace, unwashed and in his shirt sleeves. The room looked as wretched as the man himself and as dirty; blackened and broken, with window-panes either plastered over with paper or stuffed out with rags. The rickety furniture was there simply because it could fetch nothing elsewhere. Seated on the other side of the fireplace was the white-faced and slatternly wife, holding a tiny bit of mortality at her breast, and breathing a heavy sigh that told of a burden there a great deal heavier than the baby.

One word summed up the whole reason of the wretchedness—drink. Not a bad sort of a man but for one thing; able to earn good wages and to have a comfortable home; yet no idle miscreant ever dwelt amid greater squalor or kept all about him in greater misery. The woman, who once found in him her joy, now sitting a broken-hearted wife; the home with its dainty bits of furniture, and all about it so bright and clean, gone for this; the children often wanting clothes and bread, yet dreading no want so much as they dreaded their father's presence—it was only the curse of drunkenness that could work such mischief.

So it was on this Sunday afternoon Jack stood as cross as cross could be, ready to let out his misery upon the first victim he could find, as if any one were to be blamed for it sooner than himself. Then it was that the door opened suddenly with a bang, and in burst two little maidens singing merrily; eyes and faces, hands and feet, all were full of music. They had come from the Mission Sunday-school, and the last hymn was in their ears and came cheerily ringing from their lips:

"I am so glad that our Father in heaven, Tells of his love in the Book he has given."

They had just got to the line of the chorus, "I am so glad," and it came in at the opened door with such a bounding gladness as they lifted the latch and felt that they were in the freedom of the home

—"I am so glad"—then suddenly they came far enough to see their father. Instantly the voices were silenced, the sunshine died out of their eyes; with a frightened look filling their faces they shrank outside the door again and shut it noiselessly.

The silence that followed was unbroken by a sound. The wife sat mournfully looking at the blackened ashes of the fireplace, with the little one asleep in her arms. That abrupt and sudden silence smote Jack's heart; those changed faces and the little frightened maidens hushed like that—he felt that he had done it all. He seemed to hear again the happy burst, "I am so glad," and then that dreadful stopping. He was going to ask with an oath why they didn't go on singing, but they weren't there, and so it was no use to do that; besides, he knew, too well, why they had stopped; so it came about that he lifted himself from the wall and thrust himself fiercely into his jacket, and went slouching towards the door. He strode out of the court and away on, anywhere, until he got outside the streets and into the more quiet and pleasant roads; then he slackened the pace. The fierceness had turned to grief, and at last came the words muttered to himself, "That's what I'm always doing; I spoil all the music."

It was dreadful to think of it, as he turned it over. How much it meant! He thought of his wife, and of the sweet voice she had long ago, and how, back in the old times, they had sung together. And now to think of her sitting there, so white-faced and silent! She never even sang the baby off to sleep—only kept on sighing. "Anyhow, not when I'm there," said Jack; "I spoil all the music."

It was dreadful to think about it, of the places he had been in as a carpenter and the chances he had had, and how one after another he had lost them all through the drink; and now the first to get notice to quit, the last to be offered a job, was he who had prided himself on his work. "Oh, dear, I've been spoiling all the music for years," sighed Jack.

Then out of the past there came another Jack—a decent fellow who wouldn't have looked at this dirty, ragged lounge; a man with his head up and a cheery voice that rang out in the lanes as he went to work in the early morning, and that kept time with the plane as he sent the shavings flying from the bench; who whistled the tune as he held up the bit of work and let his eye run along it to see if it were true, taking a pride in it, and then singing on again. And on Sundays—no wonder poor Jack sighed again; it was hard to believe that it was he who sang in the choir and used to take such a delight in it all.

"I spoil all the music," said Jack again, "everywhere." And at every pause and interval there came again the sight of those merry faces darkened and those glad voices silenced at the sight of him. "And I their own father," sighed Jack again. "Poor little dears, to go spoiling their music, too!"

Jack's trouble seemed to grow bigger every minute, until at last things began to get desperate. Dark and awful temptations flew about him. He would end it all; his wife and little ones couldn't be worse off than they were, and he, at any rate, would not be spoiling other people's music when he was dead. But before the grim thought had well got hold of him he seemed to see again the sunny faces and to hear the merry voices singing their song, "I am so glad." And with the thought of this time there came a softer feeling and a gentler tone. "Poor little things," he sighed again, "it wouldn't mend their music either if I was gone. Nor hers either," he said to himself a little while afterwards, as he thought of the white-faced wife and the little bit of mortality at home there.

So it came about that poor Jack, so burdened and helpless, stopped there and then, and put his face into his hands and said, "God help me!" He had gone on, never thinking where he was going, until now he found himself outside the long stretch of the houses and was under the green trees and in the midst of the fields. The lark sang overhead, the thrush and blackbird rang out their richest notes; in the branches above him a crowd of sparrows met and chirped the very loudest, merriest music they had ever learned. And there, in the sunset, Jack leaned on a gate and let his soul flow out to God in helplessness and sorrow and longing.

It was quite dark before he passed in at the squalid court where he lived and turned with a sigh into his wretched home. Poor Jack, his heart was very sore through that night, and asleep or awake, the words came sadly to his lips, "I spoil all the music."

The next day he was up and off at daylight. Vexed and desperate as he was, he went at his work with a grim fierceness, without a word for anybody. His mates were used to his moods, and did not care to interfere with him at times like these. "Jack is out again about some'at," said they with a jerk of the thumb in his direction. They might stop for dinner, but Jack snatched his bit of bread and worked on; they might pack up at the strike of the clock, but so long as the light lasted Jack would stick at it. "This is not spoiling anybody's music, anyhow," he said fiercely to one man who ventured to hint that he had done enough for that day. He came home and sat at his supper with his wife and children creeping noiselessly and frightened around the house. Poor Jack's tear came gathering in the corner of his eye and fell down his cheek. "I do wish they'd sing a bit, but I expect I've spoiled all the music forever," he muttered to himself. He longed to get them about him, wife and little ones, and to take the sleeping babe from its poor little rags, and tell them all that was in his heart; but somehow he couldn't manage it and so he just crept off to bed.

Jack's fit was on the next day, much to the surprise of his mates—the brow knit and the lips tight, and the work flying on at a tremendous pace. "Why, Jack, lad," cried one, "art thou putting a week o' work into a day that thou mayst go on a spree all the rest of it?"

"No," said Jack, so gruffly that nobody had a word for him again; and so it lasted Wednesday, Thursday, Friday. All that was strange enough, and set his workmates wondering; but strangest of all was it when that Saturday afternoon came and Jack took up his wages without a word and just walked right away from them. "Jack's mad," said they. "Never knew his fit to last so long as this."

"Now," said Jack, taking a stride just double the usual length, and putting his foot down as though he meant to get through to the other side of the earth, "I'll try and get the music back again," and Jack meant to smile, but he had to put his mouth tight and to knit his brows to keep back a tear. "By God's help," added Jack, devoutly.

When he came home he evidently was not expected, indeed, was scarcely wanted. There was not much to be tidied up, and his wife, poor thing, had not much heart to do that little. But much or little, she was now in the middle of the process, and so the "bits of sticks," as they were called, were put on one side while the good wife kneeled and scrubbed away at the floor with the handle of a brush on which a few straggling hairs remained as if to keep up the name. The wife lifted her face in surprise, and went on with her scrubbing. Whatever this coming home meant, nothing ever brought her any good.

Poor Jack, he seemed to hear it all. "Spoiled her music, too," he sighed. He hung up his bag of tools on their peg and took off the apron that was rolled about his waist, and then he caught sight of that very venerable and hairless scrubbing-brush. "It will help to bring back the music," said Jack to himself, purposing to buy his wife there and then a new one, but the purpose was somewhat delayed. Just then, from some corner of the room, came the cry of the baby. The wife was rising up to get at it when Jack dived in after the little bundle of rags and fetched it out.

"I'll hold her a bit," said Jack, rather shyly.

Jack's wife would like to have said "Thank you," but she felt shy, too. "Now, Jack, try and mend the music," said he to himself, and that time he really did smile, for the baby was unused to strangers, and none was a greater stranger to it than its own father, so it just cried out lustily. The good wife scrubbed on. There were times when she had to let it cry a bit, and this should be one of them. Jack took it tenderly into his arms and chirped to it, and chirped louder, but still it cried. It was wonderful that such a poor little wizened frame could make such a noise. Then Jack put the baby on the other arm and whistled, whistled fast and shrill. No, it just cried on as loud as ever. Then Jack took it up in his hands and held the little one aloft and danced it to and fro and began to sing, soft and low at first as a man who was feeling his way. But still the baby cried. And the good wife rose from her scrubbing to take it herself. Jack would try once more; it really was not pleasant to be beaten like this, so he set him resolutely, and then rang out an old song of long ago with all the force of his voice. The effect was magical. The baby stopped as if were charmed; it opened its mouth in imitation of the father's, it laid hold firmly of the whiskers with little tangled fingers as if it would keep him at it, and then it laughed and crowed with delight. The poor wife looked on and smiled; it was a strange smile, as if she had got out of the way of it, but it stayed longer than you might have thought.

"Eh, Jack, it is good to hear thy music again," she said very quietly.

Poor Jack it almost put him out. He did stop for a moment, but instantly the little face puckered and wrinkled into all sorts of lines, the eyes closed, the nose was squeezed together, and the lips began to quiver with the coming cry. Then Jack had to strike off again, only to find the effect as magical as before, and to hear the baby laughing and crowing once more. And in the midst of it all there came in two little maidens to find the father leaning against the wall, making music like this.

"Why, we couldn't think whoever it was, father," said they, wondering, and without the merriment fading from their eyes this time.

They sat at tea silent and shy, every one of them wondering except the baby, that kept stretching out its arms to the father and found a new delight in pulling at his whiskers.

Poor Jack, he wanted all his thoughts about him to say what he found it so hard to say, but words wouldn't come; and the most eloquent would find it hard to talk when a tiny hand was being thrust in one's mouth and another tugged at the beard. So Jack had to content himself with putting his hand into his pocket, and, taking out one sovereign and one half sovereign, he gave them to his wife.

"What's this, Jack?" she asked, going to the window, for it was getting darkish, and she feared the first glance had deceived her.

"Wages," said Jack, getting it out as well as he could.

The poor wife looked at the money and then she looked at him. She bit each of the coins, and then looked as if she would like to apply her lips at least to Jack's. But she put the money in her pocket, she felt that if this thing went on she would have to sing too.

"I'll stay and take care of the little ones if you want to go out, wife," said Jack. True, it was spoken with some interruption, and more than one word was bobbed back into the mouth by that little hand. But it went down into the good wife's heart and stirred music she had not heard for many a long day.

"Bless thee, lad! it is good of thee," said the wife, and then she blushed like a maiden that she should have said so much.

"'Tis all thine, wife, so don't be afraid," said Jack as the wife went out at the door.

She turned back with a great stare. She had taken the half-sovereign and put the other in the mysterious depths of her dress.

"All this?" said she. "Why, Jack, what must I do with it?"

"Buy thyself a new scrubbing-brush, and get the baby a new frock for Sunday," and this time Jack did smile.

The wife came nearer; she couldn't help it; she stood for a moment plucking up courage, then she put her hand on his shoulder and stooped down and kissed the baby, and took a long time over it too.

"I should like to give thee one, too," she said as shyly as possible; and she did it splendidly and then hurried away.

"I think the music is coming back again," said Jack to himself.

* * * * *

Later that night after his wife came back, Jack went marketing and a couple of chairs were set by the fire. "Good kind of music boxes," Jack said to himself as he took them in at the door and set each in its place. And there about the fire, they sat silent for a while, the baby asleep and the little maidens at his side.

"Come, little ones, you must sing to mother and me," he said at last. "I am so glad, you know."

And they looked at each other with a wonder that soon passed into sunshine and joy; and before they knew it Jack and his wife joined with them. But poor Jack broke down before he had gone on long; then the others broke down too, and all was still for awhile, until Jack wiped away his tears and looked up cheerily.

"Eh, but I mustn't spoil the music like this. Sing on, little ones;" and they did sing, and Jack sang, and his wife. And Jack did as he hadn't done for many a day; he knelt down with wife and children and asked God to help them, to forgive the past, and to strengthen him for the future.

On the Sunday there they sat together at the little Mission-room, and from that day to this no voice is clearer or louder than Jack's. And now, whenever he talks about clumsy work or faults in anything, Jack always calls it "spoiling the music."

Jack's prayer every morning is, "Lord, keep us in tune all day long"—a prayer that has been blessedly answered now for many months.—Sunday Magazine.

The amount of alcoholic liquor sent to Africa from the United States is one of the most abominable outrages ever perpetrated on an unoffending people, and this, too, by a professedly Christian people. Shame on such unblushing villainy under the garb of religion.

THE LEGEND OF TWO SACKS.

There is an ancient legend that tells of an old man who was in the habit of traveling from place to place, with a sack hanging behind him and another in front of him.

What do you think these sacks were for? Well, I will tell you.

In the one behind him he tossed all the kind deeds of his friends, where they were quite hid from view; and he soon forgot all about them.

In the one hanging round his neck under his chin, he popped all the sins which he knew the people committed, and these he was in the habit of turning over and looking at as he walked along day by day.

One day, to his surprise, he met a man wearing, just like himself, a sack in front and one behind. He went up to him and began feeling his sack.

"What have you got here, my friend?" he asked, giving the sack in front a good poke.

"Stop, don't do that!" cried the other, "you'll spoil my good things."

"What things?" asked number one.

"Why, my good deeds," answered number two.

"I keep them all in front of me, where I can always see them. See, here is the half crown I put in the plate last Sabbath; and the shawl I gave to the beggar girl; and the mittens I gave to the crippled boy; and the penny I gave to the organ-grinder; and here is even the benevolent smile I bestowed on the crossing-sweeper at my door; and"—

"And what's in the sack behind you?" asked the first traveler, who thought his companion's good deeds would never come to an end.

"Tut, tut," said number two, "there is nothing I care to look at in there! That sack holds what I call my little mistakes."

"It seems to me that your sack of mistakes is fuller than the other," said number one.

Number two frowned. He had never thought that, though he had put what he called his "mistakes" out of his sight, every one else could see them still. An angry reply was on his lips, when happily a third traveler—also carrying two sacks, as they were—overtook them.

The first two men at once pounced on the stranger.

"What cargo do you carry in your sack?" cried one.

"Let's see your goods," said the other.

"With all my heart," quoth the stranger; "for I have a goodly assortment, and I like to show them. This sack," said he, pointing to the one hanging in front of him, "is full of the good deeds of others."

"Your sack looks nearly touching ground. It must be a pretty heavy weight to carry," observed number one.

"There you are mistaken," replied the stranger; "the weight is only such as sails are to a ship, or wings to an eagle. It helps me onward."

"Well, your sack behind can be of little good to you," said number two, "for it appears to be empty; and I see it has a great hole in the bottom of it."

"I did it on purpose said the stranger; "for all the evil I hear of people I put in there, and it falls through, and is lost. So you see I have no weight to drag me down backwards."

A WONDERFUL LAKE IN IOWA.—The greatest wonder in the State of Iowa, and perhaps in any other State, is what is called the Walled Lake, in Wright county, twelve miles north of the Dubuque and Pacific railroad, and one hundred and fifty miles west of Dubuque city. The lake is two or three feet higher than the earth's surface. In some places the wall is ten feet high, fifteen feet wide at the bottom, and five feet wide at the top. Another fact is the size of the stone used in the construction, the whole of them varying in weight from three tons down to one hundred pounds. There is an abundance of stones in Wright county, but surrounding the lake, to an extent of five or ten miles, there are none. No one can form an idea of the means employed to bring them to the spot, or who constructed it. Around the entire lake is a belt of woodland half a mile in length, composed of oak. With this exception the country is a rolling prairie. The trees must have been planted there at the time of the building of the wall. In the spring of the year 1856, there was a great storm, and the ice on the lake broke the wall in several places, and the farmers in the vicinity were obliged to repair the damages to prevent inundation. The lake occupies a ground surface of 2,800 acres; depth of water as great as twenty-five feet. The water is clear and cold, soil sandy and loamy. It is singular that no one has been able to ascertain where the water comes from nor where it goes, yet it is always clear and fresh.

Cheerful looks make every dish a feast.

TEMPERANCE.

HOW TO CONVERT A PASTOR.

I spent six weeks in Illinois recently, lecturing mostly in United Presbyterian churches. Among all their pastors I found but one who was not a third party Prohibitionist. I wrote to him requesting an appointment to lecture on "Sabbath Observance." He wrote me the following reply, "In the first place we are loyal people here, not rebels, and so do not relish the abuse the government gets from National Reform lecturers. In the next place we are temperance people, and if there had been time to correspond with you as to what kind of a lecture you had on temperance, we would be glad to arrange for you, always providing, you gave us a pure temperance lecture, without the Third Party, Free Rum attachment, which would only strengthen the enemy here as it does everywhere."

A few days after in passing through his town on the train, I stopped off, walked up to the residence of this pastor, and told him to stand up so that I might get a good look at the man who could write such a letter. I told him as I left I would call on some of his best members, and if they were in enough sympathy to work up a meeting, I hoped that he would at least remember the bear story. He said, "What bear story?" I told him of the hunter out West who ran across a large grizzly bear, which closed on him and the hunter had only time to draw his knife and put up this prayer, "O Lord, you know I am about to have the biggest old bear fight you ever saw; and now if you can't help me, please don't help the bear. Amen." I found some strong Prohibitionists among his members, who would not let me off until I fixed the time for a lecture. When I returned two weeks after, this pastor met me at the depot, kindly lodged me, had a full house out, and opened the meeting with prayer. I left him on quite loving terms, but still think it was his good elders and deacons that starched him up. I lectured in another United Presbyterian church in an Illinois town where the pastor was a devoted Prohibitionist. We sat up till a late hour talking over the situation. He said he was about to resign, and did two weeks afterward, because—well the same old story. He advocated third party Prohibition.—Rev. M. A. Gault in Western Crank.

PLAYING FOOL.

An industrious young shoe-maker fell into the habit of spending much time in a saloon near by. One by one his customers began to desert him. When his wife remonstrated with him for so neglecting his work for the saloon, he would carelessly reply, "Oh, I've just been down a little while playing pool." His little two-year old boy caught the refrain and would often ask, "Is you goin' down to play fool, papa?" Smith tried in vain to correct this word. The child persisted in his own pronunciation, and day by day he accosted his father with, "Has you been playin' fool?" This made a deep impression upon the shoe-maker as he realized that the question was being answered in the falling off of his customers and the growing wants of his household. He resolved again and again to quit the pool table, but weakly allowed the passion of play to hold him a long time. Finally he found himself out of work, out of money, and out of flour. Sitting on his bench one afternoon, idle and despondent, he was heard to exclaim, "No work again to-day—what I'm to do I don't know?" "Why, papa," prattled the baby, "can't you run down and play fool some more?" "Oh, hush, you poor child," groaned his father, shame-stricken. "That's just the trouble. I papa has played fool too much already." But he never played it again, and to-day his home is comfortable and happy once more.—Temperance Review.

The scandal of popular drunkenness will doubtless be much abated in Russia by the new excise law which is about to go into force. All saloons which exist merely for the purpose of retailing grog will be closed, to the number of 80,000. The sale of liquors only in hotels and restaurants, and licenses to these will be limited in number according to the judgment of the excise officers, and a fee of $725 exacted for each. The Russian Finance Minister, in announcing the law says that, "While experience had proved that the vice of drunkenness cannot be extirpated by legislative measures, it is certain that wise legislation can at least do much to lessen the evil and contribute to the moral development of the people."

It is not so much what shall we do with the drunkard as what shall we do with the drunkard-maker.

professors and teachers; one of them is an educated Indian woman.

A fine new church with a high square tower, in which is now being placed a clock and a chime of bells, constitutes a conspicuous and most pleasant feature. The interior of the church is nearly circular and is plain but beautiful. Its entire cost was the gift of a single individual. The pastor, Rev. Pettis, was until recently a missionary in Japan. Like other Christian workers he has no difficulty in seeing the inconsistency of secret societies with Christian civilization, and extended a cordial sympathy.

This morning at 9 o'clock I met the assembled school in the College Chapel and spoke half an hour on the general character of the secret lodge system. I had careful attention. At the close Gen. Armstrong enquired how many Masons and Odd-fellows were present and about a dozen held up their hands. Most of the others belong to some secret society. In the multiplicity of duties that have pressed on the officers and teachers of this school, it is probable that this subject has been largely overlooked. The lodge system did not need to be encouraged in order that it should grow. All worldly and selfish institutions, like noxious weeds, grow by neglect. So far as I know none of the officers or teachers here belong to any secret orders but they have not had their attention called to their corrupting and desolating influence. It is to be hoped that this great and good institution will be a breakwater to the encroachments of these pests of our land.

NORFOLK, ITS SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

NORFOLK, VA., APRIL 25, 1887.—By the kindness of Gen. Armstrong we were sent in a carriage down to Fortress Monroe, and had an opportunity to examine this largest and strongest military defence on the American continent. The great 80-ton guns mounted on the parapet are intermingled with a multitude of others of smaller size but of greater length. The deep moat that surrounds the fort renders approach from land impossible, while the shore battery would seem quite sufficient to beat off an attack from sea. In one of the casemates under the high embankment Jefferson Davis was for a time kept a prisoner, and when his health failed he was confined and cared for in one of the many buildings which serve as barracks and officers' quarters. Of more interest to me than any of these appliances and relics of war were the beautiful groves of live oaks which occupy a large part of the space within the ramparts, and which here attain their most northern point of growth. If you go one hundred miles back from the coast you will have to go four hundred miles farther south before you will find a single live oak.

At 4 p. m. of the 23d we came across, twelve miles, to the old city of Norfolk and passed over on the ferry to Portsmouth, which, though the much less important city, is the county-seat of Norfolk county. Here we found pleasant accommodations in a Christian family and at reasonable rates.

Portsmouth has about 15 000 inhabitants, is regularly laid out, quite well paved, and is a pleasant little city, but with very little of business activity. Here is an important navy yard which we failed to visit. It was here that the Merrimac was fitted out, and from here she sailed to destroy the Congress and the Cumberland and engage in her terrible conflict with the Monitor, from which she returned in a disabled condition. The names of the streets here indicate the anti-Revolutionary date of this city, as "Kings," "Queens," and "Princess," etc. We visited Trinity church, built in 1762 and enlarged in 1829. In the old cemetery we found some stones dating as far back as 1775. They were all of free-stone. No marble or granite seems to have been used before the beginning of the present century. There were a good many stones that we failed to decipher.

On Sabbath morning we attended the Zion Baptist church (colored) of which Rev. J. M. Amistead is pastor. It has about 1,600 members, and at present is enjoying an interesting revival. Over one hundred, mostly children of the large Sabbath-school, have professed conversion, and on Sabbath morning thirty were examined and accepted as candidates for baptism. We listened to an excellent discourse from Rev. W. W. Collie, an African missionary who had spent five years in Abeokuta and three years at the Vey mission, near Cape Mount, West Africa. I also found here Rev. Mr. Presley, laboring as an evangelist, who had also been a missionary among the Veyes. Here, too, we met Rev. J. J. Pusey, an educated Baptist minister from Jamaica, W. I., who is now engaged in teaching in that city. All of these brethren were decided and earnest in their opposition to secret societies, and bid me God speed in my work. At night I preached to a full house; there must have been from 800 to 1,000 present. They gave excellent attention, and though probably a large majority were members of one or more secret societies, they expressed no disapproval of my arraignment of these societies as worldly and selfish institutions, with which God's people had no right to have fellowship.

On Monday morning we came over to Norfolk and visited the United Presbyterian Mission College, Rev. W. L. Wallace, D. D., president. Here we met a most kind reception and cordial sympathy. The school occupies a fine, large, new brick building, and has enrolled nearly 600 pupils, of whom about seventy are in the high school. Besides Dr. Wallace there are eight teachers, two young men and six young ladies. Considering its age (about five years) this is one of the most successful and prosperous schools in the South. Dr. Wallace, the matron Mrs. Cooley, and the teachers occupy a pleasant home adjoining the college, and in it we are being most kindly entertained. At 9:30 A. M. I met the students of the high school and spoke for three-quarters of an hour on the secret lodge system. Dr. Wallace added many instructive remarks and earnest admonitions to have no fellowship with any thing that pertained to the lodge system. He had made this subject one of careful investigation, and assured them that the whole system of which Freemasonry was the type was not in harmony with the Gospel of Christ.

Leaving Mrs. H. to look through the classes, I went back to Portsmouth and visited Rev. Pusey's school. He seemed much pleased, and at once invited me to give them a talk on secret societies, which he assured his pupils were among the greatest obstacles to Christianity and good government, and which, he says, do not prevail in the West Indies as they do here. I spoke at some length, and was listened to with respectful attention. After a further call on Bros. Collie and Presley I went back amidst a pouring rain to the Mission College, where we are most pleasantly detained till to-morrow.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

THE CHICAGO EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY, of which Mr. D. L. Moody is president, will hold an Institute for Christian students and workers, men and women, in this city, commencing early in May.

There will be, 1st. Lectures to young converts on practical subjects. 2d. A four weeks' carefully arranged plan of teaching and study.

This part of the Institute will be under the leadership of Prof. W. G. Moorehead, D.D., of Xenia, Ohio, who has so ably and successfully conducted two similar Institutes. He will be assisted by Rev. Dr. E. P. Goodwin, Rev. S. J. McPherson, D.D.; Prof. Hugh McD. Scott, D. D.; President Ridgway, Maj. D. W. Whittle, and other able teachers and ministers.

The course of instruction will comprehend, 1st. Christian Doctrine. 2d. Biblical Exegesis. 3d. Elementary Church History. 4th. Practical Christian Work.

Like all the work of the Chicago Evangelization Society, this effort to instruct Christian workers is undenominational.

Applications for admission to the Institute may be addressed (please note the address carefully) to F. G. Ensign, Bible Work Institute, 150 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

—On Fast Day, April 7, Dr. Munhall and Mr. and Mrs. Townner began a series of revival services in Worcester, Mass., having been invited to come thither for a period of ten days or two weeks. Afternoon Bible readings were arranged for every day in the week except Saturday. These began with an attendance of nearly two hundred, which steadily increased to fully three times that number, at the end of two weeks. On the first Sabbath afternoon a young people's service was held, for persons between the ages of twelve and twenty-five, all being admitted by tickets. The church was full to its utmost capacity, and not less than a hundred and fifty arose for prayers, of whom a great number went to the inquiry room. On the next Sabbath afternoon, an almost unparalleled gathering of young men between the ages of fourteen and thirty-five, thronged the Mechanics' Hall, the largest available room in the city. At least two thousand were present, and five hundred rose for prayer and to confess Christ.

—A strong effort has been made, says the Independent correspondent at Cleveland, to keep Dr. Pentecost for another month. Petitions were circulated and hundreds of persons by signing them engaged their individual support. On the last Sunday evening between two and three thousand persons rose to express their conviction that the work should go on. The city is moved, the surrounding towns are stirred. Scores of people drive in to the meetings, at the expense of having to drive home again at midnight.

—Rev. E. B. Graham has entered upon the eighth year of his charge of the United Presbyterian church in Omaha. In this period he has seen one off-shoot of his congregation become a separate pastoral charge with already a new church, valuable property, and a pastor.

—The Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost is expected to begin his labors in Montpelier, Vt., on the first Sunday in May.

—The Baptist National anniversaries to be held at Minneapolis this year, commence, Missionary Society, Tuesday, May 24. They are usual, with the Woman's Baptist Home, American Baptist Publication and Historical societies meet Wednesday and Thursday. The Missionary Union and Woman's Foreign Missionary societies meet Friday and Saturday.

—The Congregationalist announces that the American Home Missionary Society has closed its year without debt. For a time it was feared that a disheartening deficiency would remain when the books closed, but the special efforts of friends and the activity of the officers of the Board have brought it out into a large and wealthy place.

—A couple of Princeton students have been canvassing the colleges and seminaries of this country for names of students willing to become foreign missionaries. They have heard from ninety-two institutions, and in these 1,525 students have signified a willingness to go abroad as missionaries. Upwards of 300 of the number are women. The volunteers include 25 from Amherst; Williams, 19; Andover, 14; Harvard, 9; Cornell, 35; Oberlin, 110; and Princeton seminary and college, 48.

—The sixteenth annual session of the Woman's Presbyterian Board of Missions for the Northwest opened at Davenport, Wednesday with four hundred delegates and visitors in attendance. The address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. C. E. Putnam, and the response by Mrs. George Ladin, of Chicago. The report of the Treasurer, Mrs. Charles B. Farwell, Chicago, shows total receipts from all sources for the year to be $67,675.41, and the disbursements $67,460.12.

—At the last annual meeting of the American Tract Society a resolution was unanimously adopted providing for the appointment of a committee "to inquire into the practical workings of the Society, and recommend such changes in its constitution, methods and management as may seem desirable to said committee." A report is preparing for the annual meeting, May 11.

LITERATURE.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, edited by William George Clark and William Aldis Wright. In twelve volumes. Vols. 3 and 4.

This handy-volume edition of the great poet-dramatist we have before noticed as being the most desirable for its convenience of good type, neat page, agreeable size and shape and—most important to many—very accommodating price, of anything in our knowledge. These two volumes contain the plays from "The Merchant of Venice" to "King John" in order. The enterprising publisher has begun a cheaper edition in six volumes from the same plates, than which, at $3.00, it would be an injustice to ask for more by way of cheapness.

NATURAL LAW IN THE BUSINESS WORLD.—In justice to this volume on labor-and-capital topics, we wish again to call attention to its merits and promise as soon as possible to print some extracts from the chapter on labor organizations. The plan of the volume is a striking and original one, and though we may not say that its argument is complete, yet we believe it to be one of the best yet presented to American readers. The author does not fail to meet the whole case at issue. Supply and demand, socialism, employers, and their duties, State arbitration, economic legislation, the unequal distribution of wealth, prosperity and depression, etc., are among the divisions of this ramified subject which the author takes up with ability and fairness. The principles which he holds to be fundamental law in the business world are generally little understood by workingmen or concealed by the sophistries of demagogues in their secret lodges. The book is published by Lee and Shepard, Boston, for 75 cents.

Commander F. E. Chadwick of the Navy in Scribner's Magazine for May in an article on the "Development of the Steamship," traces the rise and progress of steam navigation, and describes the developments in naval archiitecture from the early efforts of Fulton down to the magnificent ocean steamers of the present day. The article is accompanied by profuse illustrations, several of which are from instantaneous photographs of the finest modern steamships in motion. Professor N. S. Shaler who makes a very bald and repulsive profession of Darwinism contributes a paper on the "Forests of North America," which is written in the same interesting style that marked the author's paper on "Earthquakes," in a previous number of the same magazine, and discusses the subject from an economic as well as from a scientific stand-point. Sable Island is described in an illustrated article bearing the title, "An Ocean Graveyard," the fitness of which is more than proved by the curious "wreck-chart," recording the long list of vessels that have met shipwreck and disaster on its barren sands.

The Converted Catholic is the leader of opinion in the effort to Christianize Romanism. It is always zealous and seldom unwise. Among the topics of the May number are "From Romanism to Judaism," "Sketch of Father O'Connor's Life," "Father McGlynn's Course," "Letters to Cardinal Gibbons," etc.

The Faith Missionary, of Oberlin, devoted to the advancement of the "Faith Work in the Foreign Field," prints a long and Scriptural letter on "Divine Healing" from E. C. Newberry of Leghorn, Italy. Its missionary correspondence is from brethren O. S. Palmer and A. Norton in India. A new missionary enterprise is urged to begin at the Zambezi river on the east coast, a corresponding work to that of William Taylor on the Congo.

The Missionary Review opens with an article by Dr. Pierson which portrays the opportunities and risks of the Christian church in a thrilling appeal. Very important missionary enterprises and hindrances are discussed in connection with the reports from West Africa, the Mission troubles in North India and the debt of Foreign Mission Boards.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co., of New York, issued on Monday, May 2nd, the nineteenth annual edition of their standard publication, the "American Newspaper Directory."

The new volume contains an exhaustive list of all class publications so admirably arranged that any one of the three thousand papers represented, there can be readily referred to and all important facts concerning it, together with its circulation rating, easily obtained.

The number of papers published in the United States, Territories (including Alaska) and Canada is put at 15,420, an increase of 581 in one year.

The growth of newspapers in some of the Western States would be a matter of wonder if it were not that this year is no exception to the rule. In Kansas the increase is 89 and in Nebraska 64; while the Keystone State shows a smaller advance of 35 and the Buckeye State of 30. Pennsylvania exhibits the largest increase in dailies, 17; Kansas in weeklies, 81, and New York in monthlies, 42. Seven States show a decrease: the most prominent instances being New Hampshire and Virginia, six each. The whole volume shows that great care has been taken to sustain its reputation as the most comprehensive work of the kind yet published, and to insure accuracy in every detail. Anything less than a complete compendium of American newspapers and periodicals would surprise those who are familiar with the former efforts of this firm who are so well known as the oldest, largest and best known of all the American Advertising Agencies.

LODGE NOTES.

The newly elected Grand Master Workman of the A. O. United Workmen of Illinois is a member of the law firm of Hill & Martin, of Murphysboro. He is a prominent Mason.

A certificate of the final dissolution of the Independent Order of Knights and Ladies of Honor was filed last week in Springfield by the officers of the Supreme Lodge of Illinois.

The labor world is excited over a declaration by the executive of the Knights of Labor of a virtual boycott against nearly eight hundred labor journals not in accord with the Powderly administration. But twenty-two papers are recommended in a recent issue of the Journal of United Labor, the official organ of the knights.

Knights of Labor assembly 3217 of Denver, Col., adopted a resolution censuring President Cleveland because of his action in ordering troops to Dakota to evict settlers at the Crow and Winnebago agencies.

The General Executive Board of the Knights of Labor, after three days' conference with the representatives of the stove moulders throughout the country, decided that they would not interfere in the present controversy about the St. Louis patterns. The executive officers say that the matter will be left entirely with the district assemblies to which some of the stove moulders belong.

The strike of the stove moulders, which Mr. Powderly is trying to stop looks ridiculous. Trouble in a St. Louis foundry caused a demand upon some other foundries for castings of parts to enable its stoves to be put upon the market. The moulders all over the country refused not only to work on these castings but on any others. The trouble extends to thousands of families who actually do not know why it is that the head of the house is out of work.

A secret lodge of regulators in Christian county, Missouri, is breaking up. A report from Ozark, Mo., states that the indictment of the Bald Knobbers, eleven in number, for the murder of George Edens, has spread terror throughout the Bald Knobbers' section about Chadwick, and a general exodus of the unmasked brotherhood will take place soon. Joseph Inman has made out a list of the members of the Bald Knobbers Order of Christian county, and he implicates preachers, merchants, doctors, justices of the peace, and many wealthy and influential citizens. Inman and Graves agree with Walker in estimating the number in Christian county at 800, and name many prominent men who accompanied them in criminal raids behind the black mask.

COMPOUND OXYGEN.

The following letter to Dr. Hiatt, of this city, is from a patient of his who had been a sufferer from Tubercular Consumption for over two years. The case had been carefully diagnosed by able physicians and pronounced incurable by all the most approved means of healing. The lady, by direction of her physician, Dr. Leavens, now of Middletown, Indiana, procured Dr. Hiatt's Compound Oxygen Treatment, and after using it some six months, writes as follows:

Dr. A. H. Hiatt, Central Music Hall Chicago:

DEAR SIR:—I have used two of your Compound Oxygen Home Treatments and now consider myself cured. I think your Treatment was the means of saving my life, for it was despaired of by my attending physician and others. I am so grateful for what your Treatment has done for me that I am recommending it to others. I have sent you one patient already, Mrs. S. Carey. And now I have two more for you. These are Tubercular Consumption also. Please send your Treatment to them immediately, C. O. D., as they are anxious to try it, and oblige. Yours,

Mrs. M. HAROLD.

Carmel, Indiana, March 23, 1887.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minister of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

Price 10 cents, postpaid. Address,

THE

Man Traps of the City.

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons of the day, and picture in strong, true colors

The Tiger and His Den. The Scarlet Sin.

Cups of Flame. The Devil's Printing Press.

Embezzlement. Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or lurid details of crime, but from facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the profligate is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Ganadagau jail, his subsequent escape from the Ganadagau to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but

ATTACHES AN ADVERT TO IT. In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through the anti-Masonic excitement "by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME AND HEALTH.

NEW HINTS ON HOUSE-CLEANING.

From several years of observation of the different methods employed by women in their annual house cleaning, we are convinced that most of them make themselves a great deal of unnecessary hard work when putting their "houses in order." The usual way is, to go at it as if the fate of the nation depended on having it done at a certain time. "Taking it leisurely," is something they do not seem to think of. "Moving" is always dreaded by the men folks, and house cleaning, as a general thing, is about as bad. We know one woman who has completely revolutionized the old system. She begins with the closets. She empties one at a time, cleans it and its contents, returns them to it and goes on to the next, never hurrying the work and consequently never making herself sick by overdoing, as so many women do every spring. When the closets are in "apple pie order," she begins with the rooms, taking those up-stairs first, one at a time, and working her way down to the cellar. There is no bustle, no confusion, no "picked up" meals, and, consequently, no outbreaks of wrath on the part of the men folks, who would not know that house cleaning was going on if they were not asked to help move heavy furniture out of one room into another now and then, and carry out the carpets, or bring them in after they had been beaten and aired. When the house is cleaned in this leisurely fashion, it is easy to get the men to help put up shades and curtains, because they do not get out of sorts from the general topsy turvy condition of things. When the work is completed the woman of the house is not "all used up." She may be tired—without doubt she is—but she soon "rests up" and is "all right again," while in many cases the woman who cleans house after the old fashion pays for her over zealous ambition by sickness brought on by not going slow and working according to her strength.—American Agriculturist.

HOUSE PLANTS IN APRIL.

Whether in the greenhouse or the window garden, plants that have done their best all winter are now being made ready for their season in the open air. While they remain within the increasing heat requires that they have greater care in ventilation and in freeing them from insects. Plants that are taken out in summer, if wanted to bloom in pots next winter, should be kept in the pots; if turned out in the open ground, they can not be satisfactorily potted again. It is much better to start with new plants from cuttings. Such plants may often be plunged in the border, in the pots, with good results. Pots that are set out should stand on a layer of coal ashes to keep out worms. Such plants should be set in partial shade, but never under the drip of trees. Roots of dahlias and cannas and the bulbs of tuberoses and gladioli, if laid in boxes of soil, exposed to the sun during the day, and taken in at night may be appreciably forwarded and ready to plant out.—Am. Agri.

BURNS.—If slightly burned or scalded, moisten immediately the affected spot, and apply baking soda, which will at once draw out the inflammation. If the burn be of a serious character cover the place with soft cotton dipped in sweet oil (olive oil). Should you not have any at hand, cover the burn with molasses or syrup, and keep constantly covered.

ECONOMICAL SOUP.—Two quarts of water, a little parsley and half an onion very fine chopped, a small carrot grated, and salt to taste. After boiling gently for fifteen minutes, stir in gradually a cupful of farina which has been mixed smooth in cold water, and boil five minutes, stirring constantly to prevent lumps. Just before serving add a little butter.

DIPHTHERIA AND DISINFECTION.—It is said that an excellent disinfectant for diphtheria, scarlet fever, small-pox, and all diseases of a kindred character that affect the throat is made by sprinkling brown sugar and vinegar over live coals in a furnace or shovel, and allowing them to burn, filling the patient's room with a dense smoke, daily. It will generally prevent a fatal termination of the diseases, and never fails to give relief.

WOUNDS.—If any accident causes an incision, from which the blood flows freely, bind a handkerchief or band of linen tightly round the limb above the cut. This must be done at once without stopping to examine the wound; then tie something over the cut and get as many cobwebs as you can (the cellar is generally a good place for them), press them together so as to form a kind of plaster, untie the cloth that is on the cut, place the webs on it and tie up again. Do not remove the upper bandage until the doctor comes or the bleeding has entirely ceased for some time. If left tightly tied too long, it will cause the limb to swell.

The patient should assume a horizontal position and the leg or arm be raised on pillows.

A little presence of mind will often save a life by these simple means.

The Christian's Secret

OF A Happy Life. 28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation. "We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement. "The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise. "We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells them in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval. "We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to end."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment. "It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting interest. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

FIFTYEARS AND BEYOND;

OR, Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATEROPO.

Introduction by REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and hopes as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

Price, postpaid, cloth bound, $1.00. Paper bound, 75 cents.

Address, W. I. PHILLIPS, 321 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ills.

REVISED ODD-FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, and answers to all questions from standard authorities, showing the character and trachline of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President of the order. The ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover $1.00; per dozen $8.00.

IN THE COILS;

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Emerald, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most interesting character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fanatic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject, and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' It is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, true and useful. Our youth need not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

FARM NOTES.

A GOOD GARDEN.

If one would have a good garden it must be free from foul seeds. I think nine out of ten of the gardens among farmers are allowed to mature a crop of weeds the latter part of the season, and usually this is the result of carelessness. After June, or when such early crops as peas, lettuce and radishes have matured, no further use is made of the land, and as it has usually been manured in the spring, it grows a luscious crop of weeds, and fills the soil so full of seeds as to quadruple the work of cultivation of such plants as come up delicately, and which must be kept clean by hand. The evil of ripening a crop of weed seed is not short-lived, for the seeds will remain in the soil for many years and germinate when the spring opens. I have a one fourth acre garden that I have not allowed a weed to go to seed on for twenty years, but it took five years of clean culture before I could see much improvement in it, and it was ten years before the old seed in the soil ceased to give trouble. As an aid to keeping the garden free from weeds plant everything in rows running the length of it, and put together those varieties which will ripen about the same time. For example, one of the narrow lands or beds I speak of can be planted in early peas, lettuce, spinach and radishes, and these will all be past use in June, when the ground can be worked by horse power till mellow. Then follow with some later crops as cucumbers or sweet corn. Another bed can be planted in potatoes, and the middle of June, Hubbard, or some other variety of good winter squashes planted, and a full crop grown. In my latitude, forty miles north of Cincinnati, the Hubbard squash matures if planted the last week in June. If nothing else is wanted plant sweet corn to grow fodder for the cows, even as late as the last of August, for you will be more likely to keep the land clean and you will get some benefit from the crop.

One more point. Make all rows straight, not only because the garden looks better for it, but much hand weeding is saved by it, especially when carrots, parsnips, onions, etc., are raised. —Vick's Magazine.

LIGHTNESS OF TOOLS.

In the selection of tools and machines, lightness is too often overlooked. A proper design, strength, and good material are essential; but to the proper working of the tool lightness is equally important. An over weighty implement is a clumsy one; hence it makes work slower and more laborious. Economy of energy in the execution of work must be aimed at, and it cannot be attained with uselessly heavy tools. Manufacturers find iron cheaper than wood; hence iron is often used when wood would answer the purpose as well and be lighter. It would be better to pay a little more for the implement if necessary and get wood in place of iron. Some thoughtlessly prefer iron to wood because it occupies less space, and its use makes a neater looking implement. Unfortunately they please their eyes at the expense of their teams or the amount of work done. Iron and steel have their proper places, and for various parts in many implements are better than wood; but wood also has its proper places, where it is better than iron or steel, and should be put in those places. —Am. Agri.

FOR FENCE POSTS.

A writer in an exchange says: "I discovered many years ago that wood could be made to last longer than iron in the ground, but thought the process so simple that it was not well to make a stir about it. I would as soon have poplar, basswood or ash as any other kind of timber for fence posts. I have taken out basswood posts after having been set several years that was as sound when taken out as when first put in the ground. Time and weather seemed to have no effect on them. The posts can be prepared for less than two cents apiece. This is the recipe. Take boiled linseed oil and stir in pulverized coal to the consistency of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber, and there is not a man that will live to see it rot." —Scientific American.

M. Hozeau maintains that not only does each group of animals possess a language which is understood by other members of the same group, but that they can learn to understand the language of other groups. His dogs, for instance, perfectly understood his poultry. Cocks and hens have one danger signal for the approach of a bird of prey, another for that of terrestrial animal or for a man. When the latter was sounded the dogs would rush out and bark, while to the former they paid no attention whatever. He therefore concludes that fowls have the power of expressing slightly different but closely allied ideas and dogs can learn to understand these differences. —Scientist.

A complete Catalogue sent free on Application.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition. The character is given in a clear, strong and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is fully attested by J. O. Doebner, Past Master Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—representative of the various degrees, rooms, chapter and principal ceremonies of the lodge, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1839. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The author, a minister and lecturer who finds in this work a rich fund of arguments. 307 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their aims, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 3 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," all bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James W. Lusk, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North western Union Conference, N. E. Church—a second law Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 40 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. By E. C. Cook. This is a complete and accurate ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. James W. Lusk. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Mah-Hab-Bone comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Observatory, all in a Glass Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbols of Freemasonry. 50 cents each; bound in cloth, 50 pp., $1.00.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry as a Link Between the Living and the Dead. This is the church ritual of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reform Freemason and their very able defense presented by Mrs. J. C. Cook, in which the clergy show that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. 33 Degrees, 304 pages. 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.00.

In the Collie, or the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the religious condition of the clergy, the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are all based upon the principles of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. B. Lusk. "This work is appended to a revelation of the mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. Part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 410 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eusebian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Denial to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The Uses of an Illusion, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Signa of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 28, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high officials of the army and navy, and a member of the cabinet, have all been opposed to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil life and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest ecclesiastical authorities. 10 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Basil Workship Illustrated. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 430 pp., 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness. adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. J. H. Brown. A complete exposure of a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Freemasonry Self-Convicted. By Rev. J. H. Brown. This is a complete exposure of the reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church in particular. Paper covers: price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the six degrees and Temple Free Masonry by Thomas Love; comprising the degree of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and a full and complete exposure of the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue between the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Knights Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Knights Templar, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of the Temple. A book of 341 pages, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.50. Paper covers, 60 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscence of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel I. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees or Masonic bondages, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Morgan's abduction and murder. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Secret Societies. A dissemination of their character and claims. By Rev. David McMill. Pres. J. H. Brown. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Temple. This is the first book that interferes with the execution and perfect administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, aims, objects, what it does and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought, the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and by-laws of the Association. 25c. each; per doz. $1.50.

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. A complete exposition of "Temple of Honor Illustrated," "Adoptive Masonry Illustrated," "United Sons of Industry Illustrated," and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshiping Freemasons in the Christian Church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, and College Secret Societies. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in this title, bound together in cloth. $1.00 each; per dozen, $10.00.

ON ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This work corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brown. This is an exceedingly interesting and accurate exposure of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, only 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00. The German edition is published by the author.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies. By Rev. J. H. Brown. A most convincing argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disaffiliating Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their own confessed character as given in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Temple of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the origin, history and character of the degrees of Love, Parity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Pres. Charles C. Finney. This is a complete exposure of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, counter signs, grips, etc. shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to cast out the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other reason than the revelation of Masonry. It contains a sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respected persons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the GRAND LODGE OF ILLINOIS. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered John S. Smith. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly refused the charges against him and afterwards denounced the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

A Masonic Conspiracy. Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 90 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disaffiliating secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder J. W. Wilson, of Royal Arch Masonry. This discussion was published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Grand Lodge, 1886. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Holden With Cords. On the Power of the Secret Empire. A faithful narrative of the story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by R. E. Flaxo, Author of "Little People." A "Sunny Side" of this horrible story, showing how carefully true to life because, mainly a narration of historical facts. In cloth $1.00; paper 50 cents. In

OBITUARY.....	7

The Pope has the Knight of Labor order on his hook, but is too wary to pull the fish out of the agreeable waters of American independency and liberality at once. So he plays with him awhile before landing him on the dry bank of priestly despotism. Last week Powderly and his order were to be received bodily to the papal embrace. Now comes the word in a dispatch to Archbishop Corrigan of New York: "No decision has been given in the case of the Knights of Labor." And, moreover, it is reported that Cardinal Gibbons, the Knight of Labor champion, is returning home sick.

Of Mr. DePauw, the wealthy manufacturer and philanthropist of Indiana, who died suddenly last week in this city, it is said, that he was both Mason and Odd-fellow, but— That is a good word to place after the name of lodge membership—but, "he never neglected the cause of religion but valued it above all others;" but, "the part of his life most satisfactory to him was that passed in his work of religion in the church, in the Sunday-school, in the prayer-meeting, as well as in the every-day walks of life." The lodges, moreover, are said to have highly respected him. We are confident that the sentiment was all on their side and was not at all reciprocated. Let us by all means have the word "but" written every time after the names Mason, Odd-fellow, etc.

There is no more conspicuous sight about San Francisco and its famous bay than the palaces of the railway and mining kings on "Nob" hill. One of these is the home of Charles Crocker; and from that home a daughter was married the other day, carrying away a million-dollar check as a present from her father which was a fiftieth part of his fortune. We call attention to this wedding not for the money in it, but for the fact that the bride, reared in circles of wealth and pride, had sense and grace enough to thoroughly master the details of domestic economy down to making a good loaf of bread and roasting a cut of beef. That young woman is doubtless worth a million to husband as well as father, for she is one of a million. It is a shame to America that so many of her daughters are not worth fifty cents to either father or husband when it comes to practical matters.

Andrew Paxton of Chicago, the father of the Citizen's League movement for the enforcement of law against saloons, reported the other day that he had great hope that the new administration would make Chicago a model city. By an order to the police a black list of 270 disreputable saloons had been made out and forty of the number had been refused license. In a column of the daily paper next to this hopeful report, an article begins, "Day by day saloon-keepers who were down on the black list are getting their licenses." Some of the worst places on the West Side are given their papers on promise to do better, or by use of political influence, or by personal influence with the police, who for years have scandalized decent people by their intimacy with vile women. Even Mr. Paxton had to convince one of the precinct captains by taking him to neighboring saloons and showing him in one four boys, and in another eighteen, the policeman's own son being among the number. These facts indicate how great a task Mayor Roche has before him in cleaning out these Augean stables of the Harrison regime. But we pray that his strength and courage fail not until this work be done.

While Chicago is casting out these dives, New Orleans is making the lives of her gamblers a burden, and it is said that for some weeks their dens have been entirely closed up. This is the first attempt in that city, and there seems to have been no difficulty as soon as the law was resolutely enforced. Open saloons on the Sabbath day are also a thing of the past in New Orleans. In New York Mayor Hewitt is vindicating the judgment of the voters who preferred him to Henry George or Theodore Roosevelt, by rigidly enforcing the excise laws against Sunday liquor-selling. Even the fashionable hotel bars have been closed, and last Sabbath was the third week this had been done, and yet the mayor lives and Manhattan island has not sunk from sight in the bay. It is a pleasure to announce that prohibition begins to prohibit, and it can be proved that it is as good for saloons as for gamblers, and for seven days as for one.

Mr. Moody spoke in the church familiarly called by his own name, on Chicago Avenue, Sabbath morning and evening. These are understood to be the last meetings he will address in Chicago for the present. After almost continuous speaking twice a day for six days in the week since January 1st he now feels the need of rest. During these four months and a half Mr. Moody has been leading one of the most remarkable efforts ever begun for the evangelization of a large city. He is as great a general as preacher and has marshaled his lieutenants with marvelous ability. He saw immediately that the saloon power must be met, and, in spite of opposition which would have blocked the purpose of an ordinary man, he brought Francis Murphy into Farwell Hall to keep up the battle at the center while himself led the attack against the devil in every quarter of the city. He early brought Mr. Bliss to the field also, who is to remain all summer. Later, to secure the best instruction in fundamental doctrines, Dr. Brookes was brought up from St. Louis for a week. Then Major Whittle was called in from Pennsylvania and will remain here for a time. Mr. Moody never undervalues the inspiring influence of good singing and his work has been aided greatly by such singers as Sankey, Excell, Townner, Charles Herald, Nickel, Burke and others. Among the evidences of permanent work are the establishment of a Y. M. C. A. on the West Side; the organization of a Gospel Temperance League to keep up the Murphy work, and not allow it to be gobbled by the Good Templar lodges as when Murphy was here several years ago; twenty thousand names to the temperance pledge, and the addition of thousands probably to the church rolls. But probably the result at which Mr. Moody looks most carefully is the establishment of the City Evangelization Society and missionary training school. He told the Presbyterian ministers last week that on a lot at the corner of Ohio and St. Clair streets on the North Side he proposes to erect a training school for women city missionaries. The young men will be provided for elsewhere. Mr. Moody has $250,000 subscribed for the purpose, $50,000 of which will go into the building and $200,000 will be invested as endowment. The school will accommodate at least 100 girls, and Miss Dryer, so long and favorably known in the Bible Work of Chicago, will be at its head.

THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

The impression is abroad that Thomas Jefferson assumed, when he wrote the Declaration of Independence, that "the powers that be are ordained of God," and that this idea underlies our governmental structure. But the facts of history set this matter in a different light. It has been proved that Thomas Jefferson assumed too much in claiming the authorship of the Declaration of Independence. In May, 1775, a convention of Covenanters, in Mecklenburg county, North Carolina, drew up a Declaration of Independence, "dissolving the political bands which had connected them with the mother country; absolving themselves from all allegiance to the British Crown; declaring themselves a free and independent people; and, in support of their declaration, pledging to each other their mutual co-operation, 'their lives, their fortunes and their most sacred honor.'" Whatever is uncertain, this is unquestionable, that the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians of Mecklenburg, more than a year before Congress, and in advance of the rest of the country, published a Declaration of Independence. Mr. Bancroft is more than justified in his assertion, that the first voice publicly raised in America to dissolve all connection with Great Britain came not from the Puritans of New England, nor the Dutch of New York, nor the planters of Virginia, but from the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians. There is undoubted evidence that Thomas Jefferson had this declaration before him when he wrote the first draft of the Declaration of Independence, and copied largely from it.

From the autobiography of Thomas Jefferson we gather these facts. On Friday, June 7, 1776, the Virginia delegates in Congress proposed the Declaration of Independence. Saturday and Monday, June 8th and 10th, were spent in debating on the subject. Many of the delegates argued against it. The colonies of Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York were not then prepared to sever their connection with the British Government. It was decided to postpone the vote on the question till July 1st. To avoid delay a committee was appointed, consisting of John Adams, Dr. Franklin, Roger Sherman, Robert Livingston and Thomas Jefferson, to prepare a Declaration of Independence. The committee requested Thomas Jefferson to write it. He did so, and read it before Congress on Friday, June 28th. Monday, July 1st, it was taken up and debated in Congress till July 4th when it was adopted. These facts are stated by Mr. Jefferson in his own memoirs. A fac-simile of the original manuscript in his own handwriting has been widely published.

It has been stated that four times in this Declaration Jefferson recognizes the God of the Bible. There are, it is true, four references to the Creator, but only one of these was inserted by Jefferson in his original manuscript. The other three were inserted afterward by the other members of the committee and by Congress. The first only was inserted by Jefferson. It was a reference to "the laws of nature's God," and the word God was begun with a small letter. It has been said of Jefferson that he wrote the name of his Creator with a small letter, while he began his own name with a capital. It is not likely that he assumed that the powers that be are ordained of God. It is more probable, as infidels have said, that he was a deist. He had no comprehension of the nation's relation to Christ, its king. He scorned the idea of the Bible being revelation from God. He professed to respect Jesus Christ as a respectable philosopher, but by no means his own equal in philosophic acuteness. In his own biographical works, Vol. IV, page 321, speaking of Jesus, he says, "It is not to be understood that I am with him in all his doctrines. I am a materialist, he takes the side of spiritualism. He preaches the efficacy of repentance toward the forgiveness of sins. I require a counterpoise of good works." Farther on in the same letter he says, "Among the sayings and discourses imputed to him by his biographers, I find many passages of fine imagination, correct morality and of most lovely benevolence, and others again of so much ignorance, so much absurdity, so much untruth, charlatanism and imposture, as to pronounce it impossible that such contradictions should have proceeded from the same being. I separate therefore the gold from the dross, restore to him the former and leave the latter to the stupidity of some and the vagary of others of his disciples. Of this band of dupes and imposters, Paul was the great leader and first corrupter of the doctrines of Jesus." In another letter to his friend, Dr. Cooper, he says, Vol. IV, page 358, "In our town of Richmond there is much fanaticism, but chiefly among the women. They have their night meetings and prayer parties, where, attended by their priests and sometimes by a hen-pecked husband, they pour forth the effusions of their love to Jesus in terms as amatory and carnal as their modesty would permit them to use to a mere earthly lover." This indicates the spirit of the man whose influence had much to do in the formation of our Government, and was President for two terms; who was the admired American statesman and the professed Father of Democracy. He not only scouted and repudiated the idea of God in government but despised the Son of God and the King of nations.

MORAL HEROES.—I.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

There is this moment filing before me a long line of men and women, more renowned, of richer blood, nobler deeds and more exalted virtues than kings or potentates, than lords or nobles. Men who have made their mark and proven their virtues by deeds of disinterested benevolence and self-denial and self-sacrifice, which have lifted them above the bulk of fallen humanity as high as the heavens are above the earth.

Having performed a glorious mission, most of these now "rest from their labors and their works do follow them." A few still remain with us like the grapes on the distant branches after the gathering of the vintage. And, though dead, they yet speak, and in equity demand that, for the divine honor and for the good of posterity, their lives and deeds should have a place in history. Since "the morning stars sang together" was there ever a land or an age that bore a richer harvest of noble souls than this land and the century now hastening to its close? Was there ever a more hopeless mission than that for the overthrow of American slavery? The slave power was in full possession of every department of governmental administration. The great mass of the nation were indifferent to the existence of slavery. Even the ministry, the churches and the religion of the land were subsidized to the perpetuity of this sum of all villainies. Everything that rendered the citadel of wrong impregnable was at its disposal. The slave-holders' weapons of war were burnished and sharpened. The horrid law of the ancient heathen Japanese empire was in full force. If an enemy of slavery were found on the Southern soil he should die. The appetite of slavery was whetted for the slaughter. His teeth were sharp to devour. He had had a taste of blood once, twice, thrice! He was voracious for more. A high price was offered for the heads of his foes.

These enemies of liberty deemed themselves proof against all assault. The odds were apparently never more with the wrong. Considering numbers and means what a tremendous war was that that brought out, developed and tried the Abolitionists of this country. Here was a field for faith in an Unseen One. Here was an occasion for the discovery of moral heroes. It is of these I write, of the leaders, the martyrs, the confessors and of the rank and file. At the head of this roll call there are good reasons for placing the name of

BENJAMIN LUNDY.

Preceding him were volunteers against the nation's crime, but by a direct effort for its abolition he was the first. Beginning his labors in 1818 by publishing the Philanthropist in Ohio he organized a Union Humane Society of five hundred members. In 1824 he started the Genius of Universal Emancipation in Baltimore, for the support of which he invested his entire property. Here he was assaulted and nearly killed by a slave dealer named Woolfolk. In the interest of his work he visited nineteen States, traveling five thousand miles on foot, delivering lectures in favor of emancipation. In 1838 he located and started the Genius on the banks of the Vermillion river in Illinois. But his mission was drawing to a close, and soon after his eventful life was ended. Oh, many was the time I cast my wistful eyes up to the windows where he labored and died, as I passed them on the rounds of my Anti-masonic circuit, if perchance I might see his blessed Quaker face. Benjamin Lundy was indeed a pioneer hero of dauntless courage, unsurpassed in self-denial and sacrifice. He had seen the bondman in his chains and gave his life for his freedom. Will not some reader of this in LaSalle county, Illinois, procure and send to the Cynosure his likeness.

was an early associate of Friend Lundy in editing his paper and sharing his persecutions. It may have been from him that he learned to dip his pen in flames and to hurl thunderbolts at the guilty heads of slaveholders. For his denunciation of a New England captain who participated in the domestic slave trade he was fined and incarcerated in a Baltimore prison, from whence he was bailed by one who admired his heroism but who in after years differed widely from his views and measures. How far Mr. Garrison will be held responsible for allowing his conventions to become the theatre for attacks upon the Bible and the Christ of the Bible it may not be safe to say. The assaults upon the ministry and the churches were justified by the appalling facts, but the shameful caricature and false statements concerning Christ and the Christian religion were of quite a different character and were painful and often horrible to hear, and gave his enemies ample occasion for saying "the Garrisonians were infidels."

To this day I hold Mr. Garrison in very high esteem as a truly great man. And but for the things I was sure to hear and did hear in their conventions, and against which I protested, I would utter only unqualified praise. I attended the conventions in despite of the protest of my friends, because they were fighting slavery; herein only was I in sympathy with these conventions. For his zeal and courage and persistent exposition of the abominations of the slave system in despite of opposition well nigh unparalleled Mr. Garrison had few equals and no superiors.

ARTHUR TAPPAN,

for whose head the slave-holders offered larger rewards than for any other in the anti-slavery ranks, was the man who bailed Mr. Garrison out of the Baltimore prison and in the beginning was largely the financial supporter of the work. In his labors for the slave he was a little in advance of his brother Lewis. But in the end the younger outran the elder. The zeal and labors of both closed only with their lives. I think their establishment (the largest wholesale silk house in the United States) had the honor of being the first boycotted in the nation or world. No firm was so widely known North and South as theirs. For a season none was so thoroughly let alone. But God, who says to the waves of the sea, "Thus far and no farther," wrought out for them a complete deliverance. First, they escaped being involved in the loss of the millions by the non-payment of the slave-holding patrons of the South. Second, in the hundreds of millions lost in the great fire on Wall street and vicinity the loss of the Tappans was but a slight remove from nothing. When the colored men learned that the goods of their friends were in danger, they rushed with one accord through smoke and fire and flame and brought forth the entire stock and carried it to a place of security, while scores of other merchants looked helplessly on to see their own goods devoured by the flames. Upon every department of the anti-slavery cause they poured out their money like water. They were great-souled Christian heroes.

REV. JOSHUA R. LEAVITT

was early in the anti-slavery war and in close sympathy and labor with the Tappans. Through the columns of the New York Evangelist he poured such searching exposures and denunciations of the slave power that so roused the wrath of the pro-slavery North that for months he was wont to receive hundreds of requests to "Stop my paper." But God who cared for the Tappans cared also for the faithful Leavitt. The publication of Mr. Finney's revival lectures brought to him daily "arm-fulls" of new subscribers. Mr. Leavitt's executive skill in a convention was without an equal. At the meeting in Petersburg, after the mob had driven us out of Utica with garments torn and dyed with blood, he seemed almost ubiquitous. His commanding form would be seen, now this side, now that side, and sometimes in the pulpit, making suggestions to this man or giving advice to that one or a proposition to another or protesting to another. He was by universal consent regarded as the ruling spirit of the meeting.

During the long weeks of the eventful trial of John Quincy Adams in Congress for presenting a petition from a number of slaves, Mr. Leavitt was almost constantly by his side storing the mind of Mr. Adams from his inexhaustible fountain of facts and arguments, which "the old man eloquent" hurled at the heads of slave-holders. These tremendous speeches hurling defiance at the slave minions, and that filled them with wonder and dismay, were as often Mr. Leavitt speaking through the burning lips of Mr. Adams as they were the inspiration of Mr. Adams's own great soul. There were few men in the early struggle that wrought more successfully and heroically than Joshua R. Leavitt.

JESUS, THE MESSIAH.

BY REV. H. A. DAY.

In all ages of the world there has been too little appreciation of the name of Jesus. Even among those called Christians the name above every name has been allowed to fall far below its proper exaltation. Perhaps in no period of the world's history has this been more true than now. How little care is taken to see that no organization which lightly esteems the name of Jesus is allowed to trespass upon the hallowed ground of the church. The hydra-headed anti-Christ of to-day should not have the power they everywhere exhibit. Their very touch is death. In every church in this fair land, where secret societies are tolerated and protected, especially Masonry, there is no success. There has not been for years. There never will be until there is a change.

"But," says one, "are there not revivals in these churches?" Do they not seem to teach the plan of salvation? True, but what does it all amount to? Where is the old-time conviction for sin, and where the old-time power in Christianity? Read carefully Ezekiel, eighth chapter. Does not God declare that he has withdrawn far off from his sanctuary because of these abominable, secret-chamber, night worshipers? Added to the abominations of that day, we have a positive, premeditated, pre-arranged rejection of the name and merit of the world's only Saviour, and a presumptuous coming to God without him! God has withdrawn from his earthly sanctuaries. There are lofty churches all over the land where weekly the routine of popular service is practiced in which the living power of redeeming grace and love has not been manifested for years! Hundreds of them! What a thought! And yet the man is a rider of hobbies, a radical, a fanatic, who would publicly intimate that God is not pleased with and will not bless that church which will be a party to the rejection of the name of his dear Son. To my mind the most dangerous thing we could possibly do is being done in this country, viz: the maintenance of a false worship which not only equals the false worship of bygone days, but exceeds them in the rejection of the world's Messiah.

Steinbrenner in his Masonic Jurisprudence says: "We cannot admit the name of your so-called Messiah to appear in any of our Scriptural quotations, ceremonies, or prayers," and yet this hideous anti-christ holds the front pew in so-called Christian churches, yea, occupies the pulpit without let or hindrance, and the man or the body of men who utter one word of protest are, by this "handmaid of religion," advertised as "cranks," "hobbyists," etc. The writer has been charged with hobbyism, when, in one whole year of preaching the subject was alluded to not more than a half dozen times. More's the pity. Some of our strongest men seem fearful to attack this last form of anti-christ from the pulpit.

In the name of God, I ask, what are ministers called to do? I answer: To preach Christ and him crucified. To preach through Jesus the remission of sins. To preach the cross, the atonement, the name above every name, that "at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue confess." How, then, can all this be done, and not preach against anti-christian organizations? It cannot. The man called of God to preach in these days must make preparation to call attention to the great danger that is threatening the overthrow of every thing good.

There never was a greater struggle than that in which we are now engaged. It is a spiritual Armageddon. Every true man to his post! Let the fearful go look after home affairs. Let those who can take time in this trying hour to get down and lap like dogs, stand aside. Gideon's band is determined. They never were more so. They will prevail. Glory to God! I am ashamed of those who will not consider this all-important matter. Even holiness teachers seem to fear to touch it only lightly. A ruffe on a woman's dress may be a ruinous thing, involving the loss of a soul, perhaps more, but the rejection of the name and merit of Jesus, the world's redeemer, involves the ruin of the world at one stroke! Think of it, Free Methodists. Think of it, Wesleysans, United Brethren, Christians all, and let us march together, singing as we go:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown him Lord of all."

AS GOOD AS THE CHURCH.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Not long ago, in a rural place in Pennsylvania, a donation was given in behalf of a Masonic minister, said to be a Baptist. He seems to have learned the art of "going from labor to refreshment" better than getting back. It is said on reliable authority that he is subject to "bad spells," so failing in the pulpit, and even on funeral occasions, being to poorly to proceed with propriety. The charity of society could not be so stretched as to cover his faults. Masonic charity could by a little extension cover the multitude of bad turns.

Well, as we were saying, this brother Mason had a donation, as an ambassador of Christ—and of the "hand-maid" too, of course. The gathering on the occasion was respectable, which was at the house of a Masonic Baptist, who is somewhat active in both lodge and church—always loyal to the former. At this "house of Rimmon" there came together a moral conglomeration of all sorts (all good of course) with a mixture of the anti-lodge element.

By a law stronger than gravitation, a few of the craftsmen found a corner where they could dilate on the beauties of the "mystic tie." There were four in this select group, the minister, the host, and two others, all sons of the craft. The conversation turned on the comparative merits of the lodge and the church. One of the company was an avowed infidel. The host affirms that Masonry lived up to, is as good as the church; the infidel sanctions the sentiment with great delight; the preacher and the other saint (?) bow assent, and hence the unanimous verdict. The conversation runs somewhat thus: "There is old Dr. — of —," "the old Anti-mason," and "old Eld. —," etc., etc. In the course of this conversation an "anti," had stepped into the room, unobserved at first, so hearing what is here related, in substance; when, looking around and seeing the cowl, the talk stopped abruptly with evident embarrassment.

Look at this! A Christian(?) minister and two prominent Christians (?) representing the Baptists and the Methodists, joined with an infidel (are they not all infidels) to concede or to claim that a human institution (claimed to be divine) is as good or better than the church! If there is doubt about Masonry being purely human, it is that it is below the worst features of fallen humanity, known anywhere else outside of the lodge system.

Where does this Masonic assumption lead to? It says to God the Father, The sacrifice of thy Son was not needed by the world; to the Anointed One, Thy love, thy sacrifice, thy blood, thy death and resurrection are all superfluous, uncalled for; to the Holy Spirit, This agency, in reproving, enlightening, leading, regenerating, sanctifying and comforting, are all a solemn mockery and a farce. On the presumption that the human device, lodgery, as held by tens of thousands to-day, is "a good enough religion if lived up to," the whole grand scheme of the Gospel falls under universal condemnation, the most stupendous system of imposture, the grandest of all humbugs in our world. These men have found "another gospel which is not another." Shame on such mongrel saints. God can do without them whether Satan can or not.

In no two things known among men, are Christ and anti-Christ so sharply defined as between the Gospel and Masonry. Not one single distinctive feature of Masonry can be found in the Gospel—not one distinctive feature of the Gospel in Masonry.

Light and darkness are less obviously distinct than are the Gospel and Masonry. To the eye they seem to blend, but the Gospel stops where lodgery begins. No two things more fully antagonize, either in the natural or in the spiritual realm. This renders these Masonic saints without excuse. But it is objected, that the lodge takes the Bible in, takes Christ in, etc. God knows it takes in neither. It "takes in" many weak church members, possibly Christians, by seeming to endorse the Bible and in advanced degrees Christ himself. All well-posted Masons know that Masonry rejects both. We can demonstrate this assertion. We shall not do it here and now, but hold ourselves ready to do it. The Bible, then extant, was used daily by the scribes and Pharisees, but to no good end. They used that blessed book to condemn the "Prince of Life" and the "Lord of Glory." They used Jesus, too, to carry his own cross, to wear the kingly robe and the crown of thorns, in the judgment hall, on the cross; tried to hold him in the tomb and in Hades. For the same reasons, substantially, does the lodge use the Bible, and Jesus, to defeat and to destroy them. There is no good in this, but stupendous hypocrisy. All the Christianity to be found in Masonry is found in that one word.

MASONIC LITERATURE.

One boast of Masonry is its connection with and teaching of all the various arts and sciences. A specimen of its poetry lately fell in our way, which will show our readers its claims to originality if not perfection in that line of thought. It may not be amiss if as Anti-masons we obeyed the advice in the last stanzas.

MASONIC EMBLEMS.

The Lambskin reminds us to lead a pure life,
The Gauge to divide well our time,
The Gavel divests us of envy and strife,
And prepares us for joys more sublime.

The Plumb to walk upright before God and man,
The Square is morality's guide,
The Level directs us through life's fleeting span,
To the Land over Death's darkling tide.

The Compass doth circumscribe all vain desires,
Restraining each passion in bond,
The Trowel spreads kindness—affection inspires,
Whenever a sufferer is found.

These, these were our emblems in days now grown old,
All others are Shadow and Show,
Whether Emerald, or Agate, or Topaz or Gold,
The Amethyst, or Cameo.

Then Brothers don't wear them—if you're good and true,
You need not a label of gold,
If you think they're all Masons who keep them in view,
You'll find yourself wretchedly sold.

These little gold trinkets—they never can show,
That you've been in the Freemasons' Hall,
The thousands who wear them, as doubtless you know,
Were never true Masons at all.

I've seen Ragamuffins, with ferrety eyes,
On whose cheek bloomed the rum-bud so fair,
And with veins on their noses gigantic in size,
Who wore a gold compass and square.

Mark how inconsistent to thus advertise!
Your possession of secrets most rare,
To challenge the gaze of inquisitive eyes,
With a little gold compass and square.

Then Brothers don't wear them—your emblems should be
Most deeply engraved on the heart,
Truth, Temperance and Virtue—a live Charity,
Those emblems of our Ancient Art.

AN A. M. A. MISSIONARY ON THE COLORED LODGES.

[From the American Missionary Magazine]

The colored people are crazily fond of organization. Women and men alike are caught in the whirl. Offices with high-sounding names, processions, regalia and show, have a wonderful charm before which go down their better judgment. The evils of the lodge our missionaries meet on every hand. In the home and in the church this insidious foe to piety and thrift is encountered. The love of organization may be utilized and turned to good account. Our teachers endeavor to impress upon their pupils the value of co-operation in doing good. The outcome of such instruction appears in one of our schools where the girls, of their own accord and without aid from their teachers, organized themselves into the Helping Hand Society, in which the members pledge, (1) not to tell lies, (2) not to steal, (3) not to be selfish, (4) not to quarrel, (5) not to talk about the boys when together, and (6) to try and help every one they can.

On the other hand, the vice of "Secret Orders" may be seen in the following, written by one of our teachers:

A colored man with the title of elder, recently visited this place and organized a secret society called the Universal Brotherhood. He had left one church with stains upon his moral character, but, as is too often the case, another fold had an open door for sheep, goat or wolf, and, as he could operate better inside a church than out, he went in. The initiation fee to the society is one dollar, and the monthly dues are twenty cents. Small as this amount is, it is much to those who have families to provide for upon very small wages. If all the promises made by the organizer could be believed, membership in the society of Universal Brotherhood would be better than forty acres and a mule. All who are sick are to receive aid. When a member dies, his family will receive a thousand dollars. If any of the family dies before the member insured does, twenty-five dollars will be furnished for funeral expenses. Heavy fines are imposed for absence from meetings, which are held weekly. The name might lead one to suppose that this lodge is for men only, but it is composed of men and women. They have oaths and pass-words and secrecy, but one who is too wise to join such an organization says the great secret which they will never find out is where the money goes.

The idea of some one to help in time of sickness, and of property left to one's children, is enough to draw the final dime from a colored person's pocket, and stimulates parents who are not able to patronize a school to invest in a lodge. A colored woman, who does well to send one of her six children to school said to me last week, "I am just as much opposed to the lodge as I can be. A good many women have to work hard to support their families, for it takes all their husbands can make to keep up the lodges. They pay four dollars a month for the rent of a hall to meet in, and they can't pay the rent for a shelter for their families, so their wives have to attend to that." The poor woman had the eloquence of truth and earnestness. She had had enough experience to know what she was talking about.

They have the lodges, chapters, commanderies and consistories of the Masonic order for colored men as well as for white. In Oddfellowship there are lodges for the men, and the Household of Ruth lodges for the women. There are the Knights of the Wise Men and the Sons and Daughters of Relief. The following are some of the lodges for men and women: Diamond Square, Boulah Temple, Blazing Star Temple, Daughters of Shiloh, Sisters of Charity, Sons and Daughters of Ham, and Willing Workers. There are Queen Esther's Courts, and the United Sons and Daughters of Abraham, the Good Samaritans, the United Daughters of Zion, the Star Tabernacles, the Daughters of Union, the Tabernacle of Love and Charity, the Sons and Daughters of Moses, the Sons and Daughters of Honor, the Mothers and Daughters of Israel, the Eastern Star, the United Brothers of Friendship, the Sons of the Mysterious Ten, and the Immaculates.

In our little town there are but two surviving secret societies amongst the colored people, but in my opinion there are too many by two. They rob the home, the church, and the school, and are obstacles in the way of all who seek to promote the best interests of the people. Yours for the right and the light,

J. B. N.

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again.
The eternal years of God are ours.
But error wounded, writhes in pain
And dies amid her worshippers."

In the earlier years of this century it was fashionable to laud Freemasonry by pulpit, press and pew. Often were its claims so magnified, as to overshadow and eclipse the obligations and benefits of the Gospel of the Son of God. At length a foul murder darkened its record; its deliberate atrocity was so patent no garment of lies could conceal it. Of its fifty thousand adherents, says Rob Morris, forty-five thousand left it never to return. Why this sudden exodus? Let R. Rush, one of those seceders, reply. "I do believe the evils of Masonry to be stupendous. I must, I do believe, that they counterbalance a thousand fold any good that it can achieve. I think favorably of the exertions which you are making to root it out from the face of our land. I hope that you may continue these with ardor.... You have shown that you are not afraid of Masonry or bound by its spell. Say that you will never cease from your endeavors to break down a power in the country, which has shown itself in the face of millions if they will but look, to be an overmatch for the laws. Keep up an eternal battery against its dangers. 'I like a clamor,' said Burke, 'where there has been outrage.' We have been told that Masonry is too strong to be put down; that such attempts made in European countries have failed. Let this animate you but the more. Already it has been the glory of America to set Europe the example of conquest over public abuses. It may be her further glory to be the first to dispel the solemn folly and break the tyrannical fetters of Masonry."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

PASTORS' MEETING IN BURLINGTON.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, May 2, 1887.

Three services held here yesterday were fairly attended and some good will, I trust, result. I attended the pastors' meeting this morning and was cordially received. Seven pastors were present, Dr. Salter presiding. The chairman had been appointed to select and make the opening speech on some topic of interest. Waiving the order assigned the Doctor suggested that I be allowed time to present my views on the secret lodge system, which suggestion was accepted by common consent.

There was marked attention while I spoke for forty-five minutes mainly of the hindrances to church work and the anti-Christian character of the older orders. The chairman then called upon each brother in order to give his views and the expressions were certainly very frank and exceedingly gratifying to me. I might specify, giving each brother's views, but as this might be construed as unwarranted liberty, I will say that only the G. A. R. was represented and even this order had no zealous advocate and scarce an apologist in the meeting; while every pastor had noted the effect of active lodge membership as detrimental to personal piety and Christian activity. The pastors asked many questions and the interest was so great that the meeting was protracted beyond the usual time. I felt that the opportunity was providentially ordered and that it would result in good. Brethren expressed a purpose to hear me further at the United Presbyterian church this evening and some assured me personally of their hearty sympathy in the movement. To the chairman and also to Bro. Swan I am indebted for an open door and the opportunity to present the subject. May the Lord reward them, and lead all these good brethren to give to their people as frank and full expressions of their views as they gave to each other in this morning meeting.

BATAVIA, Ill., May 3.—A very intelligent audience gathered in Rev. Swan's church at Burlington last evening and listened attentively to my remarks on the secret lodge system. I noticed among the pastors Elder J. G. Johnston, D.D., First Baptist church; Elder H. Williams, Walnut Street Baptist church; Rev. J. C. McClintock, Presbyterian; Rev. O. Hall, Free Methodist; Rev. P. Swan, United Presbyterian, and there may have been others whom I failed to recognize. Rev. J. C. Cullor called on me before leaving the city to assure me of his warm sympathy and express regrets that a previous engagement took him to Moline. I believe the way is open for further work in Burlington, and hope it may be so ordered that I shall again meet the friends there who have already shown me so much kindness.

COLORED PASTORS IN WASHINGTON AND BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 2d, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Our last day at Norfolk was one of interest. One minister who on the Sabbath previous had preached a sermon to the Odd-fellows by their invitation said that he had never belonged to any secret society, that he did not approve of them and thought them fraught with the most pernicious consequences. He heartily welcomed our movement. Another minister said he was a Mason and intended to adhere to it. When his attention was called to the fact that Masonry excluded the name of Christ from its Scripture quotations he said that he had not been aware of it, and confessed there were some things in the order that he had always thought to be wrong. It is refreshing to talk with men, who, though members of the lodge, have lost neither their moral sense nor Christian candor.

Leaving at 4 p. m. we crossed over to Hampton, rounded into the Chesapeake bay and were a long ways over its placid waters before the red sun sank behind the low western shore and the night shut down. When the morning came we were above Mt. Vernon, and but for a stop at Alexandria we would have reached Washington at 6 a. m. An hour later we were at home. Two days in Washington were spent in attendance on the Baltimore Annual Conference which is in session in the African M. E. church in that city. This church, which has but recently been completed, is one of the largest and finest in the city and is said to have cost $100,000. It is still burdened with debt. About 150 ministers were present. Bishop Bowman, a man of pure African descent, presided with great dignity and ability. There were also present Bishops Shorter, Campbell and Ward. There was every shade of complexion in the conference but the prevailing color was decidedly ebony. Probably a large majority are Masons, though Bishop Bowman is not. The bishop asked why so many of the conference were on the east side of the house, and a brother replied that they were "going to the east in search of light."

There are among them many men of fine talent and culture and the business was conducted with system and promptness. I was pleased to see that they had convictions and the courage to maintain them. One brother who applied for membership and came well recommended, and who protested that he did not use intoxicating drink as a beverage, was unanimously rejected because it was believed that he used it as a "medicine" far oftener than was necessary. The examination as to morals was very strict.

Resolutions commendatory of Gen. J. A. Logan were introduced and some able and eloquent speeches were made. A motion to prepare similar resolutions in reference to Henry Ward Beecher like to have failed, until it was explained that it was not proposed to commend anything but his anti-slavery career.

With the approval of Bishop Bowman I circulated in the conference a large number of tracts and copies of the Cynosure and "Masonic Outrages." In conversing with Masons I was treated always with courtesy but not always with candor.

On Saturday, the 30th, I came to this city, and though suffering much from hoarseness and sore throat, I called on several ministers and arranged for future work. Last night I preached in the Union Baptist church, Rev. Harvey Johnson, pastor. As many as 700 or 800 were present and all listened attentively, but my remarks on the lodge made an obvious sensation.

To-day I attended the Baptist minister's meeting and was heartily glad to see that they had so far outgrown the barbarism of caste that the white and colored pastors met on terms of equal Christian fellowship. The world moves. I have much more to say about this great and growing city.

A CARD FROM THE OHIO AGENT.

COLLEGE CORNER, O., May 6, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last report I have spoken twice at Liberty and twice at Georgetown. My time has been occupied largely calling on people at their homes. At this busy season I find I can accomplish as much if not more good by calls than by lectures. It was the desire of United Brethren friends that I speak at Jonesville and Germantown; but as the trustees of the United Brethren churches at both points were "liberals," the doors were closed. These brethren seem to be liberal only on one side. I go this evening to McGonigle's where I expect Bro. Peter Minton to meet me. He will take me tomorrow to Jacksonsborough, where I am announced to speak in the United Brethren church tomorrow evening and Sabbath. I return and speak here Monday evening.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE IOWA WORK.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From the Maple Grove United Brethren church, of which I spoke in my last letter, I went to an M. E. church eight miles distant where I gave one lecture. From there I went to a school-house six miles distant where I was to give two lectures. It rained both nights so as to prevent the meetings, but on Saturday night after the storm was over I lectured, and on Sabbath evening preached to a full house, and gave a second lecture on Monday night. On Tuesday and Wednesday evenings I lectured at another school-house four miles distant where I had preached the Sabbath morning before.

While here I stopped with a Kentucky family. The lady had been a member of Rev. John G. Fee's church. She spoke of the time when Bro. Fee and eighty others were driven out of Kentucky on account of teaching the Gospel in opposition to American slavery. She spoke of the heroic courage of Mrs. Fee as manifested in throwing herself between her husband and his assailants; and on another occasion successfully resisting an effort to drag him from the carriage in which they were riding.

The next night I lectured at a school-house eight miles distant where I had preached in the afternoon of my first Sabbath in Carroll county. From there I went to Glidden, a town on the C. & N.W. railroad, where I was met by Mr. A. J. Loudenback, who is earnestly devoted to the anti-lodge reform. We made arrangements for lectures in Browning's Hall in Glidden on Monday and Tuesday evenings, May 2nd and 3rd.

I then took the cars and went to Scranton in Greene county and called on a brother of John Dorcas of Cedar county. Whether the way will open for me to lecture at this time in Greene county does not yet appear. Bro. Dorcas is superannuated physically and can not do the work of co-operating with me that he gladly would do if his health would permit.

MAY 6TH.—I called upon the pastor of the Christian church of Scranton to confer with him about lecturing in his church. He has a membership of between two and three hundred. I showed him a bill containing a synopsis of two lectures I propose to deliver. He looked at it and seemed astonished that the men who teach Masonry by the authority of the Grand Lodges should have been so presumptuous as to develop a plan of salvation from which Christ is excluded. He looked at my conclusion, that Ancient Craft Masonry is therefore organized infidelity.

"That is so," he said; "if they profess to regenerate man and free them from sin, and thus fit them for heaven, by Masonry, without Christ, it is organized infidelity."

He went with me to call upon the officers of his church to see if they would open the church to my lectures. The first one we met was a hardware merchant. He was not a Mason himself but he said that some of the church officers and members were, and he feared it would cause divisions among them to open the church. But I argued that if what I claimed to be able to prove was actually proven, these brethren who had been beguiled into the lodge, if they were Christians, would immediately renounce Masonry and would be thankful that the lectures were given and the snare of Satan broken. But as this brother could not assume the responsibility of opening the church the pastor and myself went by his direction to another official who is a Mason. He examined the bill I handed him, read and re-read the synopsis of the lectures given, and admitted it would be cause for going back on Masonry if the charges made against it were sustained. And he seemed to feel that it was reasonable that an investigation of the charges should be had.

But at this juncture an old Baptist minister, who last winter changed his views and united with the Christian church of Scranton, came in and looked at the synopsis of my lectures given on the bill and at once became excited. He declared himself a Mason and affirmed that he knew that the points made in my lectures were false. I told him that I had often lectured before Christian men of intelligence and integrity and the uniform verdict had been that every point named in the bill of my lectures had been clearly and incontrovertibly sustained, and I assured him that if the opportunity was given me I would furnish proof that would stop the mouths of gainsayers.

But the dear old man, by his outburst of temper, succeeded at least in convincing the church officers that if Freemasonry was called in question the peace of the church would be disturbed, and so I ceased to press my application.

The pastor was a noble-spirited man, the Masonic official was a fair-minded man, but the aged minister was a regular fire-eater; and, although a new member of the church, by his fiery antagonism he prevailed.

On Sabbath, the first day of May, I preached for the Free Methodist brethren in the country, four miles from Scranton. On Monday I returned to Glidden and lectured in Browning's Hall on Monday and Tuesday nights. I had good congregations and close attention while I unfolded the pagan-infidel character of the religion of Freemasonry and proved from the Bible that a man can not intelligently adhere to Freemasonry and be a Christian. The Lord gave the victory at Glidden, and may he always cause us to triumph.

I would appeal to the men and women of Iowa who are acquainted with the pagan-infidel character of the religious philosophy of the lodge system of which Freemasonry is the head, to unitedly resist this conspiracy of Satan to dethrone Christ our King and supplant Christianity. Be aroused, dear brethren, by the fact that Freemasonry utterly subverts the doctrines of grace and shuts men away from Christ by binding them to sin and with subtle craftiness leads them to worship devils. Truly, Satan is the inspiration of all false worship, just as Christ by the Holy Spirit is the inspiration of the true worship. Masonry teaches regeneration by the observance of pagan ceremonies, and sanctification by the strict observances of obligations that bind to sin, and excludes Christ from her ritual of worship. Let us unitedly come up to the help of God that the churches may be freed from the corrupting power of the lodge.

—Rev. William H. Scudder, the newly chosen pastor of Plymouth church, San Francisco, comes from the First church, Aurora, Ill., where he has been pastor about two years. Previous to this he was assistant pastor of Plymouth church, Chicago, with his uncle, Dr. H. M. Scudder.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

SIN IN THE "BLUE-LAW" CITY.

Whether deserving it or not, I cannot say, but pulpit exhorters, platform orators, political stump speakers, and minstrel end men, almost unanimously hold up Chicago as the criterion of wickedness, declaring that our own "Blue-law" city is rapidly becoming a rival in this respect. Our boards of speculation, however, are encouragingly assured, are not quite so bad as Chicago's piratical Board of Trade. Go into our streets and ask the first urchin you meet which city in the United States is the most wicked, and he will promptly reply, "Chicago."

Though a Bostonian, and proud of our history, proud of my State, and having in my veins, by direct transmission, the blood of the Plymouth Pilgrims, I must frankly confess that I believe Boston is not far behind Chicago, as regards sin. If she is, God pity Chicago. I reckon the only difference between the wickedness of the two cities lies in the quantity, owing to the disparity of size, rather than in quality. In spite of her boasted "culchaw," sin is on the increase in Boston. "Modern Athens," she is called; I am afraid she will have an Athens's fall. Oh, that a Demosthenes might arise and fling his philippic warnings against the menaces of the Macedonia of sin!

Prate about the preservative qualities of education, about the benefit of being born in the shadow of grand old Harvard's walls! There is more moral putrefaction in our cultured circles, and more illiteracy in the shadow of old Harvard's walls, all things considered, than in the shadows of the jungles along the banks of the Congo. Jerusalem is called the Holy City; how much holiness do we find there? About as much as we find culture and morality in Boston. There are, doubtless, holy men and women in Jerusalem to-day. So there are cultured and moral men and women in Boston; they are the exception—the masses are otherwise.

Our most successful newspaper is the most sensational and poorly edited. Other journals which cater at greater expense to refined tastes, are financially left behind. The Boston Globe, which claims an average daily circulation of over 100,000 copies, recently moved into its new building on Washington street, and celebrated the event by a grand housewarming on Sunday, to which the public were invited. Now, think what an influence for evil this sheet must have on the masses by means of its extensive week-day and Sunday circulation. The average circulation of the Daily Globe during March, 1887, was 128,908; that of the Sunday Globe, same month, 115,762, making an aggregate circulation for the entire month of (3,943,564) three millions, nine hundred and forty-three thousand, five hundred and sixty-four copies of a sensational journal sent into that number of households and read, at the least calculation, by nineteen millions, seven hundred and seventeen thousand, eight hundred and twenty persons per month, or two hundred and thirty-six millions, six hundred and thirteen thousand, eight hundred and forty per annum. This journal, instead of advocating the keeping of the Lord's day, rather sets an example of desecration, by publishing on that day accounts of the leading sporting and theatrical news, to say nothing of the sensational. This I consider one of the Macedonian intrigues, which I referred to at the beginning of this article.

On the Monday succeeding the Sunday housewarming a band platform was erected at the front of the old Globe building adjoining the new, where a brass band played for several hours in the evening. That day with every Globe, a coupon, printed on one corner of the title page, was given for a free ride on any horse-car running in or out of the city. The regular car fare is five cents, the price of the paper is two cents, thus every purchaser received the news and a ride for only two cents. Almost everyone, of course, bought a paper. Many were not particular how much of the sheet they tore off with the coupon, to the great annoyance of conductors. By means of this scheme about 300,000 copies were sold, the Globe company paying the railroads about $15,000 for the day. It was a poor day for the other dailies. The Globe was almost the only paper to be obtained from the shouting newsboys in nearly every part of the city. "Globe! Globe! all the news and a ride on any horse-car for two cents." It was a boom for the boys, and they did not fail to appreciate it.

The Globe claims that there are only six dailies in the United States which have a yearly business of over $1,000,000, and that it is one of the six. There are eight newspapers in this city, which have a total average daily circulation of nearly half a million. Could these journals be dedicated, at least in sentiment, to Christ's cause, what a power for good they would be. What a responsibility rests upon them as stewards of what should be one of the most influential instruments for good.

D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, May 5, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Events have filled up the past week here as minutes fill up hours. We are endeavoring to take Cincinnati for Christ's crown. Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Mt. Auburn M. E. church, Rev. Sylvester Weeks, pastor. This is a congregation of 250. It was missionary day in their Sabbath-school. Bro. Weeks is an advanced reformer. He spent three years in Xenia and canvassed Greene county, speaking in every township upon "The Bible." His present charge is an influential one.

In the evening I preached in the Walnut Hills M. E. church, Rev. J. J. Reed, D. D., pastor. He had charge of the St. Paul's church the past three years. His first charge was in New York city. The congregation to which he now ministers is the wealthiest one of that body in this city. Last Sabbath week they raised $2,400 for the million dollar foreign mission collection. Their apportionment was $1,800. They have about 500 members. The audience was large and attentive. Dr. Bayliss, the editor of the Western Christian Advocate, was present and a few Lane Seminary students. Bro. Reed spoke very enthusiastically after the discourse, and called upon all who were favorable to National Reform to come forward after the benediction and shake hands with the brother who has spoken. It seemed to me half the people came around. Dr. Bayliss said he enjoyed listening to that. Dr. Reed insisted that I promise to go back and give them a 4th of July sermon next summer.

Monday forenoon the Cincinnati Presbytery held a called meeting. Rev. Geo. C. Heckman, D. D., of Avondale, resigned his charge to become secretary to the committee of the General Assembly to raise the Centennial fund of $5,000,000. Presbytery expressed deep regret at losing such an able preacher from such an important pulpit. But his talent gave him special fitness for the work to which he is called and the request of pastor and people was granted. Rev. J. A. Priest, D. D., offered a resolution to the effect that Presbytery petition the General Assembly to overturn a change in the article in the constitution of faith upon divorce, making it absolutely prohibitory except for adultery. It called out quite a lengthy discussion. Many thought the article good enough. The whole matter was laid on the table till the fall meeting.

Dr. Reich has been delivering a series of lectures on the evidence of Christianity in St. Xavier's College. He affirmed "that there was no evidence until well along in the second century of Christ's having lived." Rev. George P. Hays, D. D., of the Second Presbyterian church, answered him in a sermon. Dr. Reich replied to this. And Monday night Dr. Hays spoke in Odeon Hall before a picked audience in reply to his rejoinder. In his lecture he gave such an array of facts respecting the New Testament MSS., the testimony of the Latin and Greek fathers and the fulfillment of prophecy as to convince the most skeptical. It is printed in pamphlet form and is being widely distributed. It ought to settle the question "forever and a day."

The examinations at Lane Seminary were held the first of this week. There were twenty-one representatives from the different presbyteries in Ohio and Indiana present. There were sixteen graduates. The commencement exercises took place Thursday in the First Presbyterian church of Walnut Hills. Half the seniors gave addresses. Their performances were of a high order. At the close Dr. Patterson gave an address upon the anti-slavery stampede of 1834, which came near breaking up the Seminary. A collation was served in the Seminary building by the ladies of Walnut Hills, which was a fitting close for that great feast-day.

Wednesday evening I preached on the "Mediatorial Dominion" in the United Presbyterian church, Rev. W. H. French, D. D., pastor. At the close of the service the meeting appointed a delegate to represent them at the Pittsburg Convention to meet the 11th and 12th of May.

Immense strikes are threatened in our city. This labor question will not down. It is like "woman's wit," "Make the doors upon it, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the key-hole; stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out at the chimney." Nothing but the adoption of Christ's law of philanthropy on both sides will settle it: "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

J. M. FOSTER.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF THE MORGAN MURDER.

During the years 1826 and 1827 I was living at my father's on a farm on the shore of Lake Ontario in what is now the county of Orleans, N. Y. At this time my uncle, Israel Murdock, lived in a large stone house, which he kept as a hotel, on the old thoroughfare known as the Ridge road from Rochester to Lewiston. My grandfather, Seymour Murdock, and a younger son, William, three or four years older than myself, and with whom I was intimate, lived with his son Israel. From William I learned that one day when the stage, which always stopped there for dinner, came along a passenger took grandfather aside and began to make Masonic signs to him. Said he, "I guess I am not the man you want to see. I guess it's my son. He is away from home." (Israel was a Royal Arch Mason.) "I see you are not," said the man. He then asked if a message could be carried to Jeremiah Brown, living about a mile distant. William was at once dispatched on horseback, and found Mr. Brown harrowing in the field. On receiving the line Brown unhooked and hastened to the hotel with his team; and while it was being fed he was at the front of the house looking anxiously toward the east. Soon a close carriage drove past, and Brown called out, "What does this mean? I thought I was to drive that away." It went a few rods past, stopped, and the driver got down. Brown went to him and soon exchanged, putting on his own team; while the driver, Elihu Mather, returned home to Gaines, some twelve miles east. While the carriage was waiting William went to it and heard a sound within as of a hog with its mouth filled making a slight grunting noise. After this I became familiar with the report of Morgan's abduction. William used to say that after the carriage passed Israel did not go to the canal any more to buy staves, as he had for some time been accustomed to do. From this I inferred that Israel had been chosen to carry Morgan, and that to evade it he had made excuse to be away from home.

Some time after this the report came to my father's of a body found at the mouth of Oak Orchard creek where it emptied into the Lake about one and one-half miles from our house. We all went over. Robert M. Brown, living about the same distance from the mouth of the creek, called a cornerer's inquest on the spot. Among those thus called were my father, Anthony Miles, Elijah Brown and other neighbors. Mrs. Morgan was sent for and came from Batavia. She told some marks by which her husband could be identified: as, square or double teeth in front, certain teeth gone, and a scar calculated to the bone on one foot. I saw her examine the body and knew of her decision identifying it as that of Morgan.

I was at this time about fourteen years of age. I was born in 1812, and lived as described on the Lake shore until I was twenty-one. I was for many years personally well acquainted with some of those here mentioned and others connected with the stirring and dreadful events of that day.

Israel Murdock returned home from business one day a few years after this, and was found dead in bed the next morning. Another uncle, who was a high and active Mason at this time, never after attended the lodge, though it was revived some years before his death.

JESSE MURDOCK.

THE K. OF L. AS A CATHOLIC FEEDER.

WYANET, Ill., April, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Your editorial comments on the Knights of Labor are timely and true. I have been watching carefully for some time the attitude of the Church of Rome toward this new order. Leo XIII. became convinced that a condemnation of the Knights would interfere with Peter's pence. Truly "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." "Cardinal Manning," says the April 16th Baltimore Catholic Mirror, "claims the honor of a Knight of Labor, and 'has his claim allowed.'" "Glibly" is the word you use in speaking of the English Cardinal, and a very appropriate one it is. In the concluding sentence, after observing, "Thus at length Powderly and his Romanist companions have succeeded," you assert, and prophetic words they are, "If Cardinal Gibbons can work with them successfully the whole order will form a great feeder for the Church of Rome." The probabilities are that he will be able to work with them. Rev. Dr. Bernard O'Reilly informs us, "Master Workman Powderly has told Cardinal Gibbons how stoutly and successfully the Knights of Labor, the majority of whom are Catholics, have defeated every attempt made by the disorderly and irreligious few to assert themselves in the society." Yours very respectfully, (Rev.) JOHN LEE.

THE THEATER AN IMMORAL EDUCATOR.

The theater, by the world, is to-day presented as a moral educator. Without fear of sound contradiction from any quarter, I unhesitatingly pronounce it a counterfeit moral educator. The writer knows whereof he affirms. During the space of a few years of his life it was his misfortune in being an inveterate theater-goer, having, in those few years, attended many hundreds of performances, from the lowest to the highest. Boston has its so-called vulgar, as well as its reputed refined playhouse. There is more danger lurking in the high-toned theater than in the grossest dime show. The former distorts rather than otherwise; the latter is insidious in its effects—a veritable moral slow poison which permeates the young and innocent mind, until, oftentimes, it becomes too late to affect a radical cure. The masked presentation of the immoral, the refined suggestion of passion, insidiously finds an affinity in the youthful mind, fascinates and charms to ultimate destruction. I believe there is only one antidote that could have permanently eradicated the effect of theatrical education from my soul—the blood of Jesus Christ. The pet sin of my life, the one which I know kept me longest out of Christ, was the playhouse.

Again, I affirm, from experience, that the most pure or moral play has enough evil in it, in one way or another, to offset all the good. It is the admixture of the bad and the good that makes the counterfeit. Bad is bad, and good is good. The nature, the character of each, when unmixed, stands out clear and definite. The danger lurking on the stage lies in the fact that it presents good and bad hand in hand, and the hand of good is polluted thereby, without exception.

D. P. M.

AMONG THE COLORED CHURCHES OF LOUISIANA.

I have had the pleasure of reading your good paper often since Rev. Francis J. Davidson has been here. I have been a member of the Knights of Pythias, and "Master of Finance" of my lodge, but I find it to be a hindrance to the Gospel, so your paper has helped me to leave the lodge. Rev. Francis J. Davidson is a young man, but I don't believe there is a man in Louisiana that has done so much to break down the Secret Empire in this State. When he came up here in the winter there was only one man that dared to openly speak against secret societies, and that was Rev. Ambrose Hubbs, and they had almost silenced him. But Bro. Davidson came and opened fire on their fort. It has caused him to have a great many enemies here. Three of the colored churches will not let him preach in them, but the poor young man is doing great good here in Jesus's name. He preached a sermon last Sunday night on separation, at Rev. B. Dorsey's church at Dorseyville.

Bro. Davidson is trying hard to get a club of subscribers. I want the paper myself and several others. Not many people knew about your paper here before Bro. Davidson came, but it is certainly known now that there are men all over the county fighting secret societies. Bro. Davidson tells me that he felt so deeply interested about the way the colored people were being deceived in secret societies, he just took his own earnings last winter and stopped here to help pull down Satan's empire.

Yours for the Gospel of separation. J.

CONFLICTING DUTIES.

"I pray thee have me excused" is often the very plausible request when some special duty is presented to the attention of those who ought to do it or aid in its support. One is so busy otherwise with his merchandize, or farm, or family, that of course you must see he cannot go with you! Thus it was with slavery in our country before the war, until the whole nation was compelled to cast everything aside as secondary to the imperative demands of that important question.

So it is to-day with other questions, but probably none are so immediately urgent as those of the secret orders and prohibition. That which in the one case is required of society is a decided protest and united manful stand against the principle on which the secret orders are based; and in the other to condemn the social customs which are the encouragement and support of the saloons, and of drunkenness and crimes which they gender.

"A poor excuse for non-action is better than none" seems the maxim of multitudes who otherwise are ready to censure the excesses and crimes against law and order which abound in our beloved country by abusing our freedom. Some are ready to point the finger scorn to the earnest workers against secret orders and drunkenness, as many did at the early Abolitionists. They tacitly approve of the executions of the John Browns, and the murders of the pioneer Lovejoys, and Morgans, and Haddocks; yea, they have no ears to hear aught but apologies for the murder of the martyr to the support of the law of the State of Iowa, and the dethronement of the Bacchus that reigned as a rebel in Sioux City. Socialism and anarchy may stop railway trains, or order thousands of workmen to cease their labors and thus deprive their families of honest bread, or may assault and kill the scabs and police and compel the State to order out her militia, as now done in our Chicago, to protect persons and property, but all this is simply premonitory—like clouds which portend the storm.

What is really wanted is prevention by society combining against the principle of the secret orders before it is compelled, as it was by slavery to apply for years the utmost power of the country to suppress it. For now it is admitted on every side that slavery was the true cause of the civil war.

Now as bull dogs instinctively seize the throats of their antagonists, so let the people of this free Republic seize the secret orders by their despotic throats and pass such laws as shall condemn them forever as enemies of the very life and existence of our civil and religious liberties.

PITH AND POINT.

A BRAVE REFORMER GONE TO HIS REWARD.

I have been a diligent student of the secrecy question for twenty years; am increasingly interested and profited by the Cynosure; among the dozen papers that come to our house none are so eagerly perused. We have other papers that we file away for reference, etc., but the Cynosure goes to friends far and near—we cannot keep it. I wish you God-speed in this glorious work of combating sin in high and low places.

I long for the day to come soon when we may have a good speaker to work up anti-secrecy in Dakota.

We have just laid away to his rest, George Johnston, an untiring worker in this reform, a prince in Israel, and a "host in himself." He being dead yet speaketh. Precious is his memory.—JOHN F. HANSON, Mt. Vernon, Dak.

A PAPER WORTH SOMETHING.

Find enclosed six dollars and fifty cents. I want my paper (Cynosure) to cost me five dollars a year. I send you one new name also for it, which makes the amount as aforesaid, $6.50, in post-office order. I love the Cynosure very much. It reads more like the New Testament than any other paper I get. I believe in the reform and its ultimate success, notwithstanding T. DeWitt Talmage. May God bless you all.—C. H. WATSON, Cuba, N. Y.

THE LODGE OUTRUNS CHURCH OR SCHOOL.

I wish to acknowledge my debt of gratitude to the unknown donor of the Cynosure. We welcome its weekly visits, and are indeed thankful to the friend who thus favors us with them. After reading your paper we give it into the hands of others where we hope it may do much good. Unfortunately lodgery seems to take in this country faster than Christianity or education, but we work on in full faith that a brighter day is soon to dawn in this mountain country. We already see the glow in the east.—REV. A. A. MYERS, Jellico, Tenn.

INFLUENCE ON THE LODGE ON PERSONAL RELIGION.—The Rev. James Porter, D. D., a venerable Methodist evangelist, whose work during the last few weeks has been greatly blessed, writes to Zion's Herald of his experience at Reading, Pa.: "I was surprised to see the great predominance of women at the meetings, but was informed that the men were so busy that they could not attend. The pastor approached one young man, and urged him to come Monday night and seek the Lord; but he said he could not as he was to take another degree in some club or lodge. 'Well,' said the pastor, 'come, then, Tuesday night.' But this was impossible, as he was to take a degree in another concern that very night; and he is probably still 'marching on,' as he did not appear in church at all. This reminded me of one difference between now and fifty years ago. Then, there were few associations outside of the church to attract attention. Now we have them by the score, taking men away from their wives and children as well as their religious duties. That they contribute to the multiplication of divorces, we have no doubt."—Christian Statesman.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON VIII.—May 22, 1887.—The Passover.—Exodus 12: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us.—1st Cor. 5: 7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

THE PLAGUES. 1. Their Nature. They were miraculous, but were not unknown in Egypt in some degree before. The supernaturalness of the plagues consisted in their severity, their successive occurrence, their coming and going at the word of Moses, their partial extent (afflicting the Egyptians, and not the Israelites), and the unusual seasons and manner in which they appeared.—Edersheim.

2. Their Duration. They probably began in June, at the time of the Nile inundation, and continued till April, a period of nearly ten months. In the seventh, the barley was in the ear; this would fix its time at about the first of February.

3. Their Significance. They struck at the very things in which Egypt prided herself. In many cases,—as of the Nile, the frogs, the cattle, the sun,—there was a victory of Jehovah over the gods of Egypt. In others, Jehovah showed his power over nature and over life and death.

4. Their Object was (1) to make Pharaoh willing to let the people go, (2) to make the people willing to go, (3) to teach them the nature and power of their God. (4) They were continued for so long a time in order to give Pharaoh opportunity for repentance and obedience, and the Israelites time in which to learn their lesson.

5. Their Need. Miracles believed lie at the foundation of all religions which men have ever received as of divine origin. It follows, then, that by the miracles which God wrought by the hand of Moses he pursued the only way that was possible to give a revelation in which his presence and power would be recognized.—Dr. J. B. Walker: Philosophy of Plan of Salvation.

HARDENING PHARAOH'S HEART. (1) God never hardened Pharaoh's heart except in connection with, and in consequence of, Pharaoh's own actions. (2) God made the natural laws in accordance with which the king's heart was hardened. (3) Everything God did was right and good, and yet resulted in the hardening of the heart, because of Pharaoh's wilful choice. The revolting idea that God sends his Holy Spirit to hearts with the express design of hardening them, finds no warrant in the Scriptures. The office of the Holy Spirit is to soften and win the soul.—Johnson. (4) When Pharaoh had hardened his own heart, so that there was no possible hope of his yielding obedience, then God, by his providence, by natural laws, perhaps by the withdrawal of special influences, let him go on in his high-handed and blind course to his own destruction. This was the fruit and punishment of Pharaoh's hardening his own heart. God never hardens a willing and obedient heart.

THE LORD'S SUPPER was instituted in connection with the Passover, and is to the disciples of Jesus what the Passover was to the Jews. It causes us to remember (1) that our salvation is the gift of God; (2) that he has redeemed us from a worse than Egyptian bondage; (3) that the redemption was by the sacrifice of the Lamb of God; (4) that we must apply this sacrifice by faith and obedience, or it will not avail to us; (5) that Jesus is the food of the soul; (6) that all life may be sanctified; (7) that we are bought with a price, and therefore belong to God; (8) that we are not alone in our salvation, but are united, first in the family and then in the church, by a bond of union. (9) It is a prophecy of Christ's coming again. (10) It is for the whole world. It is to point not only ourselves, but all men, to the source of salvation. (11) It makes a new era in our lives. (12) It is the beginning of a pilgrim life to the promised land. (13) We should eat the Passover with the bitter herbs of repentance; but (14) the feast should be one of joy and thankfulness and love.

Prince Bismarck is about to propose a new tax on beer, which, it is expected, will bring in at least 50,000,000 marks.

Through the influence of the W. C. T. U. of Delaware bills have been passed by the Legislature raising the age of protection to fifteen years, prohibiting the sale of impure literature, and making scientific temperance instruction compulsory in all public schools.

A number of prominent men, including Bishop Ireland of St. Paul, Bishop Spalding of Peoria, Bishop O'Connor of Omaha, and Colonel W. P. Rend of Chicago, are at the head of a movement to send out Rev. James M. Cleary, of Kenosha, Wis., to travel all over the United States lecturing and distributing temperance literature. Their expenses are to be borne by private subscriptions. Father Cleary is President of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America.

The Presbytery of New York have refused to have anything to do with the commendation of the last General Assembly that $2,300,000 be raised to endow the benevolent Boards of the church, on the ground that it is a wrong to those for whom a missionary Board works to hoard up millions for the purpose of relieving our children from the task of supporting missions when the heathen at home and abroad are perishing for lack of knowledge.

OBITUARY.

[The following brief notice is of an aged brother who has been known by correspondence for years as among the faithful men of his time in his love for Jesus Christ his Lord. In his death the Christian church loses a man great in faith and love and good works.]

ENOS MITCHELL, of Pittston, Maine, passed on to his reward on the 17th of April after a painful illness of one year. He has fought a good fight and kept the faith for fifty years. He was one of three who cast the first Abolition votes in this town, was one of the members when the first Congregational church was organized, and the first to oppose secretism. When convicted of the evil of any system he boldly fought it to the end, risking property, reputation and even life. He was like the shock of corn fully ripe and ready to harvest. He looked forward to see the result of the Congress of Christians, but died the week it was published. Though a great sufferer from disease of the nerves, yet he was alive to all public interests until the last month, when the brain gave way to disease. He was 81 years, 7 months old, fifty years of which time were spent in God's service. F. M. M.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. LEONARD BACON, D. D.—Wishing you good success in your war against secret societies.

REV. B. P. AYDELLOTTE, D. D., former president of Woodward College, O., (a renouncing Mason).—Freemasonry is a lie all over.

REV. JUSTIN EDWARDS, D. D., author and head of Andover seminary.—Whenever the cause of temperance is veiled in darkness and secrecy, it must lose its hold on the public confidence and sympathy.

REV. M. BENNETT, long presiding elder M. E. church.—I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society.

DR. THOMAS SCOTT, the great commentator.—Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided; but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls.

REV. J. C. K. MALLIGAN, editor of "Our Banner".—Through such silence, secret connivance and horrid oaths "ever to conceal and never reveal" the state of our country is rapidly becoming such as to alarm every Christian philanthropist.

REV. B. T. ROBERTS, editor of the Free Methodist.—For us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ.

JOHN G. FEE, Berea College, 1868.—It is Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred associations that have spawned and now lend respectability to "Regulators," "Ku Klux Klans," and other bands of midnight assassins now ranging through Kentucky and other portions of the South.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D. D.—Masonry has damned all who ever trusted in it for salvation. It is now leading away thousands from the church, and from paths of virtue by association with the impetuous, unclean and profane, and is dragging them down the road which leads to the chambers of eternal death.

REV. EDWARD BRECHER, D. D.—If on such anti-Christian grounds, prayers are framed, rites established and chaplains appointed, ignoring Christ and his intercession, God regards it as a mockery and an insult to himself and his church. In it is revealed the hatred of Satan to Christ. By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted.

REV. W. W. PATTON, D. D., 1869.—However secret societies may differ among themselves, yet they are all anti-republican in their tendencies; and are all leading to the same results, viz., a substitution of worldly and selfish innovations for moral and religious influences, and, ultimately, to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity.

REV. JAMES H. FAIRCHILD, D. D., Pittsburg address.—The point is not that the working of a secret organization may be perverted to selfish ends, but that in its very nature it strongly tends to such perversion. A worthy institution may be perverted, but an institution in which the tendency to perversion is inherent and constitutional, is not a good institution.

REV. DR. JAMES B. WALKER, author of "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation".—There is probably not one in a thousand who enter the lodge, who know, when blindfolded they take the terrible oaths, that Masonry is an anti-Christ and one of the most powerful enemies of Christ that exists. But this is put beyond the possibility of a doubt by the highest Masonic authorities.

REV. NATHAN BROWN, Editor "Am. Baptist" and missionary to Japan.—If Freemasonry had existed in the days of Christ, and in the same form that it exists with us, he could not have condemned it more distinctly than he did in his Sermon on the Mount: "If ye do good to them that do good to you, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?" The Gospel is at war with every system of clique or clan, caste or combination that seeks to create distinctions in the human family.

CHARLES C. FOOTE.—What would the introduction of Christ into Mohammedanism be, but its annihilation? And thus would it be with Masonry.

REV. JOHN TODD, Pittsfield, Mass..—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

HOWARD CROSBY, Chancellor University of New York, 1870.—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886.—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

REV. MATTHEW L. R. PERRINE, D. D., Auburn Theological Seminary, REV. JOEL PARKER and REV. CHAUNCEY EDDY.—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

REV. LEVI CHASE, Fall River, Mass..—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

REV. C. D. BURLINGHAM, in history of the Genesis M. E. Conference, 1860.—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

REV. JOEL MANN, a renouncing Mason.—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

REV. AARON LELAND, formerly Lieut. Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association).—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

ELDER DAVID BERNARD.—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

EDITORS.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1887.

THE DENOMINATIONAL PAPERS of the large religious sects it is feared will secularize the churches. They dare not touch the lodges which are eating up the churches, or if they speak of them they are careful not to disturb them or warn Christians to forsake them. The Prohibition party they dare not advocate, so their subscribers go on voting for the parties which license liquor-selling, and some of these papers, enlarged to make room for advertisements and to keep up with competing religious journals, are filled with trash unfit for Sabbath reading. A list of the headings of a few of these religious neutrals for a month or two would shock their own editors and subscribers: goodish, verbose, funny and news articles enough to consume all the spare time in the week! "The prophets prophesy falsely and the priests bear rule by their means, and what will ye do in the end thereof."

TO DR. T. DEWITT TALMAGE.

AN OPEN LETTER.

DEAR BROTHER:—When I first read your sermon on secret societies my first impulse was to write you a private letter. Such was my confidence in your integrity and piety I felt certain you would recall and retract leading sentiments of that discourse: and I still think you will live to deplore its effects on its thousands and ten thousands of readers.

You say, "We will, in secret, plot the ruin of all the enterprises of Satan." I need not remind you that Christ laid no secret plots, but says, "I have not spoken in secret from the beginning" (Isa. 48: 16). But you say, "The general never sends to the opposing troops information of the coming attack." My dear brother, "shedding the blood of war in time of peace" is murder, assassination. To do the things ordinarily done and justified by invading armies, in time of peace, would, by common consent, cause men to be imprisoned, hung or shot. You seem to be unconscious of the great truth which you bring out, to-wit, that Freemasonry is a secret conspiracy against the world of outsiders, and you justify the lodge in treating their fellow citizens as enemies are treated in war. Is this the reasoning of a minister of Christ, who "in secret said nothing" (John 18: 20)?

Then you confound dividing society up into secret "orders" and "brotherhoods," pledged or sworn to life-long concealment of their proceedings, with the temporary privacies of ordinary life dictated by decency or prudence, while you are well aware that the great Romish apostasy dates from their creation of such secret "orders" and "brotherhoods" in derogation of the one open, equal brotherhood in Christ.

You tell us that you do not "belong to any of the great secret societies;" you "have only words of praise" for secret societies which have benevolent objects, as "maintenance of right against wrong," "reclamation of inebriates," "providing for widows and orphans," etc., etc. You thus, by accepting their professions as proofs, justify the whole brood of secret orders from the Freemasons and Odd-fellows to the secret bandits and brigands along the Mediterranean; as they all profess to be boards of charity and equalization, to rectify the wrongs of society and give protection to the poor against the rich. Though with a superficiality unpardonable in a minister of Christ, you give no statistics, though there are plenty within your reach, showing their professions to be hollow and false; and that even the Odd-fellows, as shown by their official reports, pay out but one dollar in benefits while they receive three in dues and degree fees; and the Freemasons, after the burning of Chicago, published in book form the report of their Board of Relief, showing $90,000 received and but $30,000 paid for relief. Cadwalader D. Colden, a former mayor of New York and member of Congress, who had taken all the degrees then known in Masonry, in a statement published by request of citizens, stated, as the result of his knowledge and experience, that not more than one dollar in a hundred received by Masonic lodges was paid for objects of benevolence. To give a loose, unsupported, ministerial endorsement from the pulpit on the Sabbath of secret orders, which are absorbing our young men by thousands and their money by millions, is to say to the wicked, "thou art righteous." "He that saith unto the wicked, 'Thou art righteous,' him shall the people curse: nations shall abhor him" (Prov. 24: 24).

But the manual of the Scottish Rite of 33 degrees, now the most widely diffused form of Freemasonry in the world, says, "Genuine Freemasonry is a pure religion." (Cunningham's Manual, p. 20.) And that it is a religion, with altars, prayers, a creed and ritual, professing to save men without Christ, its burial service, nay, its fundamental writers everywhere proclaim. Yet in your sermon on "The moral influence of Freemasonry," and other secret societies, you wholly ignore the fact that it is a religion. This is astonishing. We cannot believe that you intentionally mislead the thousands who read and trust you. But the whole discourse seems to us to proceed from a mind under an eclipse: like the disciples on the night of the betrayal, when Christ said to the multitude at the garden of agony, where "his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground" (Luke 22: 44); when the brave and honest Peter, sifted by Satan, succumbed to the "great multitude" (Matt. 26: 47) who came with Judas, resolved, like the Freemasons, to rid themselves and the world of Christ; and, coward-like, denied that he knew him. That was truly "an hour and power of darkness." Was it indeed true, as reported to the New York Tribune, that you said to the reporter you "did not know that the Chicago Congress of Churches to discuss the secret lodge system was gotten up by persons opposed to the lodge?" And did you suppose I would aid in getting up, and that Drs. McCosh and Storrs would endorse the call of a convention friendly or indifferent to the lodge system? O brother! let us hope that if you have faltered like Peter, like him you will weep bitterly over this matter.

But you "have hundreds of friends" in the old lodges who are pillars of the church, patterns of piety, etc., whom you would wish to be your executors and pall-bearers when you are dead. And do you suppose there were no kind, "personal friends" among the three thousand who fell at Sinai for submitting to be stripped like Freemasons and joining in a worship without a Messiah? ("For Aaron had made them naked to their shame." Ex. 32: 25.) Can you have informed yourself as to the spiritual nature of these lodges, of their relation to our late terrible war, and that they are now disintegrating the churches of the colored people of the South, where thousands of toil-worn mothers are boarding their husbands whose earnings are consumed by the dues of the lodges?

But the bad logic and worse morals of this discourse culminate in your condemning as "perjurers" those who, having been entrapped by fraud and falsehood into Masonic lodges, have repented of the folly and blasphemy into which they have been deceived and have felt it their duty to God to warn others of its snares and falsehoods. July 4th, 1848, one hundred and three Masons met in Leroy, N. Y., and appealing to Almighty God for the rectitude of their motives, renounced the lodge and solemnly and unequivocally testified to the truth of Morgan's disclosures. And for you, a native of that State, before the men are dead who knew many of those men, to stand in your pulpit and call those men perjurers, thus endorsing the oaths of Masonry as morally binding, is simply a moral monstrosity. A Masonic oath is not an oath, but a trap; and, as the great and good Dr. Nathaniel Colver said, from his own bitter yet joyous experience, the only duty of those taken in by it is to repent of it, renounce it, and warn all others to avoid it and escape from it as the bird from the snare of the fowler.

That Christ may look on and love you as he did Peter, and that, like Peter, you may "weep bitterly" over that dreadful fall in time to save many whom your sermon will lead into the lodge, is the prayer of your brother in Christ, J. BLANCHARD.

JUDGE TOURGEE.

We have admired this gentleman, author of "The Fool's Errand," etc. We have purchased, read and enjoyed his books. The Northwestern Christian Advocate contains a three and a half column article by this writer in which he deals with the Anti-masonic movement which gave to the United States the statesmen who administered the Government during the rebellion. Seward, Stevens, Chase, Charles Francis Adams, and Thurlow Weed, who aided him in England, were Anti-masons; and their minds were formed for public life during the Anti-masonic excitement.

Yet Judge Tourgee, who exposed the secret tricks of slave-holding Masons with unexampled ability and fidelity, speaks thus of the Masonic lodges which literally "kept the garments" (masks, robes and disguises) of the Ku-Klux who murdered men, women and children by thousands for no crime but the husbands and fathers voting the Republican tickets: "The fiercest of popular frenzies was the Anti-masonic movement." "I wish I could give you some idea of its lurid intensity." "The churches took cognizance of membership in the lodge, as an immorality, and expelled those who would not renounce their obligations." "Masons were often afraid to acknowledge themselves such from actual fear of personal violence." He thus holds up Masons as martyrs, and their opponents, J. Q. Adams, Seward, Stevens, Ritner, Rush and their associates as fiendish or frenzied.

And yet, in this same article, in a Methodist organ, he says of Morgan: "The popular belief was that he was murdered by Freemasons, and the body thrown into the river (Niagara) to prevent the revelation he was about to make." (Italics ours.) Mr. Tourgee states correctly that Morgan was kidnapped, jailed by the abused forms of law, in a jail belonging to the State of New York; taken out by night, gagged, and run off a hundred miles, never to return; and yet he condescends to abuse the man (who, he says, "it is probable" was murdered by Masons for violating the by-laws of their club) in this style: "As a man, he was utterly insignificant." Hal! why then did three hundred men, as proved in the courts, conspire his death; and sixty men take a hand in it? "Insignificant" indeed! The man is insignificant who calls him so. Men do not conspire by hundreds to kill a man who is "insignificant." But, he says, "The disclosures he professed to be about to make were intended simply to raise money." And how does Mr. Tourgee know that? Morgan's own written words, before his abduction, are chiseled on his monument at Batavia, "I owe to my country an exposure of its dangers." Gerrit Smith; Samuel D. Greene, who was a member of the lodge with Morgan and knew him well, and was mayor or president of Batavia village when he was killed; Thurlow Weed, the "Warwick of American politics," these, and a host of like men who were there at the time, probably knew as much about Morgan as Judge Tourgee, who has made money by books if he has not written books for money; and Mr. Greene has told the present writer that Morgan, who was his neighbor and intimate friend, was a respectable citizen, a captain under Jackson at New Orleans, and a Christian patriot; and that he had no doubt that Morgan's motive was what he said it was, to protect his country from the dangers of the lodge, which has been suppressed by turns by every government of Europe for secret treasons.

But not content with abusing its opponents, this writer endorses the lodge by saying that Morgan was "forsworn." And is it the opinion of this American civilian that Masonic oaths are oaths, and that those are "forsworn" who break them? Did he recognize such oaths as binding while he was on the bench? Judge Tourgee knows from just such evidence as hangs men, that every Mason swears to have his throat cut if he violates the by-laws of his lodge. Does that bind him to have his throat cut? No more than the oath of the drunkard who swears that he will be damned if he does not whip his man, binds him to be damned if he repents of his oath. Yet the base, bloody, and brutal oaths of the lodge are no more binding than the oaths of the saloon. The only thing to do with such oaths is to repent of and renounce them. And we are sorry that so respectable a journal as the N. W. Christian Advocate should lend itself to teach such morals to American Methodists.

LABOR AND CAPITAL AS PARTNERS.

Reformers are of necessity iconoclasts, but they fall short of greatness if they are not also builders. Any policy or method of reform lacks an essential feature if it neglects reconstruction. While we claim that the lodge is a usurper and a counterfeit, pretending to do work for which God has already appointed sufficient agencies, there are yet many, especially in the labor lodges, who are ill-informed or deceived, and need to be carefully led into clearer knowledge, and to be shown a better way. In the days of the grange, the organization of open farmers' clubs in many cases forestalled the appeal of lodge organizers. Moody and Murphy are practically and daily proving here in Chicago that the Good Templars and other temperance lodges are utterly needless, and that their pretended necessity has no foundation in fact.

In the same way there are practical demonstrations of the folly of secret labor societies. They are in the first place, as we have often said, in the nature of a declaration of war. They assume that the relations of employer and employed are hostile, and all their intercourse must be made under a flag of truce. There can be no greater mistake. Such relations are not only friendly, but they are one.

There can be no reasonable and logical division of their interests. Labor and capital are partners, and organizations based on any assumption of inimical relation between them, rest on fallacy and folly, and cannot last. The grange was more popular than the Knights of Labor order, and its protest against abuses was just as reasonable; but had it not been that the national organization of the farmers' lodge had accumulated a vast sum of money, and there must needs be some sort of organization kept up to squander it, we should hear of no more grange meetings. Powderly's order seems to be following the same course, with its vast revenues and palatial offices.

But there needs to be more than a sentiment about the unity of interests between labor and capital; and it is the part of the capitalist and employer to take the initiative in making it so. Where selfishness has made a gulf he must begin the bridge across it. When he does so he flanks the lodge, and among reasonable men makes it no longer a power by its appearance of being a necessity, and the right arm of justice for the worker. It is, therefore, with the greatest satisfaction that we see prominent manufacturers attempting some plan to apply the principles of justice and fair play. Two such were reported last week: John Wanamaker, the millionaire clothier of Philadelphia, who notified his employes that hereafter they shall share the proceeds of the great business he controls; and the firm of Procter and Gamble, soap and perfumery manufacturers of Cincinnati, who make the same proposition. Their plan is to appoint three trustees, two book-keepers, and a superintendent in the firm's employ, who shall, twice a year, ascertain the amount of profits during the preceding six months, allowing as expenses 6 per cent interest on the capital employed and reasonable salaries to members of the firm devoting their time to its interests, and then divide these profits between the firm and the employes in proportion to the capital and the wages earned. The employes have accepted the proposition with thanks, and resolved to allow no outside influence to disturb the relations between them and their employers.

The discussion of profit-sharing is receiving deserved attention in magazine discussions as well as the daily press. In the April Century Edward Atkinson, an acknowledged authority in statistics, endeavors to show the actual margin of profits. He argues from an elaborate array of figures that labor already receives nine-tenths of the net product of the manufactures of the country. But with all his care in procuring and arranging statistics, there seems to be a dissatisfaction in his conclusions. He does not take the partnership view of the question, nor does he seem to understand that capital has its reward in the deduction of six or ten per cent for interest. Labor having its reward in the value of nine-tenths of the product, there yet remains the one-tenth which may be called profit. It is this portion, be it more or less, which the profit-sharing plan proposes to divide. Mr. N. O. Nelson, a St. Louis manufacturer, is an enthusiast in this idea. He has studied it personally in Europe, and is now in his second year of experiment in his own establishment. He writes forcibly, because honestly, in the North American Review in favor of it.

There are many profit-sharing concerns in Europe; but, singularly, most of them are in France. In England this form of co-operation has more often taken the form of share-holding.

In our own country profit-sharing has recently made marked progress. A woolen manufactory of Peacedale, Rhode Island, adopted it in 1879 and has since paid from three to five per cent dividends on wages. The Pillsbury, millers of Minneapolis, have for four years divided over $27,000 among their men annually. A number of other firms and individuals in different parts of the country have also adopted the plan, with general success. In France the Paris and Orleans Railway adopted profit-sharing in 1844 and has adhered to it ever since. There is one American road which shares its profits, but the name at present escapes us.

While profit-sharing may still be called an experiment with us, since in England the plan has sometimes been cloaked by the tyrannical rules of trades unions, and is much more liable to the attacks of the lodge here, yet being founded in equity it must in some form succeed. The question of loss-sharing has also to be settled, but happily that is a difficulty which may never be met, a bridge which may never have to be crossed. It is certain that increased efficiency of workmen, through a recognition of their partnership interest, will help to put further and further away the evil day of "loss." We believe capital, at least, will be willing to take the greater part of the risk if thereby the working-men can be delivered from the seduction and demag-uery of the managers, sharpers and demagogues who control their lodges, and perpetually menace the peace of our cities, and the permanency of our commercial interests.

—The Christian Standard and Home Journal of Philadelphia, a Methodist paper, contained a good notice of the Christian congress a few weeks ago.

—Our graphic report last week of the Mormon debate and mob at Bay Port, Michigan, was sent by the lady whose name was subscribed to it; but we are asked to correct by saying that Mrs. Snell was not the author, but sent a copy only to this office.

—Bro. Hinman, in a card from Harper's Ferry last Friday, says he was made welcome at Stone(?) College at that place and addressed the students in an impressive meeting. He went on from that point to Chambersburg, Pa., where he is always sure of a welcome.

—The familiar lines quoted in the last article on the third page of this issue are so well known that it was a small surprise to see that they had slipped into the forms with Truth personified in the masculine. We beg the writer, our lady readers, and Truth herself to pardon the mistake.

—The Cynosure was cheered the other day by a call from Rev. M. L. Holt, president of Gates College, Neligh, Nebraska. The good work inaugurated by this young institution is being widely appreciated in Nebraska, and among generous Christians at the East who are sustaining it. The college maintains the fundamental principles of righteousness against saloon and lodge.

—Bro. J. Augustus Cole, our African friend, has an able rejoinder to Dr. Talmage on secret societies in the last Wesleyan Methodist. Bro. Cole has been visiting a number of Wesleyan conferences in the East and has aroused much enthusiasm for his proposed African mission. He expects to visit the churches with missionary agent A. W. Hall, probably after his brief engagement with the N. C. A. is completed in the South.

—Bro. William Fenton has sent out the second number of his occasional Christian Liberator from St. Paul. It is full of caustic arguments against the lodges. Bro. Fenton will issue the paper regularly if there is a desire manifested on the part of a sufficient number to warrant him in so doing. Copies of the present issue may be had for $2 per hundred, or five cents each, by addressing him at 74 South Robert street, St. Paul, Minn.

—The Friend Quakers also have just located some fine lands for a colony in this same Santa Ana country, about fourteen miles from Los Angeles and the same distance from Pasadena, where is already a prosperous Quaker community and church, of whom Bro. T. K. Bufkin and his estimable family form a part. The tract of 1,300 acres is near the San Gabriel river, and will be divided into ten-acre lots. A. Pickering, an old resident of Chicago, and honored member of the Friends' Society, and associated with Mr. Pritchard in the Christian Worker, is leading this movement.

—Rev. A. T. McMill, who was a few years since connected with the Christian Instructor while published in this city, and removed to Denver on account of his health and of his family, has more recently gone on to southern California for the same reason. He is now located at Fulton, Wells county, sixteen miles from Los Angeles, where he has, after much searching, found a favorable location to which he wishes to turn the United Presbyterian immigration. He is writing to the Midland and other papers some account of this colony, and may be addressed as above for more particular account of the location, climate, etc.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, late engaged by the Illinois State Christian Association, has now, under an arrangement with the National Board, been started on an independent mission. He has a large tent and folding seats to accommodate several hundred. Two assistants and his whole family accompany him, the younger members forming a very attractive band of music which adds not a little to the popularity of his entertainments. He will travel thus all summer, spending a week in the larger towns, and speaking for Christ to eye, ear and heart, turning men away from infidelity and vice, from saloon and lodge, and every iniquity to seek the one Way of salvation. Bro. Arnold began last week at Naperville, on the Burlington road, west of this city, where he remains till Thursday of the present week.

—The evangelist Small opened in a very frank and characteristic way on the theater in one of his addresses in Minneapolis last week. Sarah Bernhardt, the Parisian, being about to open an engagement in one of the theaters, Mr. Small gave her an advertisement in these terms: "Not all the oxen in the Northwest," he said, could draw him to the theater. "If you have any decency, you ought to keep out of that theater to-night. If you make any pretension to decency you ought at least to want to try to hear some one who is at least decent, and not one whose utmost claim to notoriety is her filthiness. Yet filth is worth $3 a head, and you will pay out $3 or $9 to hear filth. None of the people who claim to be respectable who go to that entertainment would let that filthy woman cross their threshold. She goes flaunting her indecency and parading her nameless offspring at the first hotels and in public places, and is the great attraction of the day."

LITERATURE FOR THE SOUTH.

DETROIT, Mich.

I am receiving such letters as the enclosed accompanied with urgent appeals for enlightening literature. Who will contribute and send on reform tracts, papers, etc., on temperance, prohibition, tobacco, and secret societies:

CORNER STONE, Arkansas.

DEAR BROTHER CLARK: Your lectures and songs did all our people good in this county. Many have left their intemperate habits, and though your stay with us was short, your name is a household word with many. You must not fail to send me your book of songs, and we shall appreciate any temperance literature you may send us for distribution among our people. We can make good use of all you can send. Mrs. Middlebrooks says, "God bless you and your family." Write us soon of your trip South, of your health, etc. Good bedtime you; and may God bless you. Respectfully yours,

A. M. MIDDLEBROOKS.

Such letters are coming with urgent requests for enlightening and instructing literature, reform books, tracts, papers, etc. Who will contribute and send on such reading matter as they need and will do them good? Send to A. M. Middlebrooks, Corner Stone, Ark.; Rev. Lewis Johnston, Pine Bluff, Ark.; Elders Williams and Taylor, Hot Springs, Ark.; Rev. H. Woodsall, Little Rock, Ark.; Rev. B. A. Imes, Memphis, Tenn.; R. J. Semms, Dermott, Arkansas.

GEO. W. CLARK.

TORONTO PAPERS COMING FORWARD.

The mischief being done everywhere through secret societies is well set forth in an article in the Toronto World of May 6th, taken from the Week, a paper also published in Toronto, Canada. Many people are only just now beginning to see the evils of all secret combinations, but those who have given the matter any attention can have come to no other conclusion but that they are evil, an evil only, and that continually. Not only in selecting public officials and in public affairs generally are the baneful and unjust influences of such societies felt, but even in the affairs of church, Sabbath-school, and temperance work members of secret clans become a community among themselves, and their members are often unjustly favored at the expense of others equally deserving. It is manifestly to the interest of every person not belonging to such societies to have the mischief done by them exposed, and the ridiculous tomfooleries of lodge ceremonies held up to scorn.

D. W. NELSON.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION will assemble in the city of Pittsburgh, at 10:30 A. M. on the 11th day of May, 1887, to continue during that and the following day. All auxiliary societies, all Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, all Christian churches and assemblies of Christian citizens called for the purpose, are requested to send delegates. Those who can not send delegates or attend in person can assist the cause by forwarding contributions or collections to the Rev. Prof. David McAllister, L.L.D., Professor of Political Science in Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa., who is the Treasurer of the Association. All remittances will be promptly acknowledged in the Christian Statesman. Every contributor will be enrolled as a member of the association for the current year and will receive a report of the proceedings of the convention. Contributors of one dollar and upward will receive in addition one copy of all tracts, leaflets and other documents issued by the association during the year.

—Dr. John Hall talks in the old-fashioned way when he says: "It is claimed by some men that man has risen from a state of savagery. There is not one atom of scientific evidence to justify such a belief. There never was a barbarous race which raised itself. Others think that man is a development from lower orders of life. We have no proof of such development."

THE HOME.

EVENING—A MEDITATION.

BY MRS. M. A. BLANCHARD.

The calm and holy hours of night
Shed o'er my soul their melting light,
While each bright orb breathes to my ear
In music soft and low, but clear,
Such as bright sinless ones might stoop
And love to hear.

My God I bless thee for the hour,
Which comes with such subduing power,
To calm tumultuous passions war,
Chase sordid hopes, and earth's low fears to banish far,
To let in glories bright which sin shall never mar.

I love the day's bright eye of flame,
And all the flowers and fruits
Which come rejoicing in her train;
They all proclaim a God.

From the low lily which first bursts its humble bell,
When spring is born, to the Chrysanthemum
Which blooms so gay, nor deigns to weep
When all her sister flowers lie withered in death's sleep.
Yet dearer to my soul is evening—far,
With rapture pure I hail its rising star:
With thee, O spirit infinite, I seem to blend,
And find no joy so pure as that to call thee friend.

"WHATSOEVER YE SHALL ASK."

James Rand was one of the most zealous and consistent members of the Methodist church in Farmville. He missed no meetings, always responded when it seemed that he ought to give his testimony, failed in no dues to the cause, made no excuses, doing his duties instead of shirking them, and, in short, he was a worthy professor. And, as might be expected, he was not delinquent in business.

James was an old-fashioned literalist in his religion, especially in the ideas of prayer. He honestly believed that in multitudes of instances his prayers had been answered in the most definite and unmistakable ways. He had asked for health, and it was given; for bountiful crops, and they came; for full attendance at meetings, and the people came out in numbers; for honest prosperity in certain business matters, and he had it. In fact, when he kindled up to his warmest degree of earnestness on any one point, and deemed it a fit subject to carry to the Lord in prayer, he professed to believe that he should gain his suit.

In this belief some of his brethren and most of his non-religious neighbors regarded him as by far too superstitious, and many a time his views and statement in reference to the subject were debated, contradicted, even scoffed; and yet, probably, every man of them felt more respect for him in his positive assurance than for themselves in their differences.

James bought his farm of Mr. Alexander, who had lived there many years, but, having become rich through bequests and investments, sold out and moved thirty miles away. But it was agreed that the semi-annual payment should be made on the farm, Mr. Alexander coming there every six months to receive his dues. For about five years this arrangement went on all right, James never failing to have the money ready, and giving his creditor a hearty and hospitable welcome.

But there came a season when the crops were short, business dull, and money hard to get, and as pay day approached the prospect was dark for our man with a conscience. Several of his debtors failed to meet their obligations to him, and it would be impossible for him to meet his unless he first received his dues. There was Bacon, the village butcher, to whom he had sold a pair of fat beeves, but who claimed he could not pay for them at the stipulated date because times were so hard. There was Hyde, the tanner, who had bought of James a quantity of oak bark, and who made the same excuse as Bacon. There was Grist, the miller, who had taken his wheat crop, agreeing to pay for it as soon as he floured and sold it, but who was delinquent, because, as he said, the water of the river was too low to run his mill. A few such tardy debtors threw James behind a good many dollars, and he saw no way to make up for it, and meet Mr. Alexander's claim at his coming.

He was in sore perplexity. It seemed to him like a breach of integrity not to pay every debt when due, especially the half-yearly installment on the farm.

It was a new obstacle to him, and he was slow in deciding what to do. The very day before he expected Mr. Alexander he spent among his friends trying borrow the amount, but in vain, and he passed a sleepless night with the trouble.

Finally, before daybreak of the day when his creditor was to arrive, he arose and called up his whole family, told them that he had solemnly decided to commit his difficulty to the Lord, and then and there they went to their knees.

But something else was going on in the early morning. Mr. Alexander had to accommodate himself to the railway trains, and leave home very early for Farmville in order to return the same day. Remembering James's hospitality, he felt no hesitation in reaching the farm in time for breakfast, especially as he had business with others of his former neighbors. Arriving at the station, his brisk walk of a mile or so brought him to the door sooner than he had expected, before it was full day.

A ruddy light shown from the windows as he approached, and when he came to the front steps the voice of prayer fell on his ears. Knowing of Mr. Rand's piety and believing in it, of course he would not interrupt the devotions, but waited at the door. He had not anticipated hearing so much as he did respecting business affairs.

"Thou knowest," said the voice in prayer, "that heretofore I have always made the payment when it was due. And I would do so this time if those in debt to me had paid me my dues. O Lord! I mean to be an honest man. But I do not know what to pray for because I do not know thy will. I would that I might pay my debt when my respected creditor arrives, and save my good name and the cause I profess from reproach and suspicion. Nevertheless, thy will be done."

Thus the prayer ran on until Mr. Alexander had heard enough to show him that unless James should unexpectedly realize money in answer to his petition the payment would not be made that day. At length, becoming restless as an eavesdropper, he pushed on to the village for his breakfast and business, proposing to call at the farm later in the day. In the course of the forenoon a business call took him in where a circle of men, among them Bacon, the butcher, were discussing Rand's views of prayers, and, thinking it might amuse, and perhaps instruct them, he related what he had heard on the doorstep, adding that he would be glad to possess such confidence in the Answerer of prayer that he could take common affairs to him. During the talk Bacon's thoughts were busy. He knew—that the rest of the circle did not—that Rand's failure to pay was based on his own delinquency in not paying Rand. He also knew of Hyde's and Grist's delinquencies; and as he walked across the street to his shop his convictions took such a shape that he resolved to help James out of his difficulty. He said to himself: "If he cared as little about paying a debt when due as I do, I shouldn't pity him; but when a man takes it to heart like that it's too bad. I'll see what can be done."

Going to his safe, he took out a roll of bank bills. Then, mounting to his buggy he drove to Grist's and then to Hyde's, talking to them as James Rand in his kindness of heart would not allow himself to do; and the outcome of it was that within an hour he was on his way to the farmer's with the amounts due from himself and the other two. How these men came to have the money when each had declared to James his inability to pay, I do not know; the ordinary business conscience is fearfully and wonderfully made.

Arriving at the farm and finding James he exclaimed:—

"Having an uncommon streak of luck this mornin', I've druv out to pay ye that bill I owe ye," and, drawing forth the roll of bank notes, the matter was settled at once. Then he said, with an air of entire indifference, "I happened to mention to Hyde and Grist that I was comin' out to pay ye a bill, and they asked me to bring along the cash, and pay theirs, too. See—how much does Hyde owe ye for that bark?"

James named the sum, as also the amount of Grist's bill, and received his dues for both.

"How does it happen," asked Rand, "that Mr. Hyde and Mr. Grist were in pocket to pay me to-day? Only two or three days ago they said it would be impossible."

"Oh, my turn o' luck brought luck to them, for I've just been payin' them as I hev you," replied Bacon.

An hour later Mr. Alexander called, and was paid off, tears standing in James's eyes as he did it for he attributed to the Lord his ability to pay, who, he said, had answered his prayer; every other resort having failed. Mr. Alexander smiled, kept his secret and went his way.

At the next prayer meeting James told his story of answered prayer and unbounded gratitude, utterly unconscious of what a number present knew—the part others had acted in the matter. When he sat down, a venerable local preacher arose, and in the most kindly but patronizing air said:—

"Of course, we are all glad to have Brother Rand exercise such faith in prayer; but probably he does not know that Mr. Alexander halted on his doorstep the other morning, and heard his prayer, and came into the village and told it. And then Mr. Bacon and certain others put together and paid their bills just for the joke of it, knowing that Brother Rand would charge it to prayer. We all believe in prayer, but the brother seems to be too credulous, and it might be well to investigate before publishing such a thing as he has done to-night."

James was bewildered at first, but rallied in a moment, and, rising to his feet, explained:—

"I have never pretended to know how God answers prayer; that is his business, not mine. But I have always believed, and still believe, that he answers prayer directly. In this case it seems he chose the most natural method, but it was his doings, none the less." At this moment his eye caught sight of Bacon and others of that sort in the back part of the room, and rallying with a gentle but fervid courage, he added: "I further believe that my friends who paid me, and enabled me to pay Mr. Alexander, did not do it altogether as a joke. I believe it was actuated by the Spirit of God, and they felt that as they owed me, and I had prayed for means to pay my debt, they ought to allow God to use them to answer my prayer. Human beings are his most natural channels for answering prayer."

And then he poured forth a glowing exhortation to those men to give God his dues, their own hearts, and learn the value of a sweet trust in the love and word of their heavenly Father.

When he resumed his seat, the room was as hushed for a moment as if empty. Then Mr. Bacon, a man who had never before been heard or scarcely seen in a religious meeting, arose and spoke.

"It is as Mr. Rand says. Both of my friends and myself, in paying him the other day, did it out of respect for prayer and esteem for a consistent Christian. It was no joke at all; or even if it was slightly so then, it is altogether serious now. I ask your prayers."

Hyde and Grist also arose, and asked to be prayed for. And from that hour began a revival that swept over Farmville with wonderful power.

James Rand has not loosened his grip on the promises or his confidence in prayer.—Selected.

I WILL TELL IT.—Many a physician has gained his practice by one patient telling others of his cure. Tell your neighbors that you have been to the hospital of Jesus, and been restored, though you hated all manner of meat, and drew near to the gates of death; and, maybe, a poor soul just in the same condition as yourself, will say, "This is a message from God to me." Above all publish the Lord's goodness for Jesus' sake. He deserves your honor. Will you receive his blessing, and then, like the nine lepers, give him no praise? Will you be like the woman in the crowd who was healed by touching the hem of his garment, and then would have slipped away? If so, I pray that the Master may say, "Somebody hath touched me," and may you be compelled to tell the truth, and say, "I was sore sick in soul, but I touched thee, O my blessed Lord, and I am saved, and to the praise of the glory of thy grace I will tell it, though devils should hear it; I will tell it, and make the world ring with it, according to my ability, to the praise and glory of thy saving grace."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

THE FUTURE OF OUR BOYS.

Mr. Noah Brooks, whom all boys will recognize as one of their best friends, and as one of the most interesting writers for the young people of this country, comments in a forcible way on a question of ever pressing importance in the current issue of the Epoch. It is, "What shall be done with our boys?" He finds the learned professions full, and many avenues of work either crowded or closed. The sea, which formerly gave occupation to thousands of brave American boys, is now sailed by vessels manned by foreigners. The employments once wholly filled by male youth are now largely occupied by women. These include clerical positions, private secretariats and the like. It is true that the new order of things makes competition sharper, and gives boys fewer chances; but this country is so large, and its interests and demands so multifarious that there is always something for every one to do. It stands to reason that all boys cannot achieve wealth and fame; but as the years go by the proportion of the fortunate ones will constantly grow larger. What is needed more than anything else to add to the usefulness and honor of coming generations is a higher and fuller appreciation of the dignity of labor.

We have in mind the experience of a Maryland boy who was left several thousand dollars by his father. He did not squander it, as many boys would have done, but he determined to spend it all, and he did it in such a way that it became the very best investment that he could have made. He went into one of the railway shops of the city at nominal wages, and paid the rest of his expenses out of his little fortune. He learned all he could in a practical way there, and then entered a first class school of technology. By the time he graduated his money was all gone, but he was able to earn his way. He kept on learning, and the consequence was that he soon rose to an excellent position, and to-day he is in receipt of a splendid salary, and is considered one of the best men in his profession in the country.

Mr. Roberts, the wonderfully able and astute president of the great Pennsylvania Railroad, started out as a chain carrier in a surveying party. Mr. Frank Thomson, the vice-president of the same road, was an apprentice in the Altoona shops. Mr. Samuel Spencer, of the B. & O., and one of the best railroad men in the country, was a clerk not many years ago at Camden Station. Instances innumerable could be cited, and the moral of them all would be to learn a trade, and to trust to industry and application for promotion. The future of our boys is the future of our country. We have not the slightest doubt that it will be brilliant and substantial; but the individual cases of marked success must always depend upon the capacity and industry of the individuals. Boys who look upon life as a serious problem, that must be worked out and not played out, are able to take care of themselves. The idlers, who expect to live on money which they do not earn, are the drones in the great national hive of industry.—Scientific American.

BE CAREFUL.

Be careful what you sow, boys!
For seed will surely grow, boys!

The dew will fall,
The rain will splash,
The clouds will darken,
And the sunshine flash;
And the boy who sows good seed to-day
Shall reap the crop to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, girls!
For every seed will grow, girls!

Though it may fall
Where you cannot know,
Yet in Summer and shade
It will surely grow;
And the girl who sows good seed to-day
Shall reap the crop to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, boys!
For the weeds will surely grow, boys!

If you plant bad seed
By the wayside high
You must reap the harvest
By and by;

And the boy who sows wild oats to-day
Must reap the wild oats to-morrow.

Be careful what you sow, girls!
For all the bad will grow, girls!

And the girl who now,
With a careless hand,
Is scattering thistles
Over the land,
Must know that whatever she sows to-day
She must reap the same to-morrow.

Then let us sow good seeds now!
And not the briars and weeds now!

That when the harvest
For us shall come,
We may have good sheaves
To carry home.

For the seed we sow in our lives to-day
Shall grow and bear fruit to-morrow.

A WORD TO THE BOYS.

If we are to have drunkards in the future, some of them are to come from the boys to whom I am writing; and I ask you again if you want to be one of them? No! of course you don't.

Well, I have a plan for you that is just as sure to save you from such a fate as the sun is to rise to-morrow morning. It never failed; it never will fail; and I think it worth knowing. Never touch liquor in any form. That is the plan, and it is not only worth knowing, but it is worth putting in practice.

I know you don't drink now, and it seems to you as if you never would. But your temptation will come, and it probably will come in this way: You will find yourself, some time, with a number of companions, and they will have a bottle of wine on the table. They will drink and offer it to you. They will regard it as a manly practice, and very likely they will look upon you as a milksop if you don't indulge with them. Then what will you do? Eh, what will you do? Will you say, "No, no! none of that stuff for me! I know a trick worth half a dozen of that!" or will you take the glass with your own common sense protesting and your conscience making the whole draught bitter and a feeling that you have damaged yourself, and then go on with a hot head and a skulking soul that at once begins to make apologies for itself and will keep doing so during all its life? Boys, do not become drunkards.—Dr. Holland.

MAKING AN EXPERIMENT.

Let us make an experiment. Here is a boy ten years old who has never used tobacco.

"Charley, will you help us to make an experiment?"

"I will, sir."

"Here is a piece of plug tobacco as large as a pea. Put it in your mouth; chew it. Don't let one drop go down your throat, but spit every drop of juice into that spittoon. Keep on chewing, spitting, chewing, spitting."

Before he is done with that little piece of tobacco, simply squeezing the juice out of it, without swallowing a drop, he will lie here on the platform in a cold, death-like perspiration. Put your finger upon his wrist. There is no pulse. He will seem for two or three hours to be dying.

Again, steep a plug of tobacco in a quart of water, and bathe the neck and back of a calf troubled with vermin. You will kill the vermin, and if not very careful, you will kill the calf too. These experiments show that tobacco, in its ordinary state, is an extremely powerful poison.

Go to the drug store; begin with the upper shelves and take down every bottle. Then open every drawer; you cannot find a single poison (except some very rare ones) which taken into the mouth of that ten-year-old-boy, and not swallowed, will produce such deadly effects.—Dio Lewis.

TEMPERANCE.

THE BAR-ROOM.

Home of the heartless, where misery reigns,
Fount of pollution, that virtue disdains;
Thou cradle of sickness, the nurse of the vile,
Whose faces are never uplift with a smile;
Where the whispers of tender affection are lost
In the hoarse imprecation and bacchanal's toast;
Where the friends of foul passion and fury deface
The glory of women, and manhood disgrace!
Reeking up from the floor where men-demons have trod, Comes a voice that declares thee "Forsaken of God!"

—Frederic Wright.

HIGH LICENSE IN CHICAGO.

The Inter-Ocean, a while since, in discussing the beer question as it relates to the city of Chicago, says: "The increase in the consumption of beer in Chicago seems to keep pace with the increase of population, in spite of all the work done by temperance people generally. The consumption in barrels of thirty gallons each, in this city for the past six years was as follows: 1880, 650,726; 1881, 744,566; 1882, 872,228; 1883, 933,652; 1884, 1,055,733; 1885, 1,115,623. The amount for the fiscal year ending May 1st, 1886, is 1,157,282 barrels, and the estimate for the calendar year of 1886 is over 1,200,000 barrels. It may even exceed that, for, while 85,000 barrels were drank in May, 1885, over 102,000 barrels were consumed during the same month in 1886. Most of this beer is produced in Chicago, which consumed the entire product of its twenty-three breweries and imported 265,908 barrels last year from Milwaukee. The beer is sold to the retail dealers at $8 per barrel with 25 per cent off, the actual price being $6 per barrel. Hence it will be seen that the wholesale cost of the beer drank in this city is $6,943,692. Some interesting figures can be obtained from the data given. The 1,157,282 barrels drank in the last fiscal year equalled 34,718,460 gallons, and about 520,776,900 glasses. At five cents a glass this would sell for $26,038,450. If Chicago contains 750,000 people this would amount to a consumption of eight barrels or 3,600 glasses per year for each family, being 720 glasses per year for every man, woman and child in the city. The cost of this at five cents per glass would be $34.70 for every person, or about $173.50 per year for every family. The figures are rather large, however, as most of the saloons do a heavy 'bucket trade,' supplying families with the article by the quart or gallon at five cents a pint. If these beer barrels were set side by side in a straight line they would reach over six hundred miles. If piled up end on end they would extend eight hundred and twenty miles high.

To this the Lever adds:

The money every year paid for beer alone in Chicago, would buy the following articles which would go very far towards relieving the destitution and want that now exists in the city:

500,000 barrels of flour.....	$5.00	$2,500,000

ONLY HIS WAY.—A handsomely dressed man, much the worse for wine, in endeavoring to walk down a flight of marble stairs leading to the office of one of our big hotels, fell to the foot and battered his new silk hat, tore his clothes, and cut and disfigured his face in a frightful manner, in his rapid descent. When assistance was tendered him by a dozen sympathetic people, he was much disgusted and waved them away. He would not acknowledge by the acceptance of a helping hand that he was in a condition calling for aid, but kept his dignity and independence intact by exclaiming: "Go 'bout your business—nosing the masser; I always come down stairs that way!"—N. Y. Times.

General Clinton B. Fisk will deliver a number of addresses in favor of the amendment in Tennessee, during the month of June.

It is reported that the United States Brewers' Association have pledged to contribute $5,000,000 to the Texas campaign, if the liquor dealers of the State will raise $500,000.

Statistics show that insanity due to alcohol has increased in Paris from 302 cases in 1872 to 584 in 1883. In fourteen years 5,063 out of 18,000 insane became so from the use of alcohol.

Lawrence has had no saloons for two years and the laws are respected. Last month as a result only one case was on the docket of the police court and the average is only from one to three cases per month.

The annual report of the inspectors of the State prisons of Maine, shows the proportion of the prisoners of the State is but one to every 1,591 of the population, while in New York State it is one to every 577; in New Jersey, one in every 707; Massachusetts, one in every 487; Iowa, one in every 2,003.

The sheriffs of Iowa held a convention in the early part of 1887 and the published report of the convention gives it as the unanimous judgment of these men (there were fifty sheriffs present) that the prohibitory laws have lessened the criminal business of the State over one-half.

The Bar, a liquor paper of New York, says: The prohibition movement has made such progress that not only has it imposed its tyrannical laws upon several of the greatest States in the Union, but figured threateningly in national politics, and made the amendment to the federal Constitution possible and probable.

Senator-Elect Reagan and Senator Maxey, of Texas, are the latest notable converts to prohibition. Both of these gentlemen have come out boldly in favor of the annihilation of the saloon, and announce themselves as ready to do all in their power to aid in the amendment campaign, now being carried on in that State.

Here is a short item from the South-west (liquor). Yet they say prohibition does not prohibit: It behooves the friends of liberty in Kentucky to be on the alert. The prohibitionists have gained a foothold in sixty-six counties out of one hundred and eighteen. Thirteen counties have gone entirely "dry," twenty-two Democratic and thirteen Republican.

The Governor of Iowa has remitted $200 of the $300 fine placed upon John Spilletts of Whittemore, Kossuth county, for alleged violation of the prohibitory law. It had been shown that Spilletts kept a temperance billiard-hall, but that a crowd of drunken roughs forced their way in and compelled him to open a bottle of whisky, which they furnished, and deal it out to the crowd. For this offence he was tried and fined, and the Governor considers the mitigating circumstances sufficient to merit a remission of most of the fine.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The woodsmen's evangelist, William F. Davis of Chelsea, Mass., has sent out his annual report of work for the information of those who contribute to this cause. His seventh season in Christian mission work was among the pineries of Michigan and Wisconsin. He was engaged six months and a half, journeying some 9,500 miles, preaching in every class of structure and in the open air in seven different States and one Territory.

—The First United Presbyterian church, Monmouth, Rev. Dr. Hanna, pastor, is preparing to erect a new church which is to be built of stone upon the grounds where the old church now stands; the cost is $19,000. Work will begin as soon as a certain amount is received. One benevolent member, it is said, will give $5,000.

—Rev. R. W. McBride, missionary to the Warm Springs Indians of Eastern Oregon, has returned to the States, and is lecturing on missionary work in that western field. He is son of Mr. William McBride of Elmira, Illinois, a most earnest friend of the reform represented by the N. C. A.

—Rev. George A. Milton, late of Hastings, Nebraska, has accepted a call to the Prospect Street Congregational church, Elgin, Ill.

—The Southern Baptist Convention, the largest religious body in the South, assembled in Louisville, Ky., Thursday morning. It is composed of delegates from missionary societies and churches of the Baptist denomination in various parts of the United States, each delegate representing $100 received by the treasurers of the boards on or before the last day of April in the current year.

—The Board of Missions of the Methodist Protestant church of the United States was in session at Tiffin, Ohio, last week. It was decided to establish a mission at Magaya, Japan, and the Rev. L. L. Albright of North Carolina, will be sent to that field.

—Some 150 converts joined the colored Baptist churches of Memphis last month, a considerable number of them entering the churches of brethren Countee and Brinkley.

—The special services which were held in three of the churches of New Concord, Ohio, resulted in the conversion of 213 persons who have connected themselves with the churches.

—The Presbyterian church in Littleton, Col., Dr. T. E. Bliss, pastor, is congratulating itself on having paid the last dollar of debt on its neat little church. It was erected and furnished, at an expense of $5,000, by an Episcopal society, which proved unable to sustain it, and subsequently sold it to the Presbyterians. Dr. Bliss resides in Denver and is the leader among reform Christians in that city.

—Two colored missionaries with their wives left New York recently for Africa, one of whom, Rev. B. F. Wilberforce, is the son of an African prince. He was educated at Dayton, O., and after serving five years in Africa, returned to this country for the purpose of taking a course in medicine.

—In the twenty years from 1853 to 1873 Chinese communicants in Protestant missions went from 350 to 8,000, and now number upward of 22,000, and about 100,000 habitual attendants upon Christian services.

—Of the 500 Chinese now living in Philadelphia, about one-quarter attend Christian Sabbath-schools. One of the number is studying for the ministry, and expects to return to China as a missionary. As an illustration of the unselfish spirit of the Chinese, it is mentioned that when the news of the Charleston earthquake reached Shanghai, the China residents promptly subscribed $100 as their offering to the stricken city.

—The next General Assembly of the Presbyterian church meets in Omaha, Neb., Thursday, the 19th inst. The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church meets in Philadelphia, Wednesday, May 25th, at 7:30 p. m. The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church meets in Newburg, New York, on Wednesday, June 1, at 2 p. m.

—The theological department of Augustana College (Swedish), under the instruction of Rev. Dr. Hasselquist and Professors Olsen and Wiedner, now numbers 47 students, and the college has upwards of 160 students. The Rev. Professor Olsen has been elected vice-president of the college, and in view of his new duties, has resigned the charge of his congregation in Davenport. A second son of Rev. Lars P. Esbjorn, the first professor of the seminary, who has been studying in Europe, has been called to a professorship in the college. The addition of the conservatory of music, and the admission of ladies to the class-rooms and to the lectures of the college professors, will attract many who are now studying in other institutions not of their own church.

—The Presbyterians are making active preparations for the founding of a theological seminary at Ann Arbor, Mich. A society has been organized to that end, and a wealthy lady has deeded them one of the best locations in the city for a site, beside giving them in her will a fine house and lot adjoining.

—A correspondent of the Christian at Work at Northampton, Mass., writes: "To see a noted novelist on the boards of an opera-house is an unusual sight. Yet it is the privilege of Northampton people to listen each Sabbath afternoon to Geo. W. Cable, who meets his fellow-citizens as a Bible teacher. The object is two-fold—to aid teachers in the preparation of their lesson for the coming Sunday and to interest those who are not church-goers, and to meet skeptics and others who do not recognize the Bible as the Supreme Word."

—The seventeenth annual convention of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, of the Presbyterian church, was held at the First Presbyterian church, Cleveland, Ohio. Delegates were present from nearly fifty localities in New Jersey, Maryland, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, West Virginia, Tennessee, California, and Ohio. One hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars were spent in mission work last year.

—In the town of Koror, Austria, where the Catholic and Jesuit priests have made themselves insupportable by their insolence, over forty families have passed over to Protestantism amid a solemn ceremonial which was witnessed with approval by thousands of citizens. It is only by the opposition of Protestants that papists are forced to check their tyranny over their own people.

—In a Chinese mission school of the United Brethren at Portland, Oregon, more than fifty pupils have professed faith in Christ and united with the church.

—Jones and Small began services in Minneapolis Sunday, April 24th. The meetings are held in the Exposition Building which has been fitted up for the occasion with seats for from four to five thousand and plenty of standing-room. Mr. Excell leads the singing, a chorus choir of one hundred voices assisting him. The first meetings were greatly crowded. The preaching was in the usual style of these eccentric men. They are here under the auspices of the Methodist ministers and churches of the city. The general Ministers' Union of the city declined to invite them.

—The twenty-seventh international convention of the Young Men's Christian Association will be held at San Francisco, May 11-15, and the General Secretaries' Conference at Oakland the week following. The Chicago delegation will consist of the Rev. Herick Johnson, D. D., the Rev. C. M. Morton, Professor C. Gilbert Wheeler, W. J. Miller, J. E. Brown, W. W. Van Arsde, Samuel Hahn, William Cook and A. T. Hemingway.

—The unusual uprising of young Christians with a purpose of entering the foreign mission fields of the world is not only attracting general attention but it is one of the significant signs of the times in connection with the progress of Christianity. It is to be hoped that it will extend until it reaches and influences all the churches in the land and every member thereof. The churches are the sources of missionary power and success; by their prayers and through their contributions must the world be conquered for Christ, and it is necessary that the "tidal wave" which is higher than ever before reach those whose business it is to send messengers into the heathen world, as well as those others who are responding to a great question in the emphatic words, "Send me!" Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, in a recent magazine paper, has been discussing the subject of the "Student Movement Toward Foreign Missions," in which he gives an account of the remarkable interest which has recently been displayed in foreign missions by the students of colleges and seminaries. He makes the statement that ninety-two institutions report that 1,525 students have offered themselves as willing and desirous to be foreign missionaries. Of these upward of twelve hundred are young men and upward of three hundred young women. And besides this large number there are many other young men and women outside of institutions who are ready to find their life work in the mission fields of heathendom. Dr. McCosh is amazed at this uprising—for uprising it is in every respect—of the young people of the land, and feels that all who love Christ should combine and take advantage of this great opportunity. He asks, "has any such offering of living young men and women been presented in our age, in our country, in any age or in any country since the days of Pentecost?"—Standard.

LITERATURE.

INGERSOLL. ANSWERED FROM THE BIBLE, and Ingersoll against himself. By Rev. O. M. Owen. pp. 228. Paper 50 cts. Published by the author, Utica, N. Y.

There are many and voluminous replies to the individual lecturer, who seems now to have retired from the platform where so long he played the mountebank and attempted the ruin of the fairest hopes of the human race. But the author of this work, not finding a review of all of Ingersoll's lectures and writings comprised in any of these answers, has undertaken the task. Without attempting any extended original argument the work is a very useful compilation of the Scripture passages which stand against the swelling tide of rhetoric and ridicule as adamantine rocks stand against the froth of the waves. Besides these it has a well selected array of arguments from H. L. Hastings, Miss Whately, Kitto, Bishop Horne, Joseph Cook, the writings of missionaries, encyclopedias, etc. Without many of the attractions of scholarship, it is on the other hand a book for plain and practical people and is especially adapted for the young. It should be handy by in every place where Ingersollism is accepted to any extent. Rev. Mr. Owen is editor of the Life Boat, a small monthly devoted to religion and the temperance reform.

Another pamphlet on Ingersoll is "Ingersollism in its True Colors" by Rev. M. Rubi, published by the Catholic Publication Society of Buffalo, and intended to answer the more obvious inquiries arising from the arguments of Ingersoll and the appearance of popularity that accompanies them, and showing the fallacy of his teachings and their pernicious effects upon society.

THE LIFE OF JESUS, according to extra-canonical sources. By Rev. B. Pick, Ph. D. pp. 189. Price 50 cents. John B. Alden, New York.

Dr. Pick undertook this compilation of legends pertaining to the human life of Jesus Christ because there was nothing of the kind in the English language. It would have been better to remain so. The investigations of the curious or the skeptical have resulted in several compilations of spurious gospel histories, apocryphal Acts, Epistles and Revelations. There are some fifty of these spurious gospels, which reveal the industry of the devil in attempting counterfeits. To ordinary people the time spent in ransacking these foolish stories is worse than lost. They may possibly at times be of some use to a student. The book is published in attractive form, as Mr. Alden does all his work.

The May Century opens with two profusely illustrated papers of Egyptology, the special subject being the mummy of Pharaoh the Oppressor (the Pharaoh of the Bible), otherwise Rameses II., which (together with those of other Egyptian kings) was discovered in 1881 by Professor Maspero, but not identified until June, 1886. Soon after this date Mr. Edward L. Wilson visited the spot in company with Professor Maspero and Brugsch Bey, from the latter of whom he had a personal account of the discovery, which Mr. Wilson here records, supplementing it by interesting photographs made by himself. The second paper, by Professor John A. Paine, consists of a comparison of portraits of Rameses, including some new and interesting observations confirmatory of the identification, and setting forth clearly the historical and archaeological bearings of the discovery. Mr. Paine arrives at the conclusion that Pharaoh was really not an Egyptian in race or blood, but was descended from the Shepherd Kings of Asiatic origin, thus confirming the Biblical statement that Israel in Egypt was oppressed by an Assyrian. Professor Paine gives also an interesting and curious account of Pharaoh's daughter. Together the two papers form an important chapter of interest to all students of history, and especially to students of the Bible. This number contains the first of several papers by Professor W. O. Atwater, of Wesleyan University, on "The Chemistry of Foods and Nutrition," being specifically devoted to "the composition of our bodies and our food." Mr. Atwater has perhaps made a more thorough investigation of this subject than any other American student, having conducted many analyses in this department for the Fish Commission. His conclusions, which have a direct bearing upon the Labor Question as well as upon all questions of hygiene, are accompanied by graphic charts exhibiting the chemical composition of common articles of diet. The subject is thus invested with a domestic as well as a scientific interest. The Lincoln History, by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, advances to the consideration of the Border Conflict, treating events closely related to Lincoln's contemporary and future political action. The special topics are "Kansas in the Civil War," "Jefferson Davis on Rebellion," and "The Presidential Conventions of 1856." Among the illustrations are portraits of Wilson Shannon, James H. Lane, Governor Charles Robinson, John W. Geary, Philip St. George Cooke, President Fillmore, and Fremont and Dayton. Other articles in this popular number are "A Glimpse of Washington Irving at Home," "Personal Recollections of Louis Blanc," "Among the Apaches" and an account of the campaign and battles about Chattanooga.

In the May number of Demorest's Monthly is begun a new department, "Sanitarian," its purpose being to advise our mothers and daughters how they may keep healthy. We hope the three grand remedies will not be neglected—godliness, contentment and useful industry. In the Prohibition Department, "Prohibition in Great Britain" shows what is being done on the "other side" in that line. An arrangement has been made, by which a purchaser or subscriber is entitled to the selection of a pattern from the present or previous numbers of the magazine.

General Adam Badeau tells the story of "Sherman's March to the Sea" in the May St. Nicholas, and it reads like a tale of adventure—which in fact it is—the biggest adventure in modern times. It is illustrated by Theodore Davis, who was with General Sherman on the march, and others. There is also begun in this number a three-part story of life at the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, by a recent graduate. There is another collection of "Dog Stories," one for girls, by Celia Thaxter; one for boys, by E. P. Roe, and three for everybody by other people. Alice Wellington Rollins has a bright sketch of a "Rainy May Day in Central Park," illustrated by Jessie Curtis Shepherd.

The Swiss Cross is a magazine for lovers and observers of nature. The current number is redolent with the perfumes of spring. The article on "The Pitch Lake of Trinidad" is interesting and full of information for many. A series of articles entitled Bird-Studies begins with "Definitions and Characters of a Bird." The Late Ericpook from Kilauae, by Prof. C. H. Hitchcock, is finely illustrated. Early Man in America gives an entertaining description and history of the mounds in Mississippi and Ohio and their builders. $1.50. New York.

Science for April 29 gives its readers as a supplement two fine lithographic maps which will be of value to all who are interested in Indian history and ethnology. One of these, "The Linguistic Families of the Gulf States," defines the localities inhabited by the early Indian tribes in our Southern States. The "Town Map of the Old Creek Country" will also be of value and interest to many. $5. New York.

The May number of Babyhood overflows with good things for young mothers. The opening article on "The Diet of Nursing Mothers," by Edward L. Partridge, M.D., show the advantages of lactation to the mother, dispelling some groundless objections to certain articles of food, and emphasizing the value of others to both mother and child. Dr. W. B. Canfield discusses "The Development of Speech in Infants," from the first utterances till the formation of the child's vocabulary, with its defects and peculiarities. Dr. Yale treats a much debated question in showing how prematurely-born children may often be saved by care and attention. $1.50 a year. New York.

The Phrenological Journal for May, will interest all admirers of grand intellects with the opening sketch of the life and work of Ludwig Windthorst, the German statesman. The portrait shows a typical German face of great dignity. "Head Measurements" is an illustrated article of use to students of Phrenology. "What One Sees in Jamaica," "Short-hand for the Many," "Health Papers," "Temperature of Dwelling Houses," "Hypnotism," are other articles of interest. Among the editorials we especially commend to all smokers that one which relates to smoking in public.

Trifet's Monthly Galaxy of Music is a magazine of vocal and instrumental music of popular character. The April number republishes some favorites from Mendelssohn, Leslie, Barley and Schubert along with original pieces by less noted authors. Each number contains from 40 to 48 pages of music, at the remarkably low price of 10 cents each.

THE CURE OF MR. NEEDHAM.

Some of our readers have lately inquired about cures for cancer and other diseases of the blood. Some years ago we met Mr. D. Needham, already then well along in years but hale and hearty as indeed he is to this day. His story is an interesting one. Some thirty-five years ago he was living on a farm, and one very warm summer day while carrying rails he received a bruise upon his shoulder. The injury soon healed, leaving a scar. Thirteen years afterward a cancer fastened upon this scar. The cancer developed rapidly after eating buckwheat cakes freely for two weeks. It was soon only too evident that it was a bad case of malignant cancer. The scar grew purple and became sensitive. Itching and sharp pains were felt. He consulted eminent physicians in Philadelphia and New York; every one pronounced it cancer of the scirrhus type and advised either the knife or the plaster as the only possible hope of relief. Fortunately, a friend learned of his trouble, and advised him to drink red clover tea. He began taking the clover tea in June, 1864, the cancer having made its appearance the previous November. A beneficial effect was experienced almost immediately and in a few weeks the pain and soreness mostly disappeared.

Upon the upper part of the chest and on the shoulder scars are still visible (as is the case in scirrhus cancer). Professionals who examined the case, and his relatives and friends, have no doubt but that it was a genuine case of cancer. It would probably have proved fatal, as so many cases have, but for the free use of the clover tea. He also has been accustomed to wear a cloth over it, which he moistens with water slightly warm when it becomes dry. Mr. Needham also abstains from eating pork, buckwheat and tomatoes, as he believes they tend to produce cancer. He pays great attention to his diet.

It is a great thing that the useful life of one good man has thus been extended. But perhaps the best thing about it is that he and his two sons have shown their confidence in the clover as a practical remedy and have made it their business for some eight years to prepare the clover properly and furnish it to druggists and others for the good of afflicted mankind in general. The fact that the demand for it is steadily increasing is another proof of its genuine merits.

We have used it in our own family for young an old. It is not unpleasant to take, and we have so much confidence in Mr. Needham and his sons that we are confident they offer only the pure article. Other parties, knowing the value of clover, have gone into the business in some parts of the country. Sometimes it is not gathered with care and various grasses and herbs are mixed with it. But Mr. Needham, and more recently his sons, arrange for their own gathering and watch carefully in its curing and preservation. We are assured they offer the pure article whether in the solid or liquid form.

BUSINESS.

SUBSCRIPTION LETTERS.

The following have made remittances of money to the Cynosure from May 2 to May 7 inclusive:

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for three weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. Could you make better use of a dollar of the Lord's money than to send to ten of your friends three copies of the Cynosure?

Put me down as one willing and DETERMINED to try to get Cynosure subscriptions before the year closes. I will do the best I can. I wish I was able to get a half dozen of the "180 testimonies" framed to hang up in P. O.'s and depots. It would do good. You may send me one of the "180 testimonies." Yours, as ever,

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY TESTIMONIES

against the Secret Empire by ministers, statesmen, educators, journalists and others, on good paper, and illustrated with the portraits of the following eminent reformers, John G. Fee, Charles G. Finney, Geo. F. Pentecost, Adam Crooks, Nathan Brown, Philo Carpenter, Thurlow Weed and Wm. Wirt. Would you like to get them for the public library? Have them framed and hung up where the young men may see what the good and great of our country have to say upon the despotic oppression and false religion of the lodge.

Any one who will write a postal card, saying, "PUT ME DOWN AS ONE OF THE CYNOSURE AGENTS FOR 1887. I will try to enlarge the Cynosure subscription list in my field during the coming year," shall receive the Testimonies by return mail.

Let old and new agents write at once, and any suggestions as to how you can be helped in your particular field will be carefully considered.

The few fine cabinet photographs of Prest J. Blanchard which we had, having been disposed of so quickly, arrangements have now been made by which all can be supplied at this office who wish them. Price postpaid 25 cents each.

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATEROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and help as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and beautiful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

FLOWER NOTES.

[From Vick's Magazine.]

A NEW METHOD WITH PANSIES.

Last season I tried growing Pansies in a new manner; at least, it was new to me. We sowed a large quantity of seed quite early, but the drought came on before the plants had attained much size, and all through the summer they just managed to live, and that was all; indeed, they would have died long before fall came with the long deferred rains, had we not watered them daily. But the water we applied did not seem to produce the same results that follow the application of moisture in a natural manner, and the young plants stood still. But when it began to get cooler, and an occasional rain came, the plants began to grow. I wondered what effect pinching back would have on them. They were inclined to make a growth of one or two branches only when they got started. So I went to work and pinched off the ends of all of them. This induced other branches to start, and these were pinched off when they had grown a few inches. In this way I had some compact little plants rather than the usual slender, sprawly specimens. I think this treatment would be of benefit to the Pansy under any circumstances, and I shall practice the pinching system the coming season. It is a characteristic of this most charming flower to send out but few branches, and these are so slender, as a general thing, that they are easily broken. If the plant will adapt itself to pinching, as I think it will, during its summer growth, I do not see why we may not have bushy, compact plants, with more flowers from them than we usually get from plants allowed to grow to suit themselves, because there will be more branches to produce flowers on.

VIOLETS.

"How is it that my Violets only give me an occasional bloom or two; they were put into a frame in October?" In replying to this question, I usually ask another, viz: "Were your plants bristling with buds when they were put into your frame?" If not, the frame will have no effect as regards making them produce blooms. The protection of the frame assists the development of the buds with which the plants should be furnished previous to their being transferred to their winter quarters. It is essential that young plants should be grown every year, and therefore runners must be taken about the middle of April, when there is usually plenty to be had with a root or two attached to them. Care should, however, be taken to have runners and not divisions of the old plant. The runners should be pricked out about a foot apart in a partially shaded border which has been well worked, and dressed with manure from an old hot bed, in which a considerable quantity of leaves has been used. They will be found to quickly establish themselves, and will in a short time grow into fine plants. All that is required through the summer is to keep them clean by giving them a frequent hoeing, and to go through them two or three times and cut off new runners, which they will throw out rather freely. If these attentions are annually given them, the result will be a prodigious harvest of blooms for eight months of the year.

ROSES FOR AMATEURS.

To enumerate or give a list of what Roses I have would occupy too much valuable space, but I have often felt that I would rather purchase a Rose if I knew some amateur had handled it and been successful with it, so I write out a few that are really good and to be had from any first-class florist who has them in stock. But don't believe, even if some tell you, that you will get one of the first-class novelties for a dime, for you won't. You will know why, dear beginner, when you try to propagate them. I found Etiole de Lyon all "my fancy painted it;" it is beautiful, such a thrifty grower. Among the dark velvety red varieties is Queen of Bedders, a free bloomer, and just what you want. Is there anything to beat the old reliable Hermosa, a rose pink beauty! Sunset did not do well this year, but as it is the first perhaps it will do better next year; but it gave me one glorious flower, and that was bliss enough. If it had died then I could have even forgiven it, but it lived and grew well. I must mention Niphotos, a lovely, pure white, its buds are such a beautiful shape, all one needs in bouquets. I could mention many more full as good, but must hurry along. The new Polyantha, Perle d'Or, is very pretty, "coppery gold, changing to fawn and salmon." It bloomed very well although only a tiny plant when received, first of May.

To sum up, there is no bed of plants for so small an outlay of money which will give a person so rich a reward, or so much solid interest on the money invested, in the way of pleasures and home-like joys, as a well-cared-for Rose bed.

KEEPING THE FLOWER GARDEN.

A small garden with a few well chosen, well grown flowering plants, if kept in scrupulous order and neatness, will be far more gratifying to its owner, and to his friends, than a large collection of plants without order, arrangement or neatness. Of course, there is a choice in plants, and a garden of the common flowers, well kept, is far more creditable than a jungle of expensive novelties, left to care for themselves. "Good keeping" in the garden is equivalent to "good keeping" in the house. Both depend upon hundreds of small things, easily done if attended to at the right time. In a large garden a special tool house will be found most useful, but in a small one a place for the tools must be found in some other building. The wall of a woodshed or of a barn, or a suitable, large, cupboard-like structure, built against a board fence or a building, may be made—indeed, any place that will hold the tools. It is far more important that the tools are brought back to their places after using, than that their places should be showy. In every garden, even a very small one, there occur various materials, collectively known as "rubbish," which must be disposed of. It is a mistake to have a rubbish heap in some corner, and throw all the refuse matter from the garden upon it. There should be at least three places of deposit for the different kinds of rubbish, if the premises are large enough, otherwise it must be removed altogether.—American Agriculturist for May.

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, and how to make the 'more general application of it.' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are hitherto up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable property."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. It is not the heat that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons

It treats of

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown like mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have hitherto been clothed. A current literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Onondaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 6 cents.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, 'E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side.

Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the truth and water of life, but whose efforts wish only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"This book is so truly and reverently devoted to the spiritual life in its criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who efforts wish to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any. The author, from his experience, tells truth in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held at BATAVIA, N. Y., September 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-Masonic document. The declaration of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavits—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. K. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument erected by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christianity" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on "The Character of Freemasonry" by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on "The Freedmen and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

FARM NOTES.

POULTRY NOTES.

Cochins, says the Farmers' Magazine, are the best for securing early sitters.

As the season advances feed less Indian corn and more wheat screenings and barley.

If you will confine the mother hen in a proper coop, and allow the young chicks and ducklings the free run of the garden, they will exterminate all insect pests. Young ducks are preferable of the two.

A contemporary says: "To 'cure rump,' look out that it doesn't get started in your flocks. It is helped by colds, dampness, exposure to rough weather and neglect. Prevent its presence by constant good care, good shelter, and dry, clean houses."

It is well known that when hens steal their nests the most of the eggs hatch. The reason is, the eggs are not only kept warm, being near the ground, but the eggs also gather the requisite moisture to assist hatching. It is well, therefore, to occasionally spray the eggs with tepid water, when the nests are on a raised floor.

A saturated solution of boric acid is recommended to be always on hand for use in the poultry yard. For swelled head and eyes, applied with a soft sponge, it is one of the best remedies known. A teaspoonful poured down the throat twice a day is an excellent remedy for rump, being a mixture of equal parts of the acid and powdered borax—a teaspoonful once a day—has been successful in cases of cholera.

Experiments made during the months of June and July with clutches of chicks shows that all that were given plenty of shade are growing rapidly, and the broods that ran in the hot sun are most all dead, and the ones still alive are very tender and grow slowly. There is but one conclusion: Chicks hatched during the summer months must be kept in the shade, or, at least, out of the hot sun, if you want them to thrive.

Gravel serves the same purpose with birds that teeth do with quadrupeds. An authority says the grinding in the gizzard may be heard by placing the ear near the fowls when their stomachs are full and digestion is taking place. The sound of the gravel stones grinding and rubbing against the grain is especially audible in the case of ducks that are about half grown, at which time they are increasing in size very fast, and digestion proceeds very rapidly.

KEEP A FEW BEES.

There are, it is computed, over 400,000 persons in the United States who keep bees. It seems but a small number out of a population of 60,000,000 people, about one-half of whom are living on farms, large and small. There is but little care necessary in the management of two or three hives of bees but what may be attended to by the feminine portion of the family in the absence of the men folks.

Many persons are deterred from keeping bees from the fear of being stung. There is really little danger of this, unless bees are roughly handled. A bee never stings if it can be avoided. If pinched, or if in handling they are caught between the skin and clothes and frightened, they will sting. There is, however, no necessity for this, neither is it necessary that boys be allowed to rile up the bees. The same discipline that restrains in other mischief should hold here. Bees are more often made ugly by the mischief of boys than by any other cause. There is no reason why every farmer should not care for a few swarms of bees. The failures come from attempting too much at once. Begin with a single swarm, learn the habits and management of bees, go slowly, stop if you choose at five or six swarms as the ultimate number. Do not invest in fancy varieties with a view of getting suddenly rich by selling queens, nor in patent hives because some slick talking agent extols the money in his special hive. Go slow. Do not keep more colonies than can naturally forage over your territory, and you will never regret having entered into bee keeping.

Readers ordering goods advertising in the CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE will do well to mention the paper when ordering as we have reason to believe that our subscribers treat the readers well.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Duesberg, Past Master Unity, No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Remarks on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1838. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able and complete exposure of the charges against secret societies, with a full and complete exposure of the charges against secret societies, with a full and complete exposure of the charges against secret societies. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engraving showing the impostor, dressed in candidate's sign, degrees, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, $1.00—40 cts.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. C. Zellego. Containing the opinions of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 80 cents each; per dozen, $8.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The public debt statement shows a reduction during April of $19,000,000.

United States consuls in Canada report that the interstate commerce law is operating disastrously to the export and import trade in that country, and that our trade interests in that quarter are threatened with serious consequences.

The United States steamship Galena, bearing the prehistoric statue secured at the Easter Islands has arrived. Commander Chester has notified the officers of the Smithsonian Institute of the arrival of the statue, which is reported to be in excellent condition.

LEGISLATIVE.

The bill to adopt capital punishment for murder and rape was defeated Friday in the Michigan Senate by a vote of 19 to 13. The bill establishing a State constabulary to enforce the liquor laws was passed by the House, and given immediate effect.

The Connecticut House Friday morning passed a bill fixing a uniform license of $400 for strong liquors and $150 for beer, wine, etc.

A member of the Alabama State Legislature, named Joseph Compton, who has led an exemplary life for a dozen years, suddenly disappeared when he was recently recognized as an escaped convict from the North Carolina Penitentiary, having been sentenced for twenty-four years for killing a revenue officer. Hearing that officers were after him, Compton took to the woods, and has not been seen since.

An anti-anarchy bill passed the Illinois House Thursday, 91 to 30. Thirty-one members were either absent or refrained from voting.

The Interstate Commerce Commission met at Memphis last week hearing testimony on behalf of the Louisville and Nashville and Nashville and Chattanooga Railroads, and points traversed by those roads.

CHICAGO.

Judge Blodgett Friday sentenced Colonel W. B. Bolton, the defaulting superintendent of second-class matter of the postoffice, to two years in the penitentiary.

W. C. De Pauw, capitalist and philanthropist, of New Albany, Ind., died at the Palmer House. Mr. De Pauw was stricken with apoplexy in the Polk Street depot on Wednesday night.

The Union Steel Company shut down their steel and rail mill at midnight Wednesday. Seven hundred and fifty men were locked out on the strength of a strike of twenty-eight drillers, chip-pers and filers.

Queen Kapiolani and suite of the Sandwich Islands, arrived from the West, by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Road, and at once left for Washington. The members of the suite are Governor C. P. Iauka, General Dominis, Colonel J. H. Boyd, aid-de-camp on King Kalakaua's staff, Colonel S. Nowlein, and a number of inferior officers, musicians, and attendants.

Fire totally destroyed the immense buildings and machinery of the Chicago Bridge Company at Fortieth Street and Stewart Avenue. The loss is $400,000. Two firemen were seriously injured by a falling crane, one dying in a few hours. Four hundred men were thrown out of employment.

COUNTRY.

A shock of earthquake lasting two minutes terrified the people of El Paso, Texas, at 3:08 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. Buildings were cracked, the plastering of houses fell, and household articles were thrown down. An offensive sulphuric smell preceded the vibrations. The shocks at Albuquerque, N. M., created great alarm, a feeling akin to sea sickness seizing many persons. Severe shocks were also felt at San Marcial and at Lake Valley. Three sheep-herders of the Albuquerque district died from fright. In Southern Arizona the shocks were quite severe. At Tucson, Benson, and other places, buildings were cracked and glass broken, and at Nogales many structures were wrecked, but no loss of life is reported. Volcanoes were thought to have broken out in the Winchester, Whetstone, and San Jose Mountains, but these proved to be forest fires. Guaymas, Mexico, was also shaken, the highest cliff of Chivato Mountain falling, and a portion of Cape Haro, at the entrance of Guaymas Bay, fell into the Gulf.

A general strike was inaugurated in the Connellsville coke region Wednesday, and upward of 12,000 ovens have shut down, and 13,000 men are idle.

The proprietors of shoe factories at Cincinnati Monday locked out the members of the lasters and fitters' assemblies—women and girls—who had refused to send delegates to the board of arbitration for settlement of the annual scale of wages. Serious results are anticipated.

Paul Grottkau, the anarchist editor, was found guilty at Milwaukee Tuesday of inciting to riot. A motion for a new trial was entered.

The fire underwriters of Boston on Thursday voluntarily reduced the rates of insurance on the millions of dollars' worth of property contained in the business portion of Boston.

A landslide Wednesday night buried six cars and the locomotive of a freight train at Cliff Cave, Mo. Two men were killed, and trains were delayed twenty-four hours.

By the accidental discharge of a gun, Thursday morning, at Wilmington, N. C., four negro boys were killed, and a fifth badly wounded.

A frightful accident took place Wednesday in the Coosa Tunnel of the Georgia Central Railroad. One white man and seventeen negroes were at work in the tunnel when the blast prematurely exploded with terrific force. Twelve out of the eighteen men were instantly killed. The white man escaped death.

Great floods in Maine last week did immense damage along the streams near the coast. At Bangor the bridge piers were slowly undermined. Wednesday night the pressure at the dam broke the connecting rod of the main pumps in the water works, completely disabling them, and only about one-eighth of the city's water supply was available. All the elevators which are run by water or steam shut down. The Maine Road officials think they will be unable to start a train for St. John under two weeks.

FOREIGN.

Late advices from Chili and Peru state that the number of deaths from cholera were decreasing. Up to April 2, 873 persons had died from the disease at Santiago de Chili alone.

The steamer John Knox, from Glasgow for Montreal, foundered Monday off Channel Harbor, Newfoundland. All on board perished. A furious wind and lightning storm and a dense fog prevailed at the time of the accident.

In a coal mine at Nanaimo, British Columbia, two explosions occurred Tuesday afternoon, resulting in the breaking out of a fire which speedily destroyed the fan-house. There were upward of 150 men in the shaft at the time, of whom but fifteen were rescued. The scenes around the mouth of the mine are described as heartrending. An exploring party entered the burning colliery Friday morning, and found dead miners lying in all directions. Up to noon of that day thirty-five bodies had been taken out. It is believed that there were 176 men in the mine, nearly one-third of whom were Chinamen.

A hot sirocco blew the whole week throughout Hungary destroying vegetation and rendering it inflammable. At Torocok 300 houses were burned, and four lives were lost. The conflagration lasted two days. At Ruskberg a church and thirty seven houses were destroyed. Many houses were burned at the village of Meregoy. At Eperys all the churches and public buildings were destroyed, and the cemetery was devastated. It is estimated that the total losses will reach $2,500,000. All the Hungarian and many Austrian insurance houses are involved.

The Mexican government received Sunday its first information regarding the disastrous earthquake on the 3d inst. at the town of Bahiapa, in the district of Montezuma, Sonora, by which 130 persons lost their lives. The earthquake occurred at 3 p. m. At the same time the volcanic eruptions began in the neighboring mountains, lighting up the summits for a long distance. The prediction is made here by local scientists that Mexico is about to undergo a general seismic convulsion, and recent records of earthquakes show that there is widespread volcanic activity from one end of Mexico to the other. Twenty persons were killed at Oputo by the falling of buildings. Many people were injured at Granadas and Gussabar, which towns were almost completely destroyed.

Peasants at a village near Olmutz, Moravia, attacked the Jewish inhabitants Saturday and committed brutal outrages upon them. Troops from the garrison at Prerau quelled the riot.

THE SECRET ORDERS

OF

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flietinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 40c. The aim of this book is to show the difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of the church, and the salvation of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffelfinger. Paper covers, 15c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refuge of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

Send 25c. for an assortment of our tracts. Send by Registered letter or Money Order. We can take American bills or postage stamps, but do not send American postal notes, silver, or drafts on American Banks. For the above, send President Cleveland forbids the importation of intoxicating liquors into the territory of Alaska, except on permit from a customs officer, who shall first be satisfied that the liquors are needed for sacramental, medical or scientific purposes. Why not, Mr. President, do as well for all the territories as for Alaska? Why allow special privileges and immunities to that distant region, inhabited by Indians, which may not be enjoyed by our own race nearer home? Why discriminate against Utah, Wyoming and the rest? Well, Alaska has no legislature, and the General Government makes her laws. That is good; if Government is satisfied that whiskey should be suppressed, let the thing be done near at home, even in the District of Columbia, and about the National Capitol.

The National Educational Association, which met last year at Topeka, Kansas, and two years since at Madison, Wisconsin, this year comes to Chicago, the great convention city. Its managers have prepared a generous programme covering three days. The opening reception in the Exposition building July 12 will be entertained by the famous Thomas orchestra, and the succeeding meetings will be held in Farwell Hall, Central Music Hall, the First M. E. church, and other convenient auditoriums, while the southern end of the Exposition building will be filled with the school exhibit from various States. It is anticipated that the 6,000 in attendance last year will be about doubled in Chicago. Because of its influence upon American youth there is hardly a convention to be held this year of equal importance with this, even among the churches.

The Telescope, in its report of the anniversary of the Union Biblical Seminary, at Dayton, O., makes a final disposition of Dr. Lewis Davis, one of the noblest minds in the United Brethren church. "Dr. L. Davis continues in an emeritus relation with such work as it may suit him to perform." With this cool and, from one point of view, insulting sentence, is this talented, honored and pious man dismissed, whose life has been given meekly to the service of his denomination. Such treatment perhaps should be expected from a pen which could lend itself ignobly to falsifying the late congress in this city. The report in the more out-spoken lodge organ of the United Brethren, the Itinerant, tells us the probable fact, "Dr. Davis is no longer a teacher in the Seminary." Weaver, Shuey and Warner have thus removed another hindrance to their plot to turn over the denomination to the lodge.

The building season opened in Chicago most prosperously, and there was every promise of the distribution of a large amount of capital among the artisans of the city. But a few days ago the hod-carriers struck and gave the first check to a fine business. Then the brick-layers and stone masons struck. The builders then stopped work entirely, and all over the city are buildings in every stage of completion, but not a hand is being lifted upon them. The demands of the hod-carriers for more pay (23½ cents an hour), for an eight-hour day, and double pay for Sunday work were conceded. But when they asked to be paid Saturday instead of Tuesday, and that their secret lodge should be recognized, they met a firm refusal. The masons asked to be paid on Saturday. There is, of course, no popular support for such unreasonable proposals. The strikers get no sympathy, but from one another. Their demand is only in the interest of the rum-seller and the gaming-house. It is the universal experience that Monday is a lost day practically where there is Saturday pay. The laborer's worst enemies are his advisers in this strike, but the lodge runs it all the same.

Hardly had the telegraph stopped clicking the news of the Haverhill, Ohio, saloon assassination, before word came up from Jackson, Mississippi, that R. D. Gambrell, a young editor of the Sword and Shield, prohibition organ for the State, was brutally shot by J. S. Hamilton, leader of the Hinds county whiskey ring, and four confederates. Gambrell was on his way home from a train at 10 o'clock at night, and the assassins got in their work in a lonely spot where the streets were deserted. The inquest proved a most cowardly murder and fixed the guilt upon Hamilton, but his confederates are not known. The victim was the son of Rev. J. B. Gambrell, one of the most prominent of the Baptist ministers of Mississippi. The news came to him while he was attending the church convention at Louisville, and precipitated upon that body a warm debate over resolutions of sympathy and denunciation of the authors and abettors of the crime. This murder is agitating the whole State of Mississippi, and Hamilton's shot went straight to the heart of the infamous traffic. He was an influential Democrat and was at the head of all the corruption around the State Capitol. All feared him, even Governor Lowry—all but Gambrell who assailed his corrupt management as well as his liquor policy. People are beginning everywhere to ask if the liquor Moloch has not had victims enough; they will begin to make war on the murdering saloon with axe and brand if this work goes on long.

Our Boston correspondent puts the labor question quite strongly in his letter this week, perhaps some of our readers in that city who heard Mr. Atkinson will fear that the Cynosure is as much aside from the safe way as the eminent statistician and economist. But, while we print the letter, we do so without allowing Bro. Matthew's enthusiasm to get the better of our judgment. It must be evident to every careful observer that the so-called "labor" lodges, are making a great noise and stir, but that does not prove that they are benefitting the country, or even the special class they pretend to champion; but which they really devour, equally with the monopolist. Beside the debate mentioned in the Boston letter Mr. Atkinson spoke on the Sabbath, May 1st, from the text: "Do justly; love mercy; walk humbly. The address was a remarkable one as a literary achievement, in its use of words of one and two syllables, as well as for its fearless rebuke of the lodges. "All this talk about wage slavery, he said, is nonsense. There is no slave labor—no compulsion in this country now, unless it is the compulsion of the Knights of Labor, and that is pretty much played out already. The poor are not poor because the rich are rich. The poor are not poor because capital takes a bigger share than it ought. The poor are a great deal less poor and a great less numerous than they would be except for the service of capital, of which they enjoy the greater part of the benefit. The poor are not poor because they have no land. Land won't save a man who doesn't know how to use it. The land of the Indians does them no good, and there is plenty of land down South that can be bought for a dollar an acre; yet the people on it work harder than you do, for they have but little capital to help them. You can go there and work harder, but be your own capitalist."

Tillotson judged that the great design of Christianity was the reforming of men's natures, and governing their actions, the restraining their appetites and passions, the softening their tempers and sweetening their humors, the composing their affections, and the raising their minds above the interests and follies of the present world, to the hope and pursuit of endless blessedness; and he considered the whole Christian doctrine as a system of principles all tending to this.

MORAL HEROES.—II.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

There are now passing before me side by side four great souls, each one deserving the place where he did actually stand in the forefront of the hottest of the fight, Theodore D. Weld, Dr. Cheever, Beriah Green and William Goodell.

THEODORE D. WELD knew about all of slavery that was worth knowing. In the interests of manual labor schools he had traveled the whole South. A keen observer, he had closely studied slavery in all its horrid features, the character of slave-holders, the necessary temptations of the system, its cruelty, its defences and everything else needful for a lecturer to know. In the early stages of the campaign he furnished much of the anti-slavery literature, and held institutes for the benefit of associate lecturers. In the great debate at Lane Seminary, that won over hundreds of students and many sons of slave-holders; and that in the end exploded the institution by the trustees forbidding discussion, Theodore D. Weld was the ruling spirit. From thence onward for years, he was in the field until the loss of his voice. His impassioned eloquence will never be forgotten by those who heard him. To hear his twelve lectures in the city of Utica, I walked a hundred miles through snow knee-deep.

DR. GEORGE B. CHEEVER

was God's inspired prophet to this nation, or God never had a prophet. No cause probably ever had such an array of magnificent speakers as the anti-slavery cause. But to none of them was that awful power given of revealing the wrath of God upon guilty nations as to Dr. Cheever.

Night after night during his stay in Detroit he made such a revelation of God's vengeance as sure to fall on this nation, if they refused to let the oppressed go free, that the vast concourse that filled the hall were held for hours spell-bound with horror for the coming doom. It was as if angels from heaven were then on their way, armed with the thunderbolts of destruction. The prophet of God was heard and obeyed. But how unlike was this son of thunder in his denunciations, to his quiet, peaceful, loving manner in our homes.

WILLIAM GODELL AND PRES. BERIAH GREEN

possessed more similarities and diversities than any two other men commissioned of God to champion our great work. Both were possessed of great mental endowment; both of almost irresistible reasoning powers; both thorough metaphysicians; both voluminous writers; both great workers of untiring zeal; and both had tremendous power of hating evil, especially slavery; both were true philanthropists, and both with high appreciation of the other; and, so far as the bondman was concerned, worked harmoniously together; in their domestic relations models of fidelity and affection. Here the similarities give place to striking diversities.

The one was a very incarnation of Christian democracy. In rights, every man high or low, learned or unlearned, rich or poor, was equal to any other. For the rights of the masses, he would fight to "the last ditch." He knew no kings or lords or rulers, but those elected to be so by these same masses.

To the other these theories were utterly detestable. He had no confidence in "the(m) asses" as he was wont to call them. They had no right to rule, no matter by whom elected. The "divine right of kings," according to Carlyle, was the doctrine, founded in nature, in reason and in the highest good of all, and approved of Heaven. These divine-right men must bear rule, no matter who said nay. But they were to regard the ruled not as vassals, but as wards needing a fatherly care, and he who refused to bear rule for the highest good of the most lowly was no king, but a usurper.

Of course, these views so antagonistic had betimes to be encountered in our conventions. It was my unspeakable privilege to be present when the first collision occurred. It was like the meeting of two highly-charged thunder-clouds, or an "irresistible force meeting an invincible one." A sublimer spectacle of intellectual forces I never witnessed. It was like giants giving and receiving blows that only giants could give and resist. It was like Gilpin's ride, "where they did at first get up, they did at last get down."

Another dissimilarity was in the one holding very broad and free Bible interpretation; while to the other the Bible had but one interpretation, and was the only rule of faith and practice. One was an ardent admirer and reader of German writers, the other in full sympathy and fellowship with the New England theologians of the last century, at home with Edwards, Bellamy, Hopkins and Emmons, "divine efficiency omitted."

The convention papers were usually written by Mr. Goodell, and were of a very high order. He was for many years editor of anti-slavery papers. Pres. Green was often in the thickest of the anti-slavery battle.

ALVIN STEWART

was in the field and did much effectual work traveling far and near to help the conventions. His speech before the High Judiciary of New Jersey, for the emancipation of the few slaves of that State, is a master production for its breadth and power. Crowds thronged to hear him when it was known he was to speak.

The Empire State was prolific of strong men, but it is no disparagement of any to say that ranked first of them all. The majesty of his bearing, his kingly form, his lofty ideas, his power of utterance, a voice bewitchingly mellifluous, his burning pathos, his gesticulations, reminding one of the swaying of the cedars of Lebanon—the delegates from Maine who heard his speech at the Buffalo convention in 184—, said it was worth the journey all the way from Maine to hear it. The discussion of Mr. Smith with Mr. Garrison on the constitutionality of slavery was regarded by those who heard it as quite equal to that between Messrs. Goodell and Green. It was generally conceded that Mr. Garrison was fairly floored. Mr. Smith's princely gifts and personal labors helped largely to make New York the banner State. His speeches in Congress comprise a greater variety of subjects, are more in number and bear the marks of more thorough finish than any ever delivered by one person in so short a time. They are a rich legacy for the nation. It is a pity that the life of such a man, who was "one in a million," could not have fallen into the hands of one who better knew him and was in larger sympathy with him than was Mr. Frothingham. I think it safe to say that, all in all, the 19th century has not produced his equal. Had the preparation of his life been committed to Dr. James C. Jackson, the world would have been introduced to a man much nearer the original.

JAMES C. JACKSON

was for several years a near neighbor of Mr. Smith, was probably more intimate with his inner life, came nearer to him and shared his confidence as did very few. I think an encouraging word from Mr. Smith gave Mr. Jackson to the anti-slavery mission which he entered in early manhood, where he continued until thoroughly broken down from an amount of labor not excelled by any. His power of illustration, his novel method of presenting his subject, his impassioned eloquence, and those ineffable qualities of a peculiarly constructed mind so impossible for me to delineate, gave to our cause a workman of rare genius. His life of Henry Clay was the most exact likeness of a great, bad man ever given to the nation.

Mr. Jackson's physical powers were so completely broken that his medical advisers pronounced him beyond the reach of their skill. He therefore entered a hydropathic institution, where, having partially recovered, the attendant physician, discovering his remarkable talent, took him into partnership. Here he learned that hygiene hydropathy was the great need of invalids, and but a few years elapsed before he was at the head of the largest and most widely known hygienic institution in the world, built up largely by his indomitable perseverance, courage and skill. And few have furnished the world with such an array of scientific literature on this method of cure. It is doubtful if any other institution of the kind has received so large a patronage as "Our Home on the Hillside," at Dansville, N. Y.

Dr. Jackson is occasionally invited to occupy neighboring pulpits; and few men can fire an audience as does he. His Messianic sermons are beautiful and edifying to believers. For many months I was almost constantly in the anti-slavery work with him. At this late day I feel a shiver of horror stealing over me at the remembrance of the overwhelming and exhausting labors he was wont to perform.

CHRISTLESS PRAYERS.

BY MRS. MARY A. BLANCHARD.

Why is so much importance attached to the omission of Christ's name in Masonic prayers? May not Masons pray to him in heart without uttering his name with the voice? Are there not prayers in the Bible without Christ's name affixed to them which were acceptable to God? Is not the Lord's prayer an instance in point? If we look carefully at this subject I think we shall see that its importance is not over estimated. The fact that the omission of "that name which is above every name" is not an inadvertence, but a studied neglect, practiced to please our Saviour's enemies, the worldling, the Jew, and the infidel, gives it a striking significance. Our blessed Lord has given us this notice, "He that is not with me is against me;" also, "Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father;" and, "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of Man also confess before the angels of God. But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God;" and in Matthew 10: 32, 33, "Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven; and whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." The Lord's prayer, given by their own request to the disciples, by our Saviour himself, is addressed to "Our Father," and if we turn to the prophet Isaiah's description of the Son of God, Isaiah 9: 6, among his names are the "Mighty God, the everlasting Father," so we see Christ is plainly addressed in that wonderful prayer.

Most of the prayers in Scripture are fragmentary, save Solomon's at the dedication of the temple, and it closes with this direct reference to Christ: "O Lord God, turn not away the face of thine Anointed, remember the mercies of David thy servant," "and the fire came down from heaven upon his offering, and the glory of the Lord filled the mount."

What should be our dependence when we come as suppliants to the court of heaven? We have no works of righteousness of our own to bring to buy favors with; we are not only bankrupt, but sins we are not able to atone for stare us in the face, and our past life, filled with the record of undeserved favors, reproaches and shames us. In this sad dilemma, helpless and hopeless, the blessed Jesus—oh, how graciously—tells us, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name he will give it you." Can anything show more arrogance than in the face of this definite offer to send up our prayers without any notice of, or allusion to, the only Mediator between God and man? Contemptuously ignoring the only name which can give worth and weight to our plea? Nay, verily, such treason calls for direct punishment. In this vain call for favors, you may persist till the heavens fall, unless God's thunderbolts more swiftly overtake you. But no crumb will you receive from him whose precepts you disregard, and whose direct commands in lodge worship you trample heedlessly under foot.

"ARE WE A CHRISTIAN NATION?"

BY H. W. SMITH.

Elder Nathan Callender has left this question open. In the Christian Cynosure, April 21, 1887, he submits this to Bro. Williams, "Whether a nation or a people may not 'fall from grace,' though born and nurtured in the Christian faith?" He adds, "This question is submitted...for further consideration by any one who will favor us with more light on this phase of the subject." "This phase" we will consider, then the collaterals and the leading question.

"Precision"—quite well do we know that he who gives religious instruction, in this day, in positive terms is called a crank; nevertheless so we write, and thus we speak: perhaps and may be so is of no value. "Whatever is born of God overcometh the world." Christ said of his sheep, "They shall never perish; and no man is able to pluck them out of my hand." Remember, these are they who are born of God. "That born of the flesh is flesh; that born of the Spirit is spirit." Christ has said it. Each body born is therefore distinct from primogenitors, and that born of the Spirit cannot be unborn, nor reborn, hence is "always in grace," sealed. But, simply a convert may convert back, oscillate from side to side, never saved unless created anew, or born of the Spirit. This is Gospel doctrine; thus saith the Lord.

Be patient, reader, we are not inviting controversy but building a foundation on which to establish a truthful answer. We now dare say a church is not born, but is a congregation of individuals of like character, or should be so. Of the primitive apostolic church with Ananias and Sapphira out, whether every integer of the body was Spirit-born is not mine to tell; but the leaders with the great majority were Spirit-born, this we dare not doubt, and all were acquiescent in the unitive government and the mode of worship; and thus continuing from generation to generation, the church could never have apostatized. A natural man, a convert, can apostatize and be cut off, a branch to be burned. The church, even the apostolic, could become a band of worldlings in process of time by the passing away of the good and the coming in of worldlings, deceivers and deceived; as the Apostles foretold; and they saw the change approaching and met its advance. And when the leaders and governing majority are not Christians (Spirit-born) then the church is apostate, a habitation of thieves, robbers and licentious, a cesspool of all kinds of filth and rottenness of those who "sow to the flesh."

Again, if a person turn back from the Gospel doctrine to the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law for salvation; or turn to heathenism, or Mormonism, he has fallen from grace. So Paul instructs us.

Now we are prepared to judge of a nation, and make answer truthfully. Let us say, a nation is not born; nor is a government born. Individuals and tribes confederate, and are thus a nation, a people; and by them, or their delegates in council, a government is set up, or established. Having a government in harmony with the Gospel doctrines, designed to protect and advance the best interests and general welfare of the people, and endorsed by the people, whose leaders and officers are God-fearing men and women, teaching loyalty to Christ and good government, executing judgment and justice between a man and his neighbor,—such a nation may be truthfully called a CHRISTIAN NATION. Such leaders and officials are doing the work of such as have been "born Christians, not of the flesh...but of God." Such was our nation in the beginning, in its origin, a Christian nation. In this decision Bro. Callender is with me. A Christian nation can and may do some minor things which are not just without losing the right to be called a Christian nation, which things a Christian cannot do. John, the beloved disciple, says of the Christian, "He cannot sin because he is born of God." The Christian nation is not born; nor are all its members or subjects Christians. This Christian nation just described can apostatize, "or fall from grace," which implies from divine favor in like manner as the Christian church has apostatized. The good die out and serve out a term of office, and bad men and worse have filled the vacated places and positions, successively, till an entire change is effected in the administration of the government; good laws are repealed, and unjust ones enacted to popularize vice and enrich the rogues and rascals. Henceforth the chief aim of the majority in power is to deplete or rob the treasures belonging to the people, and control the elective franchise with the mighty dollar. We a nation returned to heathen rites, burning the dead, worshipping at heathen altars; having chartered all "the Christless lodges," thereby giving permission to them to corrupt the Christian morals of all if it be possible and enthroned the anti-christ—and yet a Christian nation? Fallen! fallen!! We are not a Christian nation now.

Bro. Callender has in his article to which we have referred given a catalogue of abominations sufficient against both church and nation to establish the apostasy of each; but he calls on others for answer to his repeated questions, "Are they Christian churches?" "Is this a Christian nation?" My answer with precision is an emphatic No! No! Christians cannot do such things; a nation seeking only to imitate Christian work would not do such things, could not uphold such abominations. Though church and nation, both are apostate; all men and women are not apostate. Hence the need of general reform to deluge the land with truth and practical justice, and shame the worshipers who claim "a new birth by the shock of entrance into the lodge."

QUARRELING KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

[Chicago News, May 10.]

The order of the Knights of Labor is on the eve of a great revolt. There is a widespread feeling against the managers of the order—and especially against General Master Workman Powderly—here and among the Knights throughout the entire West, and this feeling is fed by the relentless secret agitation of the radicals and socialists. That is the reason why the conservatives insisted on Mr. Powderly's coming to Chicago and investigating the state of affairs in the local assemblies, and it is for the same reason that he at last undertook a journey to Denver and other Western cities. Assemblies after assemblies are passing resolutions concerning the national management of the order and acting defiantly in direct opposition to Mr. Powderly's wishes.

When the order forbidding local assemblies to subscribe money toward the defense of the anarchists or for the campaign fund of the united labor party was issued by Mr. Powderly, dozens of local and even some district assemblies not only ignored it but openly announced their contempt for such a rescript. When the conference of the Knights in Philadelphia failed to support the Molders' union, the officers of district assembly 24 issued an appeal to all kindred organizations in the United States, urging them to take the matter in their own hands and to stand by the molders, thus rebuking, indirectly, their chief leaders.

Some time ago the Journal of United Labor, the official organ of the Knights, edited by Mr. Powderly and his aids in Philadelphia, published a list of labor papers and called upon all true Knights to support them. The most influential labor papers—the Standard, edited by Henry George, John Swinton's Paper, the Labor Standard of Patterson, N. J., the Labor Enquirer, the Labor Leaf of Detroit, and others—were left out of the list. The editors of the boycotted papers felt offended and began a new crusade against Powderly.

Especially outspoken dissatisfaction was caused by Powderly's opposition to independent political action on the part of the workingmen, and his recent utterances on the defeat of the labor party in Chicago have made him many enemies. The seat of the revolt against Powderly seems to be Denver, Col., where he is sojourning at present. The Labor Enquirer, published there by the socialistic agitator and recognized leader of the Knights of Labor in the West, Burnett G. Haskell, is foremost in its denunciations and attacks against the general master workman, and a conflict between them is imminent.

The latest move of Haskell's friends was a secret circular sent out to all prominent Knights and secretaries of assemblies in California, Oregon, Colorado, Nebraska, Illinois, Michigan and Missouri. This circular arrived in Chicago yesterday afternoon and reads as follows:

"Local assembly 8133, Knights of Labor, of Portland, Oregon, has had its attention called to the recent public utterances of General Master Workman Powderly, in which he congratulated the workers on the defeat of the labor party in Chicago, thereby tendering the support of his official position to the misstatements of a venal press which has industriously represented that the labor vote in Chicago had fallen off through general disgust at the socialistic tendencies of the party, although, as a matter of fact, it showed an increase of 6,269 over that of last fall. The general master workman knows well that this means a far greater victory than the mere gain of 6,269 votes, inasmuch as the 23,579 who voted in Chicago on the 5th inst. voted knowingly for the overthrow of the competitive system, the issue being for the first time in American politics put in plain and absolutely unmistakable terms.

"He knows that an attempt has again been made to lead the people astray by representing that the labor party, though it bases all its teaching on the Declaration of Independence, is endeavoring to overthrow the American flag, because some of our members also reverence the red flag as emblematical of the life-blood which flows alike in the veins of workers of every nationality and knits them in the bonds of a common brotherhood.

"This antiquated attempt to divide our forces by playing upon old race antipathies, though regarded by all conscientious men as an unpardonable crime, has nevertheless commended itself to the pious catholic spirit of brother Powderly, who has not hesitated to desecrate our country's flag by waving it in the cause of Know Nothingism, and to plant himself squarely on the side of the capitalists who are laboring to build up what they call an 'American' party, hoping to discredit as 'foreign' those liberal ideas that the struggles of the oppressed in Europe are giving birth to, which, like all great ideas, are becoming rapidly the heritage of the whole world.

"Having carefully watched the course of the general master workman, this assembly has long since recognized that he has proved false to the principles of liberty and equality of opportunities for all which he so assiduously professed during the years that he was a member of the socialistic labor party.

"He has now given, in the opinion of this assembly, final proof that he is using his official position to hinder the march of the workers on that journey the goal of which is the final extinction of slavery by placing all the sources of production equally and unreservedly at the disposition of all workers, regardless of nationality. Considering the above facts, this assembly passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we congratulate our brother workers in Chicago on having forced the general master workman at last to show his hand, and thereby disillusionize those who have been hitherto blinded by admiration for a name and an office.

"Resolved, That we urge our Chicago brothers, and all other true Knights, to follow up the good work by taking such steps as shall result in the summary deposition of one who has been false to the trust reposed in him by over a million organized workers, who elected him to office, believing him to be the uncompromising foe of that capitalistic monopoly which is to-day finding in him one of its most powerful allies."

The circular bears the seal and signatures of the officers of assembly 8133.

"An attempt will undoubtedly be made to punish the assembly, and this will give rise to a fight between the Western Knights and the general executive board," said a leader of the Knights of Labor. "If the assembly is suspended all assemblies in California, Oregon, Colorado, and other States will withdraw. If Haskell is expelled the same thing will occur. This circular is a declaration of war against Powderly."

Many local Knights are of the opinion that Mr. Powderly has become a tool in the hands of district assembly 49 or the Home club of New York.

"Here are facts," said one. "Only three days ago he ordered the expulsion from the Knights of Labor of the officials of Aurora assembly No. 9545 of Columbus, O. Their names are: Urban Hartung, master workman; F. A. Friedrichs, judge advocate, and F. Bork, worthy foreman. When Mrs. Parsons was arrested in Columbus these gentlemen secured her bail and sheltered her. It is said that they also collected money for the defense of the convicted anarchists. This was their offense and therefore they are expelled. Now, Mrs. Parsons is a member in good standing of John Brown assembly No. 1724 of Jersey City. Powderly dares not touch that assembly, although he tried to repeatedly. That assembly is under the jurisdiction of district assembly 49, and district assembly 49 will not brook any arbitrary interference from Powderly."

THE WALKING DELEGATE.

The walking delegate is the man who carries the orders of the labor "bosses" to union workingmen, by which they are directed to quit the work of their employers, and to remain in idleness until they shall hear further from these "bosses" through this same delegate. This delegate has no consultation or discussion with them about the merits of the matter involved. He simply tells them what they must do, whether they wish to do it or not. Strike they must when they get the order to do so; and then they must continue the strike until the walking delegate appears again, and informs them that the strike is "declared off" by the labor "bosses." No matter what may be the consequence to them or to their families, the one thing for them to do is to obey the orders that come to them through the walking delegate.

One would not have supposed, if the conduct of union workingmen had not proved it to be true, that a few labor "bosses" and walking delegates could exercise such a despotic power over individual liberty, or that workingmen could so befool themselves as to think that, in submitting to this tyranny, they are really serving their own interests. There is no chapter in the whole history of despotism, in which passive and unhesitating submission is more conspicuously illustrated. Individual liberty in determining whether one will work or quit work, for what reasons he will do the one or the other, and for whom and at what rate of wages he will work, is wholly abdicated by those workingmen who, in joining labor organizations, pledge themselves beforehand to strike when ordered to do so, and to continue the strike as long as they have orders to this effect. They agree to submit to a dictatorship whose infallibility and authority they are not to question for one moment; and unless they fulfill this agreement, they become mutually the persecutors of each other, as the penalty for non-fulfillment. A more merciless despotism was never imposed by any Czar of Russia.

The result of this stupendous folly on the part of union workingmen, who are ostensibly seeking to better their condition, has been almost uniformly just the reverse of what they anticipated and sought. Strikes in the great mass of cases are failures to enforce the demands of the strikers. Millions upon millions of dollars have been lost to the strikers in wages that would otherwise have been earned. The labor "bosses" who order strikes have proved themselves, as a general rule, to be simply a set of fools, acting without good judgment, and utterly reckless of the injury which they thereby do to workingmen themselves. These "bosses," and not the capitalist and employer, are really the worst enemies of the workingman. They do him far more harm than good in addition to the injury they do to society. We advise every workingman to keep clear of their dictatorship, and exercise the inalienable right of judging for himself as to what he shall do or not do. Nobody can decide this question for him so well as he can for himself. He best knows his own circumstances, and is therefore the best judge of what is expedient for him.—Independent.

HOW TO SOLVE THE LABOR PROBLEM.

The labor problem is as much a moral and social problem as it is an economical one: and the solution of the former will in most cases settle the latter. How that may be accomplished has been exhibited in the experience of Mrs. Eckley Cope, whose husband owns extensive mines at Drifton, Pa. Though the miners in Mr. Cope's employ were not unkindly treated, when the rumors of strikes and labor troubles in other places reached them, they became dissatisfied. Mrs. Cope detected the uneasiness of the miners before her husband did. Instead of making ready for a violent and bitter struggle, she sold the yacht upon which she had been in the habit of spending her summers, and took that part of her income which she had been in the habit of spending on this luxury, and devoted it to the interest of her husband's employes. She improved their schools, introducing kindergartens, and systems of rewards and prizes; gave them a reading-room and library, a gymnasium for young men, and cooking and sewing schools for the girls; laid out a little pleasure-ground for their benefit, with flowers and fountains, where they could rest after their day's work, and more than all, stimulated them to a pride in the comfort and cleanliness of their own homes. The result is what might have been expected. Seeing that Mrs. Cope looked upon them as something more than muscular animals, they showed her that they possessed the mind and heart of human beings, and repaid her kindness to them and their families by loyalty to her husband and his interests. While other capitalists have suffered from strikes and lock-outs, Mr. Cope's work has gone on uninterruptedly, making money for him and his good wife. A little more of that womanly tenderness which enables a mother to punish a wayward child more effectively than the father usually can, would remove much of the feeling which exists between employers and employes, many of whom are only grown-up boys.—Western Christian Advocate.

A coward can fight a battle when he is sure of winning, but it takes a hero to fight a battle when all the chances are against him. This is as true of moral conflicts as of those that are settled with musket and bayonet. When one takes a stand on the side of his conscience, and the great world opposes, scoffs and sneers, there is a moral dignity in the act that angels might covet. But if the conscience has been well formed, and has brought its possessor into harmony with God's truth, he stands not as the defender of a hopeless cause, for, in the end, God is always victor. Two things are of importance to us, then, first that we be sure of our standing with God, and second that we have grace to stand in our lot and place to the end.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

ATKINSON AND CHAMBERLAIN, OR CAPITAL VERSUS LABOR.

The noted statistician, Edward Atkinson, and E. M. Chamberlain, a well-known local labor advocate of this city, recently met on the lecture platform of the Central Labor Lyceum to discuss that phase of the labor question known as the "Margin of Profits." The discussion was opened by Mr. Atkinson, who in well chosen language threw as much cold water on the doctrines of labor as his vast reservoir of statistical knowledge would supply, but the would-be chilling effect was offset by the voluminous stream of boiling hot logic poured out by his less eminent but equally eloquent opponent. To his own surprise, undoubtedly, the champion of capital met his match, at least, for once, and the hosts of labor feel more confident of ultimate success than ever. The greater the odds, the greater the victory. The triumph of Mr. Chamberlain was, of course, enhanced by the fact that his antagonist was one of capital's most powerful representatives. With due respect to Mr. Atkinson's status, his well-earned reputation as a scholar of statistics, we are forced to consider his argument, in vulgar terms, only a "rehash" of well-worn ideas, an epitome of capital's most weighty arguments, which have had about the same effect upon the vanguard of labor as peas would have against Gibraltar.

One seemingly strong point which the great statistician presented for his opponent to run against is the imminent danger of capital's leaving the State on account of the persistent demands of the labor element, especially those for eight and nine hours. In spite of any epizeuxis he may employ in attempting to hit an imaginary nail on the head, it is certain, Mr. Atkinson can only fail. Indeed, it is really surprising that a man of his reputed intelligence should not look before he leaps,—more carefully weigh conditions and results. The writer is not a member of any labor organization, nor has he taken any definite stand in regard to either party, but so apparently weak is the argument referred to that he will venture so far off his ground of neutrality as to ask where Massachusetts's capital could or would emigrate? If labor agitation were confined within the limits of this commonwealth, then capital might successfully make its begira to the Mexican West, Northwest or South; but go where it might within the precinct of the Union, it still must have the co-operation of labor, and where can it go and not find labor agitation—the persecution it flees from here?

It is not the writer's purpose, in this letter, to discuss the claims of either party, as already hinted, but, right or wrong, he can see no other alternative for capital than to concede labor's demands. It is Hobson's choice: that or nothing. Labor will be satisfied only when capital submits, or is subjugated. "Labor," as John Swinton recently said in Faneuil Hall, "is on the march." Who shall impede its course? It is uncultured, to a large degree, impulsive, fierce; and, spurred on by the more intelligent socialist and anarchist, is a veritable Gog and Magog sweeping through the land.

The prospect for capital is, indeed, ominous, especially as from the "sure word of prophecy" there comes ringing down, with unmistakable sound, a voice of warning: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." A startling declaration. But, why shall all this misery come upon capital? The succeeding verse concisely gives the reason—the cause, beginning with one of the most significant interjections to be found in the New Testament, an index finger always pointing to some statement of exceeding importance: "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth." James 5: 1-4. Interpret this prophecy of the last days as we may, it can only mean that God will hear the cry of the laborers as laborers, and that the avenging of their grievances means woe to capital. How full of meaning that expression, "God of Sabaoth." Why were not one of the terms, God of love, God of mercy, or God of compassion, used instead? The expression is synonymous of war. It is a metaphor of the same class as the figure of speech, "God of Abraham," the God of faith. Sabaoth, a Hebrew word, signifies armies or hosts.

Now connect this definition with the statement that the just hire of the laborer is fraudulently withheld by the rich employer, and that the laborer's cry has entered into ears of the Lord of armies, to what natural conclusion must we come? Simply this, that God, hearing the cry of oppressed labor, will muster, or allow to be mustered, an army which will bring destruction upon the rich, causing them to weep and howl; and if our ears do not deceive us we can already hear subdued sobbing.

We deeply regret that space will not permit extracts from the arguments of Messrs. Atkinson and Chamberlain, as the thoughts of both are worthy of attention. Rev. Dr. McGlynn delivered a lecture in this city, Sunday last, entitled, "The Cross of a New Crusade."

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

MAY, 12, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—A baron in Germany once stretched heavy wires between two towers separated by a deep valley. The ordinary winds did not disturb them. But when the tempest swept down the mountain they responded freely and the most beautiful strains were emitted. The chords of the national heart will not respond to ordinary providences, but when the judgments of God sweep over the land, the sweetest music of loyalty to the King of kings is produced. "When the judgments of God are abroad in the land the inhabitants thereof will learn righteousness."

The frauds practiced at elections have their source in the degenerate heart of this people. "There is something rotten in Denmark." Othello, Shakespeare's mighty sermon against deception, should warn us against this political sin. It means destruction, sure and inevitable.

Last Sabbath I preached in the Mt. Auburn Presbyterian church. This is a vacant congregation. They have above 300 members. Their Sabbath school is prosperous. Mr. D. A. Johnston has a class of 250. Dr. Hamlin, now of Washington, D. C., had the work in this congregation well organized during his pastorate. They drink in reformation principles with great avidity. After the evening sermon the elders present gathered around and said they would vote for the amendment to acknowledge the authority of the Higher Power in the Constitution. Bro. Lytle said, "I never heard that subject discussed before. I read over our Constitution lately and what you say is true. It is secular. There is no reference to God or his law throughout. I am glad you came. You represent a grand movement." Another said: "I wish to thank you personally for that discourse. I cannot express my gratification. It was a new field and just what we need." His wife seconded his approval. I was kindly invited to return next Sabbath and give them some more reform.

At the Presbyterian Ministers' meeting Monday afternoon Rev. G. M. Maxwell, D. D., read a paper upon "The proper Disposition of the Bodies of the Dead." He stated that three methods have been employed from the earliest period: cremation, embalming and burial. The first would never be adopted as a Christian mode of disposing of the dead, because it might be used as a means of hiding crime (as in the case of death by poison), and it had the appearance of doing violence to the body. Sanitary reasons might make it in some localities a necessity, but otherwise it will not be generally made use of. The second will not be accepted because the remains are liable to be disturbed in the future, and Christian sentiment favors a permanent resting place. Think of the remains of a friend being hawked about over the world. The remains of Ramees II., "The Pharaoh of the Oppression," were recently found in the Theban city of the dead "in the great sarcophagus which had been cut from the limestone of Biban el Mulouk," and are now on exhibition in the Bulak Museum. The third is the Scriptural mode. It has been universally adopted in the Christian world and will be followed until the end of time.

The doctor gave us a prelude on "modern science." Not one of our scientists believe in spontaneous generation. They all admit the existence of an original germ cell, having the potentialities of life. From this all the universe is evolved. This postulates a Creator. Those who maintain the eternity of matter admit that it has its organic and inorganic side. In the organic side of matter lies the potentialities of life, i. e., the germ cell, and that implies a First Cause. The brethren were profuse in their thanks to the doctor for his talk and paper. On Wednesday evening I spoke in the York St. M. E. church.

Liquor selling must be made to appear as the most heinous crime, and we want no compromise with the crime any more than we want to justify stealing or highway robbery.

REFORM NEWS.

NOTES OF THE IOWA WORK.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last writing I gave two lectures at the Brock school-house, five miles from Scranton, in Greene county. Everything went off smoothly the first night, but the second evening the wife of an Odd-fellow became deeply stirred. I had shown that Freemasonry assumes to teach the way to heaven, and to be engaged in fitting human souls for heaven. I had shown how men professedly are regenerated and sanctified according to the Masonic plan of salvation, and then I proceeded to prove that Christ was strictly excluded from the ritual of worship adopted by the order, so that the worship was purely deistical; and that while Ancient Craft Masonry was a revival of ancient paganism from the standpoint of its religious ceremonies, yet when viewed from the standpoint of its ritual of worship, it is organized infidelity.

I then charged that Odd-fellowship had entered into the conspiracy against Christ by adopting a deistical ritual of worship the same as Masonry, and that the conspiracy was becoming so wide-spread that it had reached even the grange; only in the grange it was thought best by the Masonic plotters to use a little Satanic cunning by recognizing the name of Christ in the prayer offered on funeral occasions, when the honest farmers who were not grangers would be present, while the prayers to be offered within the grange were deistical, the same as the prayers of Masonry and Odd-fellowship.

Two men who are members of the Baptist church and who were grangers were present. At the conclusion one turned to the other and said, "What the lecturer said about the grange prayers is not true." "Yes it is, though," was the prompt rejoinder.

But the wife of the Odd-fellow, being a church member herself, and her Odd-fellow husband being also a church member, was greatly agitated. She could not think it possible that her husband was a party to the great and wide-spread conspiracy of Satan to set aside Christ Jesus as the one Mediator between God and men, and thus cut off all access to God and blot out the hope of heaven.

On Saturday, May 7, I was conveyed to Churdan, a town on the Wabash narrow gauge road nine miles from Jefferson, the county-seat of Greene county. I preached on the Sabbath in Churdan, and will deliver a couple of lectures here before I leave.

On Saturday I met the Presbyterian minister who has just come to take the pastoral charge of the Presbyterian churches at Glidden and Churdan. He kindly consented to announce my lectures from his pulpit. He had received a good report of my work from some of his people who heard me when I lectured at Glidden.

Will you not pray, my readers, that great and effectual doors may be opened that no man can shut, and that the pastors and churches may be aroused to take sides with Christ against the Masonic anti-christ.

MARYLAND AND PENNSYLVANIA.

A Baltimore Friend—Harper's Ferry and Storer College—Maryland Heights and war memories—The Cumberland Valley—The Carlisle School and its Indian pupils—Harrisburg and the State Legislature.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I found in Baltimore a growing interest in our reform, especially on the part of colored pastors. Some of them constantly plead with their people to come out from the lodge system and be separate. I called on a leading Friend. He had little time to spare, and understood me as being in favor of some secret society. He told me that he had no interest in the matter. When I showed him that my work was to oppose secret societies, he took out a $5 bill and handed to me and said my work met his hearty approval.

On the afternoon of the 3d the Philadelphia Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian church met in Baltimore. I was cordially welcomed, and on the conclusion of their business, was invited to address them on my work in the South. After listening, a resolution was passed expressing their commendation. It had been arranged that I should address an audience in the Reformed Presbyterian church in the evening, but as the gas was being lighted, there was an explosion which set the church on fire. It was soon put out without serious loss, but prevented the lecture for the evening.

From Baltimore to Washington, forty miles in forty-five minutes, almost rivals Jules Verne's conceit of being put into an immense shell and shot out of a cannon at so rapid a rate that the sound of the explosion could not keep up with the projectile. Several express trains run at this rate. From Washington I went to Harper's Ferry at nearly as great a speed and there met a most kind reception from Rev. N. C. Bracket, president of Storer College, the excellent and flourishing school for the education of colored youth, under the patronage of the Free Will Baptists. Storer college was chartered by the Legislature of West Virginia, March 3, 1868. It received its name from the late John Storer, of Maine, who gave the first $10,000. It is the only institution open to colored students between Washington and the Ohio river. It has a site donated by Congress, not often equalled for healthfulness and beauty.

Harper's Ferry has the most remarkable and romantic scenery to be found in this region. The whole country is mountainous and the original town was built into the side of the hill on the narrow point between the Shenandoah and the Potomac. These rivers running between Maryland Heights, on the one side, and Virginia Heights on the other, come together at an acute angle, leaving a high ridge between. On the top of this ridge three-quarters of a mile back from the confluence and commanding a fine view of both rivers, as well as all the mountain region around, stand the three large commodious buildings of the college. In front, running down the point, is the village of Harper's Ferry. Back of the college and across a ravine, that nearly cuts through from one river to the other, is the town of Bolivar, while up the Shenandoah, and barely out of sight is Charlestown, where John Brown was executed. The situation is one of remarkable beauty.

Although it was 5 P. M. when I reached there, President Bracket said he would have a meeting that evening, and that I would feel at home at the college until next day. At 8 P. M. most of the 250 students were present in the college chapel and listened attentively to my talk of an hour. President Bracket told the students that he had belonged to four different orders, and that he had never found anything of value in any of them, and he thought them most pernicious in their practical influence. Several of the older members expressed their hearty approval of what had been said. Tracts and papers were gladly received and only a few seemed offended.

Next day had been planned for an excursion to the top of Maryland Heights, and as I had three or four hours to wait for a train I concluded to accompany them. Maryland Heights, though not usually classed as a mountain, is not unworthy of the name. The summit is 1,600 feet above the sea and 1,300 above the river. The frowning cliffs that hang over the road opposite Harper's Ferry are surmounted with a more gradual ascent farther back, and no one can see how high it is without going on top. With Prof. Curtis and a large number of students, I went up the long winding road by which both armies took their cannon.

There were numerous earthworks as we ascended and near the top a considerable fort enclosing four or five acres, and overlooking the highest hills in all directions. The valleys of the Potomac and the Shenandoah can be seen for a long distance. The only wonder is that an army occupying such a position could ever be dislodged. Farther back, the mountain contracts into a narrow rocky ridge on either side of which can be seen the broad current of the Potomac. All along on either side, stone barriers are thrown up and seem like the work of a few months instead of a quarter of a century ago.

Without waiting for my young friends I came rapidly down and was in time to take the train for Hagerstown at 11:30 A. M. I was exceedingly weary but would not have missed the trip for much. At 3 P. M. I reached Chambersburg where I find as usual friends and refreshment.

HARRISBURG, PA., MAY 11.—The Cumberland Valley is one of the finest regions of Pennsylvania or of the United States. It would be difficult to find any region where all the conditions of natural prosperity and physical comfort are more abundant. There are plenty of churches, too, and many able ministers, but it must be confessed that there is a sort of Laodicean indifference, with regard to the salvation of men or the reformation of society. Perhaps this is inevitable among old and rich churches.

The friends of our reform in Chambersburg are not indifferent to its progress, but are much absorbed in their own relation to it as steadfast adherents to the Constitution of the United Brethren church. They recently held quite an important convention, which was addressed by Rev. Wm. Dillon, of The Conservator. I was kindly received by their pastor, Rev. Mr. Keiter, and at his request preached on the Sabbath from Rev. 8: 5.

From thence I went to Newville, and called on Rev. Mr. Reed, of the United Presbyterian church, who expressed his hearty sympathy in our work and promised his aid in getting up a meeting in that place. Rev. A. W. Lentz, pastor of the English Lutheran church, also expressed his hearty sympathy, and arrangements were made to lecture in his church at a later period.

From there I went to Carlisle, where I was most cordially received and entertained by Rev. James Brown, an aged but vigorous U. P. minister, who has never grown weary in the good work of preaching the truth against popular as well as unpopular sins.

I visited the Indian Training School, and was shown through all the departments. There were in attendance during March 363 boys and 193 girls. Most of them are pure Indians, and from nearly all the tribes, including some from Alaska. Some of them, however, are so nearly white that none would suspect, unless told, that they were not of Caucasian birth. The average age seemed younger than when I was there before. The newly arrived are quite young. Within a year a large boarding hall has been erected, and a new dormitory for the boys is now being built. It is to be 250 feet long and three stories high. It will cost about $20,000, and the money is being raised by private subscription. The Indian boys connected with the school have contributed nearly $2,000. An additional farm has been purchased, and there are now over 400 acres of the best of land under cultivation. This, together with a large amount of mechanical work, is all done by the Indian youth. All the clothing for the school is manufactured here, and shoes, wagons and harness are made for the Indians on the Western reservations. The Morning Star is an able 8-page journal, printed by Indians, under the direction of an Indian foreman. I was greatly pleased with the neatness and accuracy with which even the little girls did their sewing and mending. Many of the pupils have been there but a short time, some not two weeks, and yet it was quite surprising to see how readily they fell into line, and could learn to do what they were taught. I attended recitations in arithmetic, which would be creditable in any school, and met one young man who is a graduate of Lincoln University, and is now a student in theology.

The Indians are not a strong race. They have much less power of endurance and resistance to disease than the negro or the Caucasian. Their great foe is consumption. But it is not true that civilization increases this malady. It diminishes it. The percentage of deaths is much less here at Carlisle than on the reservations. While I was there several Pawnee chiefs, who had been on a visit to Washington, came to see the school, and an entertainment was gotten up for their benefit. The large chapel was packed full of Indians, the boys in the dress of U. S. soldiers, and the girls in a dark blue uniform. The exercises consisted in recitations, short speeches, songs and calisthenics. The singing was fine. At the conclusion the chiefs made speeches. First the interpreter, who is a Pawnee, told about their visit to Washington, and then introduced the old chief, who spoke in his native tongue, with great earnestness and much gesticulation. His speech showed him a man of sound judgment and in hearty sympathy with the work that is being done at the school. He said he intended to visit several other schools on his way home. He takes with him his son, who has been there five years, and is a fair English scholar. He told me that his father had a large farm, and he was going home to help him. The younger chief speaks good English. He said he regretted that he had not been educated, but his trust was in the Great Spirit and in the strength of his arms. He said education and industry were of great value. They might succeed by industry without education, but that education without industry was of no value whatever. He told us how he called together his braves to raise his log house, and how he told them that those logs must go up in two hours, and they went up. He expressed his great gratification at their progress, and gave much excellent advice.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"LIVES OF GREAT MEN ALL REMIND US."

DETROIT, May 11.

While laboring among the colored people in the Southern States this last winter, I had occasion to lecture them on the evils of liquor, tobacco, and secret societies, their greatest bane; and, knowing the power of example over them, and the veneration they cherish for their benefactors, and the high esteem in which they hold the heroic "old Abolitionists," I used sometimes to point them with great pleasure and satisfaction, and I think with good effect, to the noble character and exemplary lives of those remarkable men. I showed them that they not only kept themselves clear from the gross defilement of liquor and tobacco (for they were total abstainers from these vile poisons), but that they hated and stoutly opposed all secret, oath-bound societies, cliques and clans, and that they loved, labored for, and devoted their lives to the cause of true freedom, that freedom of which the poet sang when he wrote:

"He is a freeman whom the TRUTH makes FREE,
And all are slaves beside."

I could furnish the names of hundreds of those heroic "old Abolitionists," the purity, devotion and heroism of whose lives stood out as a bright galaxy illuminating not only the age in which they lived, but the influence of whose devotion to the cause of justice and humanity is still so brightly reflected in the moral heavens. They loved liberty in its highest, truest sense, and so not only fought chattel slavery, but every form of tyranny that could defile or degrade mankind. Hence they were not only temperance men on the broadest scale, but hated Masonry and all its ill-begotten brood of secret lodges.

It would stir the very bones in the graves of these consecrated old moral heroes, could they know how many of the colored people, for whose deliverance they consecrated their "lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor," had been drawn into, and under the power and control of these foes, more demoralizing and deadly than was ever chattel slavery.

I could give the names of hundreds of the most prominent of these veterans. It was my good fortune to know all of these men personally but two—Benjamin Lundy and Elijah P. Lovejoy—and to be associated with them in labors oft, and to know how they stirred the souls of the people from the very depths, and inspired and enthused them with the noblest aspirations for freedom, and for that temperance and "righteousness which exalteth a nation," and which brought the country up to the great and vital issue which at last culminated in the final but awful overthrow of chattel slavery.

Benjamin Lundy, who uttered the first public protests against slavery, and published the first anti-slavery paper advocating emancipation in this country, was a Quaker. He resided in Baltimore, but removed to Indiana before I became acquainted with him. He was a true, clear, earnest temperance man, as well as a devoted anti-slavery leader. William Lloyd Garrison, who caught his spirit, and was associated with Lundy for a short time, was born in Newburyport, Mass. Wendell Phillips, Rev. Joshua Leavitt, John Greenleaf Whittier, Rev. Nathaniel Colver, Hon. James G. Carter, Hon. Elizur Wright, Hon. Francis Jackson, Jonathan Walker with the "Branded hand," Rev. Theodore Parker, Parker Pillsbury, Hon. Amasa Walker, Maria W. Chapman, Lydia Maria Child, Albee Kelly, Hon. (afterwards Senator) Pomeroy, Hon. Samuel E. Sewall, Judge Nathan Crosby, Hon. Henry Wilson, Dr. Charles P. Jewett, Rev. John Pierpont, these all and many others I could name were of Massachusetts also.

Arthur Tappan, Lewis Tappan, Rev. William Goodell, Asa B. Smith, Rev. George B. Cheever, W. R. Smith, Hon. Gerrit Smith, Rev. Samuel J. May, Hon. Alvin Stewart, John Thomas, Col. William L. Chaplin, Rev. C. C. Foote, Dr. J. C. Jackson, and scores of others I could name were of New York.

Theodore D. Weld, Dr. Gamaliel Bailey, Hon. Samuel Lewis, Hon. Salmon P. Chase, Father Coffin and his noble wife (Friends indeed), Hiram Gilmore, Rev. John Rankin, Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, Hon. Thomas Morris, and Dr. Brisbane were of Ohio.

Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, Rev. Owen Lovejoy, Ichabod Coddington, Hon. Zebina Eastman, Hon. James H. Collins, Dr. Dryer, Philo Carpenter, and others were known in Illinois.

William H. Burleigh, Charles C. Burleigh, Lucian Burleigh, Hon. Francis Gillette, Hon. Elihu Burritt, the Learned Blacksmith, A. F. Williams, Esq., and many others were from Connecticut.

Gen. Fessenden and Rev. Austin A. Willey of Maine; Nathaniel I. Rogers of New Hampshire; Hon. James G. Birney, Seymour B. Treadwell, Rev. William M. Sullivan; William H. Hallowell, Nathan Power (Friend), Rev. Marcus Harrison, Laura S. Haviland of Michigan, and scores of others worthy of remembrance, I could name. All of these, as I said before, but two, I knew personally. The lives of every one I want to commend afresh to all our colored brethren as well as everybody else for their exalted work—and not only for their untiring and self-sacrificing devotion to the liberation of the colored race, and their earnest opposition to liquor and tobacco, but their condemnation as well of all secret societies. Read Bro. Foote's terse and truthful delineation of the leading traits in the characters of some of these moral heroes; and let the colored people especially never forget the everlasting debt of gratitude they owe to these their earthly saviours, and how it would elevate and bless them all to emulate the noble example of these loyal and royal men. Yours for all the good we can get out of humanity as well as out of Divinity.

ANOTHER TEXT FOR DR. TALMAGE.

LACON, Ill., May 9, 1887.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I have seen detached portions of Rev. Talmage's sermon on secrecy. I wonder if he has seen the text, "Brethren, I would not have you ignorant of Satan's devices." If so, I would like to know what he thinks of it. My idea of the Christian tie and bond of fellowship is that we must be "born of water and of the Spirit" or perish for want of fitness to unite with an orthodox church on earth, or to be saved by the atoning blood of Christ in Heaven. My idea of secrecy is that when reduced to an association it is a device of Satan and wicked men, and the reason why Christian ministers of the Gospel should be so ignorant as not to know that the mystic tie that binds pirates, horse-thieves, Freemasons and such, is the horrid oath they take to not divulge the secrets, and of course not admit the truth whether on oath in a court of justice or out of court. I have read the story of Captain Kidd the pirate, also the story of Captain Morgan as told by Samuel D. Greene, a Freemason of three degrees and a member of the same lodge with Morgan at Batavia, N. Y., and he tells us that he feared the murder would take place, but the lodge did not know just when and how till the thing had fully matured. I think if Mr. Talmage would inform himself better of those associations mentioned, he would not show to the public so much ignorance about them.

I. DABOLL.

NO HOLINESS IN LODGERY.

Wasco, Oregon.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have made several attempts to get subscribers for you, but the M. E. church seems to hold a mortgage on this part of God's moral heritage, and they seem to think that the world cannot get along without lodgers, especially those who are at the head. In trying to review the past (having been a member of that denomination since the year of 1858) I can remember about twelve presiding elders, and out of that number there are only one or two who were not Masons. On account of lodgers and other abominations practiced in that denomination, about three years ago I withdrew from its communion, since which time I have been standing alone with Jesus, and I must say it is a most blessed privilege. Bless his holy name! My Bible tells me I dare not make myself partaker of other men's sins. The presiding elder on this charge wears his Royal Arch charm and says he is in the enjoyment of the blessing of the higher Christian life; which, according to my knowledge of the higher Christian life and the holy Bible, is blasphemy, to say the least of it; for how can a man be in possession of that state of grace with "blood on his hands." The great M. E. church has a very great wickedness to answer for on account of Masonry alone.

I know that an innumerable company are going to heaven on experience, but the Word nowhere asserts that people can get to heaven when they die on an experience. But it does emphatically and repeatedly declare that all "shall receive according as their work shall be." Experience is a grand and glorious thing if it leads the individual to obey God, for if he obeys God he will be holy "as he is holy." For further proof of what I say I want every reader of this article to read the first seven verses of the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians and carefully note the expression. Also read carefully Romans 5th to 8th, and don't get in a hurry, but mark well what is said. I do urge that people investigate this matter, for it makes me shudder to think of the agonies of a deceived soul. Having a knowledge of these things, and they being of so much importance to every one, I cannot say less than I have, and feel that this subject should be carried to a much greater length; and in conclusion allow me to urge upon you the necessity of getting the truth, as it is in Christ, before the people that they may be able to "flee the wrath to come." Yours in the holy way,

MARTIN MYERS.

PITH AND POINT.

FROM THE LUMBERMAN'S EVANGELIST.

Poor Bro. Talmage stumbles around strangely on this question. He has been wont to roar like a lion against the poison cup, and dance of death and theater craze. But he roars the oath-bound conspirators, digging in the dark through the foundation walls of home, church and state, "as gently as any sucking dove." It bodes little good for the King of Israel when he stoops to palter with the Witch of Endor. Unless he speedily delivers himself the next note will be, "How are the mighty fallen!" I hope to join them who are fighting the good fight of faith this week in Boston.—W. F. DAVIS.

A WORD FOR 1888.

There is often much that is very impressive to my mind about this "irrepressible conflict" between Satan and his dark subtle devices, and God and truth and Christian purity. I shall probably not live to see the conflict ended. I often wonder why God permits Satan and the ten thousand forms of sin to triumph throughout his own beloved Zion and also among our rulers, those of our guilty nation as well as our "rulers in Israel." It is not God's inconsistency but ours that shuts out God's approving smiles. Oh, that we could cling more firmly to the divine arm which alone can destroy these works of darkness. God's faithful few are entering in one by one to their rest and reward, but we can thank God for a few that are still contending for the true faith. I don't think it wise to abandon our old prohibition party (American party) for the new, with such men as J. B. Finch and Stearns as leaders with all their characteristic "sneak and cheek." I hope the Lord will direct us to Senator Pomeroy as our standard bearer for the next President. May the faith that is attained only by prayer and fasting be ours. Oh, for a pure Christian church! Then Christ's kingdom would come speedily. Oh, for God's help in our weakness! May God bless you and help you to work wisely for his cause and glory.—A. B. HOWELL, Champlain, Ill.

A KINGDOM OF DARKNESS.

I feel my duty to express my satisfaction with your good work and especially with the Christian Congress in gaining such a victory over the power of darkness. Dear brethren, hold the torch of light high; the light of heaven is turned to darkness in many quarters in this world. "And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast, and his kingdom was full of darkness." Rev. 15:10.—B. APPEL, Mt. Carroll, Ill.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON IX.—May 29, 1887.—The Red Sea.—Exodus 14: 19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee.—Isa. 43:2.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From the U. P. Bible Teacher.

"And the Angel of God which went before the camp of Israel." v. 19. And you think, what a safe way to travel, led by an angel of God. It was. But do you mean to suggest that they were more fortunate in their leadership than we are? You are greatly mistaken. This Angel, that appeared to them in the pillar of cloud and of fire, has come down from the clouds,—come down to our earth, assumed flesh in the person of Jesus of Nazareth, and is our leader in his divine and human nature as one person. No light shone out from that pillar of fire that does not flame forth a thousand times more brightly from Jesus of Nazareth, our Sun of Righteousness.

"And Moses stretched out his hand." v. 21. Where was the use of Moses stretching out the rod,—did the rod make the sea go back? Is it not expressly said that God caused the sea to go back? Well now, how do you explain it? You can't explain it. Very well, are you quite certain that it needs any explanation? Do you remember where Jesus said to the man with the withered hand, "Stretch forth thy hand"? What followed his obedience? Made whole as the other. And in like manner, what followed Moses's obedience? Sea was divided; got what they needed,—deliverance. There doesn't seem to be any need for any explanations in these cases where God gives directions as to what we are to do, and promises results that are strangely beyond anything that could result from the simple act performed. If this is God's way of bringing our weakness and his power, our impotence and his omnipotence, into harmonious action for the accomplishing of mighty results for our behalf, why, we will not press the glorious God for an explanation.

"The Lord looked unto the host of the Egyptians." He is always looking this way, but his looking has very great difference of signification. He looked on the children of Israel in their bondage, and, moved with pity, came to their rescue. He looked on these Egyptians pursuing his own chosen people for their destruction, and his eye flashed with anger against them, and a storm of wrath swept down upon them that overwhelmed every soul in awful destruction. He looked on the world and saw that the wickedness thereof was great, and sent a flood of water that swept the whole godless race, except one family of obedient souls, from the face of the world they had polluted.

"He looked"—but let us change the tense of that verb from past to present. He is looking—looking on the world. Does he see any oppression? Does he see any poor men and women struggling with cruel masters? Does he see any great wickedness? What of the liquor traffic, and the theatre curse, and the tobacco curse? Ah, me! What things God does see to make him sad—aye, and blessed be his name, he sees that which stirs him up for the deliverance of the needy. He is looking also into your heart. Does his look trouble you? Then you are, as these Egyptians were, the enemy of God. Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?

From Peloubet's Notes.

In the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, and their journey to the promised land, we have a parable of our redemption. The bondage in Egypt is the bondage of sin. Then comes the call of God, a revelation of God; the bitterness of sin and a desire to escape. The crossing of the Red Sea is conversion; then follow many trials, a long discipline, bread from heaven, water of life, the giving of the law, the guidance of the Spirit, the crossing of the Jordan into the land of promise and hope.

The crossing of the Red Sea illustrates the great act of conversion. (1) We seek to escape from the bondage of sin. (2) We find at last that we are unable to save ourselves. (3) We pray to God and he bids us trust him and go forward in the duties close at hand, believing that he will open a way. (4) God performs the divine act, the miracle of regeneration, entirely beyond our power, while (5) we do our part by obeying his word and yielding ourselves completely to his guidance. (6) This is a beginning, but only a beginning, of the Christian life. The long discipline and growth are before us.

God often leads his people in strange ways but they are always the best ways.

"God's people find a path of safety cleft for them through the seas of trouble and danger."

God always goes before his people with his pillar of cloud and of fire,—his Word and his Spirit.

The Word and the providences of God have a twofold aspect: a black and dark side toward sin and sinners; a bright and pleasant side toward those that are Israelites indeed.—Bush.

Ver. 22. God's people find in the path of duty that the objects of their fear become the means of their protection.—Vincent.

God will save all who trust in him; not one shall be lost.

Ver. 27. God will destroy the wicked; not one can escape.

God by his wondrous salvation leads us to reverence his power, and to love one who has done so much for us. Each soul saved by Christ, the Son of God, can look back to a deliverance as great as this vouchsafed to Israel.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

[Miss Flagg's excellent notes below are for the lesson of May 22.—They were received too late for the last number of the Cynosure, but will be in time for most of our readers, and are too good to be lost.]

1. The Institution of the Passover. vs. 1-6. The Israelites were in future to date all events from the time of their birth as a nation, and one especial national festival was instituted to be an abiding memorial of their deliverance, a bond of national unity drawing together not only neighbors and friends but the crowds of strangers which always filled Jerusalem at its yearly recurrence. To this day every orthodox Jew keeps the passover, the only one of their national festivals which has a particular interest for every Christian heart, for it is linked for all time with that night in Jerusalem when our Saviour instituted a new feast of remembrance in place of the old whose spiritual significance had passed away, having fulfilled its purpose. The passover pointed forward to a crucified Redeemer; the Lord's Supper also points forward, but it is to a risen Saviour, ever present and ever-living. "Without blemish." He who was sacrificed for us was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners, and the first condition of true self-sacrifice is separation. Those who are of the world must themselves rise above the world before they can help to save it.

2. The Manner of observing the Passover. vs. 7-14. When the destroying angel saw the blood on the doorposts of the Israelites he passed them by; so the souls sprinkled with the blood of Jesus are forever safe. We are not told that any of the Israelites neglected this precaution, but what if some false prophet had risen up and told them they need not obey Moses, that it was folly to trust in a few drops of blood sprinkled on their doorposts. We should call his guilt great, but how much greater the guilt of those false teachers in our own day who tell men that their lodge religion can save them, though it has no Christ, requires no faith, demands no repentance. All who do this trample the blood of the covenant beneath their feet; they deliberately reject the only sacrifice for human guilt and teach men so. Herein consists the heinousness of Masonry and its satellites, the minor secret orders. It has been truly called "a conspiracy against government, but it is something worse than this, for it is a conspiracy against the Ruler of the universe. They were to eat in haste, with loins girded and staff in hand, all prepared for their long journey, though all unknowing the exact time of the summons. So all who truly remember Christ at his table count themselves mere sojourners on the earth. The inconsistency of professing to seek a better country, while all the time growing more attached to the world and its possessions, is so common that we have almost ceased to regard it as an inconsistency. As they were to eat it with unleavened bread, so we are to keep the feast in sincerity and truth, purging out the old leaven, or, in Paul's words, crucifying the flesh, and rising on a new and ever higher plane of spiritual life.

OBITUARY.

An event occurred on April 17, 1887, which brought sadness to the writer's heart. The event was the death of Bro. Arthur W. Van Alstine, who at the age of 21 years, 7 months and 21 days was called home.

He was a young man of promise, a school teacher of some experience, a close student and an earnest reader of God's Word. He was born in Richland county, Wis., near Richland Center, where he died. He was never a wild boy, but moral in all his conduct, and early learned to reverence the Bible and its teachings although he was not converted until August, 1885.

Early in life he espoused the temperance cause and like many others was drawn into the I. O. G. T., in which order he remained until February 19, 1886, when he renounced the "orders." (See Cynosure of March 4th, '86, page 6, "An Honest Renunciation.") At the time of his renunciation he held a commission from Theo. Kanouse, G. W. C. Templar of Dakota Territory as his Deputy G. W. C. T. and the "giving up" of the lodge at this time could not have been an easy task without the grace of God; and truly this grace was needed just after, as Bro. Van Alstine was assailed by the press (one of the county papers) and denounced as a "pious temperance fraud," whose only business was to deceive. In this he never manifested any anger, but left himself and reputation in the hands of God and his many warm friends.

In May he became a member of "Zion" U. B. church (at Twin Brooks, D. T., the writer being pastor) and remained in that relation to the last. During the summer of 1886 he was State editor of the Worker, a prohibition paper of Louisville, Ky., which merged into the Truthful Witness, and from which Bro. Van A. withdrew, he being a third party man, while the Witness was not favorable to the third party principle.

Mr. Van A. went to Mitchell, D. T., in the summer, to visit a couple of his brothers, and in the fall took a severe cold which culminated in quick consumption, the doctors giving him up three weeks before his death when he went to Richland Center to remain with his sister, Mrs. Amelia Adams, the few days he should live.

It seems that he never had occasion to speak of his leaving the orders while in the last days of his life, as the Good Templars offered to act as pall bearers at the last sad rite and were permitted to do so. Elder Walworth of the Christian church preached the funeral sermon, the services being well attended by the citizens of the city.

My acquaintance with Bro. Van Alstine was comparatively brief but we were attached to each other as brothers and when separated kept up a close correspondence, in which his letters always breathed a deep spirit of submission to the Father's will and an earnest desire to do good to the world for the sake of him who died to save us. He was firm against the lodge to the last, as his letters show, and had hoped to live to see his brothers (two of them) leave the lodge. He leaves a father, four brothers and three sisters to mourn his departure, also an entire class at "Zion" to sympathize with the bereaved; but we all are glad to know that he was ready, and died in the faith.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D.D.,—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during its ascension. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 323, 4.

A. M. MILLIGAN, D.D.,—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D.D.,—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason,—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India,—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowers Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS. LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PORTER and THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts Legislature,—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

REV. MOSES TEACHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "I speak openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

JOSEPH COOK:—I do abhor the selfish, clannish spirit of secret societies.

WILLIAM OTTERBEIN, founder of the church of the United Brethren in Christ:—A Freemason cannot be a Christian.

BISHOP WARBURTON:—Each of the heathen gods, beside the worship paid to him in public, had a secret worship to which none were admitted but those who were prepared by previous ceremonies.

RICHARD S. STORRS, D. D., pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn,—My judgment and feeling are both strongly opposed to the secret lodge system. I heartily agree with what Dr. Howard Crosby has so forcibly said about it.

CARDINAL McCABE, Dublin:—Secret societies, which seem to possess a fatal charm for our people, have from time to time drawn thousands of misguided youths within the fatal circle from which there is no escape.

REV. LEBBEUS ARMSTRONG:—Among the various stratagems of Satan in opposition to God and holiness, and for the purpose of destroying the souls of men, the institution of speculative Freemasonry holds a pre eminent rank.

HENRY G. LUDLOW, pastor Spring St. Presbyterian Church, New York, 1829:—I can hardly think that any candid and intelligent Master Mason can seriously assert that Masonry should be kept up. For my own part I have ever been disgusted with its nonsensical ceremonies, and ashamed of myself for submitting to them.

GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D. D., pastor of Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn, editor of "Words and Weapons,"—I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the "grip" of Masonry and all other secret and unchristian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence.

H. L. HASTINGS,—Freemasonry is the one institution of this country that will not bear investigation. Schools are inspected; churches throw their doors open and invite the strictest scrutiny; political parties are examined, searched and ridled if anything like corruptness is seen or suspected in connection with them; all these institutions simply ask a fair field and no favor.

REV. J. E. ROY, D. D., Secretary American Missionary Association:—A man is not fit to be a jurymen who has taken these Masonic oaths and holds to them. Such a man is not competent to be a constable or a justice of the peace. He has disqualified himself practically and really, for he has by these oaths perjured himself for the one side or the other, and so is unable to do justly in his official relation between man and man.

REV. JAMES H. BROOKES, D. D., editor of the "Truth," and pastor of Washington Avenue Presbyterian church St. Louis:—It would give me pleasure to aid you in your work of seeking to bring Christians out from entangling alliances with secret societies. It seems to me that the positive injunction of the Holy Ghost, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," applies particularly to those disciples of our Lord who have been led into such societies.

THE BISHOP OF BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND:—Freemasonry is built upon the basis of a natural religion having for its foundation the honor and worship of the Supreme Architect of the Universe, but excluding the divine Incarnation and the mysteries of human redemption. Whilst using the sacred Scriptures, as Freemasonry it ignores the divine doctrines of the Christian faith. Pretending to a special and progressive illumination, it resembles, and through several of its writers even claims descent from the secret societies of Pagan Egypt, Greece and Samothrace.

REV. HENRY JONES:—On what then does the whole superstructure of Freemasonry rest but a base fabrication of wicked men, who in some dark and apostate age of the world, have risen up, united into a secret society and darkly handed down their inventions to flatter us to believe that their institution is good as having originated among wise and good men; and being ignorant of the manner in which their false pretensions would be exposed, have told us that it was established on certain specified facts and events, which by looking at them carefully, and comparing them with our Bible, we find never had existence?

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1887.

OUR FREE INSTITUTIONS.—All pulpits pray for them, and all American orators praise them. What are they? They are our churches organized without government licenses and supported without government aid; Congress chosen by the people; an executive chosen in the same way; and courts administered by judges part chosen by popular vote and part selected by appointment; States, counties, cities, towns, villages, corporations, voluntary societies, business firms and families,—all created or sheltered by laws resting at bottom on the will of the people legally expressed. Now there is a secret Masonic lodge at almost every county-seat, and lodges in greater or less numbers in cities and large towns, which exercise the power of administering oaths, to violate which is perjury, which oaths include the penalty of death for their violation; and these lodges assure their members salvation without Christ; and these lodges are working nightly by the side of every legislature, court-house and church in the United States. What is the duty of legislatures and pulpits toward these rivals? Are they not clearly opposition governments and rival religions? Many secret lodges include in the obligations imposed on candidates, that they never will apply to the civil courts for redress of wrongs done them by the lodge. To allow these secret rivals to suck our free institutions hollow, leaving only their shells standing, is nothing less than civil and ecclesiastical madness.

"THAT OLD SERPENT CALLED THE DEVIL AND SATAN."—This phrase occurs twice in the Apocalypse, in chapters 12 and 20. Snakes charm birds, frogs, and other small animals to devour them; and sometimes, it is said, huge serpents charm men. We have seen birds scream and flutter over the head of a black snake, sinking gradually lower, till the reptile was frightened away; when they all at once stopped screaming and flew off silent in all directions. At another time a small, half-grown rabbit was running round and round a huge black snake, which was lying still in the prairie grass, uttering a plaintive scream as he circled round, drawing nearer to the snake's head. This charm also was broken by our coming, and rabbit and serpent fled in silence into the tall grass. When a young man, the writer was doubling around a steep, wooded mountain by Saxton's river, near Bellows' Falls, Vermont, on horseback. All at once the horse snorted and darted backward, when there appeared in the road a common striped snake holding a small frog by its foot. The poor little fellow leaped with his three legs which were loose, in all directions, screeching, till his strength was exhausted. While the little frog leaped and struggled the snake lay still as a stone, but when he stopped leaping, quicker than the flash of powder or of lightning, the snake's jaws darted and gained a hold farther up, an almost imperceptible distance, on the little animal's foot, which he held at first only by the tip of its toes. A smart stroke of the whip broke the reptile's back, and the released frog took himself up the steep mountain-side. When the country was aroused by the New York murder the lodge possumed, lay still and motionless, precisely like that snake while its victim struggled. And like the serpent, too, its jaws improved their grip on the church and country when their struggles ceased. And this history is now repeating itself.

THE APPROACHING FEDERAL CANVASS.

The canvass of 1888 is likely to be fierce and long. Logan is taken out of it. Blaine and Sherman and Cleveland are now the prominent figures in the political arena. St. John is not spoken of, and does not wish to be, doubtless, till reform-politics are in a more hopeful way. Gen. Clinton B. Fiske made a strong canvass for governor in New Jersey, and is a capable and good man. What he thinks of doing about the next national canvass for President, or if he thinks anything about it, is not known.

Meantime 1888 is upon us. What shall be done by those who have voted and wish ever to vote against the secret lodge system? Secrecy rides everything which it runs, and ruins everything which it rides. This, history attests from the Crusades down to the "Good Templars." The name "Templars" ought to be a name of terror to all lovers of God or men. Nine "poor fellow soldiers of Jesus Christ" originated the old crusading order called "Knights of the Temple." Professing poverty they accumulated uncouthed wealth; and professing purity they practiced the vice common to male convents described by Paul in Romans 1: 24-27. The Romish apostasy first suppressed and then adopted this bastard knighthood; and Sir Knight Ignatius Loyola now shines in the popish calendar of saints. Sir Knights Powderly and John B. Finch are now aspirants to wear the mantle of Loyola. Of course no secret party or lodges wish, as such, get control of the U. S. Government. But, like the Know-Nothings, they will split up, weaken, divide and delay the triumph of reform.

The conscience of a secretist stretches to fit all measures. Mr. Finch, in a St. John dinner speech at the Parker House, Boston, said: "If our little secrecy repels good men from voting with us I am for giving it up," and he is now drilling, uniting and wheeling into the political arena the secret temperance lodges with the old National Temperance Society now led by J. N. Stearns, the apostle of secrecy, who crippled and drove out Charles Jewett and Dr. John Marsh.

It is high time the friends of Bible reform were making what little preparation is needed to unite and concentrate their votes steadily against the minions of lodgery.

If the National Christian Association holds its next national meeting in New Orleans next February, will not that be a good time and place to hold a side meeting of citizens to revive the American party and present its noble platform?

The editor of the New York Voice assures us that he is opposed to secret societies. But he publishes, for the information of his readers, the activities of Mr. Finch. We clip from The Voice, May 5th, the following, for the information of our readers:

"Hon. John B. Finch told a representative of The Voice last week that he will take part in all the coming Constitutional Prohibition campaigns. He will go to Texas and Tennessee in June; it may be necessary for him to go to Tennessee in May. He will probably go to Oregon in October. He says that in these campaigns the Good Templars, Sons of Temperance and National Temperance Society will work together. In March he arranged with Eugene Clapp, of Boston, the leader of the Sons of Temperance, to co-operate with the other organizations. Mr. Clapp and Jas. H. Roberts, of Boston, have, with the help of John N. Stearns, made it possible to begin mailing literature early. The mailing began last Monday. The object is to try, with the assistance of the local leaders, to place facts and arguments in the hands of every minister and educator in the critical States."

"The children of this world are wise in their generation." Fas est ab hoste doceri.

ELGIN CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

This body of some twenty churches held its annual meeting with the church at Sycamore, DeKalb county, Illinois, meeting May 10th inst. The opening sermon was by Rev. Mr. Abbott of Geneva, the retiring moderator. Rev. Mr. Leeper, of Batavia, presided, and the annual business was transacted harmoniously and the devotional meetings were excellent. As whatever concerns the editor of the Cynosure concerns our subscribers, we have always kept them informed of matters of interest connected with this body.

Ten years ago the senior warden of the Wheaton Masonic lodge, led in an attempt to remove the president of Wheaton College, and one of the professors was drawn into the movement to revolutionize the College faculty. The entire controversy was explained to our readers at the time; and the facts have been duly attested by many citizens of Wheaton.

Here the matter has rested on the part of the College. A building debt of twenty-three thousand, one hundred and sixty-nine dollars has been paid; revivals of religion have been often enjoyed, the community has been at peace, and a larger number of students have been in attendance at the College the present year than in former years.

By the advice of Drs. Boardman of the Theological Seminary and Goodwin of the First Congregational church, of Chicago, and others, the Wheaton College church, last week, applied to be received into the Elgin Association; but objection being made, arising from the troubles of years ago, by the party which attempted to remove the president of the college at that time; and as an extraordinary false and abusive pamphlet has been kept in continuous circulation by evil disposed persons to stir and fan the embers of controversy, with no apparent rational or good end to be achieved; the Association voted to appoint a committee of five to proceed to Wheaton and advise and assist the two churches concerned, in calling a mutual council, to hear the difficulty from the bottom; and point out and advise methods for restoring peace, justice and harmony; that the churches of Wheaton, and of Illinois, so far as they may have been affected by these matters, may have rest. The committee of advice and assistance appointed are Rev. Messrs. Mitchell of Sycamore, Ball of Elgin, Munroe of Malta, Wright of Crystal Lake, and Harbaugh of Genoa Junction. It is understood the committee are to meet to advise with the Wheaton churches June 2d.

Some of our readers have intimated that the Wheaton College church, which has been blessed with success in their labors for Christ and with tranquility for nine years past, did wrong to ask to reunite in Elgin Association. To such we give the following as some reasons in favor of our application:

1. Good and trusted men advised it.
2. The difficulties are not healed, and the churches suffer. The church members at Sycamore are divided in sentiment and opinion about Wheaton matters.
3. Secret societies take advantage of the contentions of Christians and lie hid under them. If the church at Sycamore knew that some of their members belonged to a secret brotherhood which imposes an oath or imprecation of double damnation on their souls if they reveal its secrets; if they knew that this dark brotherhood mocks and profanes the Passover by pretending to eat the Paschal Lamb in their feasts; and that, too, when some of their members are hardened saloon-keepers; such good men and active Christians as Messrs. Syme and Thomas Wood, who abhor such practices, would not oppose the church at Wheaton for testifying against them. They would rather beseech their brethren to come out from such horrors, and associations with men who do not profess, even, to have saving faith in Christ; and they would love the Wheaton brethren, and thank God that they are lifting up a standard against such fearful abominations. It is the art of Satan to divide Christ's true children by evil reports and falsehoods circulated for truth, while his dark-lantern churches cover our land; draw in our young men by thousands and their money by millions; swear and pledge husbands to life-long concealment from wives, and parents from children, and fill Christ's churches with false brotherhoods, so that when the pastor says, "Dearly beloved brethren," no one can tell to which brotherhood he is speaking.

We request every reader of the Cynosure to offer special, fervent, earnest prayer for the contemplated council; that the real causes of the Wheaton troubles may be discovered and exposed, let who will save or suffer by it; that the "god of this world" may not "blind the minds" of good men, and keep them from co-operating against the darkness of which he is "the ruler" in this world; and that the churches of Elgin Association, which has set this investigation on foot, may have the Spirit of God poured upon them from on high; as Pentecost revivals followed the terrible siftings and sinnings of the disciples on the night of the betrayal.

THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

The meeting of this body in Pittsburg last week has been widely noticed in the secular press. Hon. Felix R. Brunot, so long president of the Association, occupied the chair. At the opening session addresses were made by Rev. James P. Mills of Cleveland, O., one of the district secretaries, and by Prof. David McAllister of Geneva College. The annual report of the Association shows the receipts for the year to have been over $7,000, which has also been expended. Seven district secretaries have been kept in the field. From the information we have gained concerning the management of this Association we judge our own N. C. A. might gain some lessons of value, in setting forth its objects before the public with efficiency and economy.

Our readers have been entertained and instructed highly by the weekly reports of our Cincinnati correspondent, Rev. J. M. Foster, who is one of the secretaries of the Association. The extract from his report they will read with pleasure below:

"In the ten months from July '86 to May '87, we have delivered 135 sermons, and 65 lectures and addresses. Sixty-five of these sermons and fifty of the lectures were upon some phase of the Nation's Responsibility to the King of kings. We interviewed ten presidents of colleges and universities, and a score and a half of professors in these institutions and theological seminaries, 12 editors of secular and religious papers, and pastors above 100. We have spoken in 10 colleges and theological seminaries. In our own city of Cincinnati we have preached in 11 Presbyterian churches, 11 M. E. churches, 3 Congregational, the Lutheran, United Presbyterian and Reformed Presbyterian churches. One hundred and fifty articles and letters were written for the press. Our meetings were fully advertised in the Commercial Gazette. We have collected $1,097.79, an average of $109.78 per month. Twenty thousand pages of tracts were distributed. The reception we received was always cordial, often enthusiastic."

ABOVE ALL LAW HUMAN OR DIVINE.

If any one has doubted that the secret lodge system is neither human nor divine, but diabolical, let him read and reflect on what we clip below from the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette. And this is not Masonry, but a mushroom "Lodge of Knights and Ladies of Honor!" Suppose one member had killed another before that whole lodge. By this Judge White's decision the murder could not be proved though seen by a hundred persons.

SECRET SOCIETY MATTERS NEED NOT BE DIVULGED IN COURT.

Judge White gave an important and very interesting opinion yesterday on a case which was before him in Common Pleas court. The suit grew out of trouble in Banner Lodge No. 484, Knights and Ladies of Honor, which is located in Allegheny. Gen. Archibald Blakely, who had been retained as counsel in some litigation in which the lodge was concerned, was paid $20 for his services by G. W. Miller, a member of the lodge, who was appointed a member of a lodge committee to attend to the matter, and at a subsequent meeting Martin Regg, another member, objected to the payment on the ground that the lodge owed him money for sick benefits and should have paid him first. This led to an acrimonious discussion between Miller and Regg, during which the latter alleges Miller used language that was slanderous and injurious to his character. Therefore he entered suit for $10,000 damages, and the members of the lodge who were present on the evening the discussion took place were subpoenaed as witnesses.

One of these named Joseph Keller, when called upon by A. M. Blakely, counsel for the prosecution, declined to testify on the ground that he would be violating the oath he took when he became a member of the order, as the constitution prohibited him from revealing any of the secret proceedings. Gen. Blakely insisted on the witness' testimony, and Joseph Crown, counsel for the defense, objected and appealed to the court. Judge White then decided that the witness could not be compelled to proceed, as by so doing he would violate the constitution of the order and hold himself liable to expulsion; that he would thus be doing himself an injury, and that he could not in law or equity be compelled so to do.

—A letter from Bro. J. A. Cole from Syracuse says he expects to join Bro. Hinman in Philadelphia this according to previous arrangement. Together they will visit prominent Southern cities and arouse a genuine African enthusiasm among the colored churches against the corrupting and destructive influences of the lodge.

—From Bro. I. R. B. Arnold come very cheering reports of his tent work at Naperville in Du Page county, Ill. At his lecture in which Freemasonry is shown to be in the direct line of descent from ancient Baal worship, an audience of 600 filled the tent, among them all the faculty and students of Northwestern College. All gave undivided attention to the surprising and novel arguments of the lecture, and from all the indications of their effect Bro. Arnold regards it as one of the most successful meetings he has held. He has gone on to Hincley, Ill., on the Chicago and Iowa railroad.

—Along with Bro. Hinman's last letter for this number came two copies of the Morning Star, the Carlisle school monthly, which is not only well printed, but seems to be also an excellent source of information respecting Indian affairs. With the papers are two pictures copied from photographs of a group of young Apache Indians; one as they appeared when they reached Carlisle last November, the other after they had enjoyed the civilizing and Christianizing influences of the institution. Such a transformation in every external feature would be thought incredible did not every lineament show equal change in mind and, one could almost say, in heart. Such results are a grand endorsement of the work of this institution.

—Rev. J. M. Foster, our Cincinnati correspondent, was lately in Indianapolis, where he made an address on national reform. From the report in the Sentinel, of that city, it seems the speaker put his logic and eloquence in array against the whole army of the devil and his angels with some effect, as follows: "Yesterday the Rev. J. M. Foster, from the Buckeye wilds of Cincinnati, took Rev. Mr. Rondthaler's place before his congregation. If he desired the whole earth—speaking theologically—he took it. If he missed anything, certainly he did not intend it. He was evidently prepared to assail everything in sight, polygamy, bigamy, the Chinese question, Congress, saloons, high license, stock gambling, Sunday papers running cars on Sunday and other things ad libitum. Like all the wild, harum scarum dreamers of the impracticable school of thought, his theory, if he has one that will formulate, would shape itself to make laws against all that he might conceive to be the evils of the times, and that would end them. Baseball would stop, Sunday cars would stop, everything would follow suit." That reporter thinks there is more in national reform than just writing God's name in the Constitution.

—"Mr. H. L. Hastings, the American anti-infidel lecturer and writer," says the City Press of London, England, April 27, "gave an address on 'The Bible and Business' before a company of bankers, clerks, and business men, under the auspices of the Bank's Prayer Union, Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue, Leadenhall-street, on Thursday afternoon." Then follows an excellent report of the address which would nearly fill a page of the Cynosure. Thus the editor of the Boston Christian goes everywhere preaching the word. We learn that his present tour is one of the most successful of several he has made in Great Britain, vast audiences frequently attending them, we need not say with what profit to the tens of thousands who have heard his addresses in this country, or the millions who have read the Christian with the greatest spiritual profit.

—The Review of Minneapolis, the Prohibition organ of Minnesota, commends the Knights of Labor in these terms: "The Knights of Labor are 'not far from the kingdom' of prohibition. In the first place their constitution prohibits any liquor-seller from joining the order. The reason for this is, the organization is for producers, and the saloonist is shut out because he is not a producer of anything worthy of being produced. This made the order an antagonist of the saloon from its inception, and now the Knights have taken another step in advance by a decision that 'no assembly shall hereafter be permitted to hold picnics or meetings where liquor is sold, neither shall any assembly be permitted to accept of any profits made on liquor sales, and any assembly violating these rules shall forfeit its charter.'" It is well enough to commend any organized body of men for antagonizing the saloon, but not in such unqualified terms as to endorse and encourage another great evil for which these organizations are responsible, as is the lodge referred to. How much of a prohibitory society this order really is may be understood by a comparison. Instead of Knights of Labor let the name of any church organization be substituted, and the Review will have a clearer view of the case.

THE ILLINOIS STATE FOND.—The late brief appeal of the State executive committee was possibly too brief to be noticed by many of our Illinois friends, as they are not so rapidly responding as we believe the urgency and importance of the case demands. At the request of the committee we repeat the request for aid in carrying on the reform in this State. Please make a note of this matter and write "urgent" over it. The State committee are hoping to have another representative at work soon as colporteur; but much depends upon the co-operation of the reformers of the State at large. With your support this work can be undertaken, not otherwise.

SHORT HORNS.—One Indian, one wild goose, one antelope, one buffalo or wild pigeon, is an exact copy of another. Culture gives variety to men, brute-animals, and birds. If it did not, one farmer would not know his own stock from that of another. The philosophy of species and genera—why it is that "like produces like," like all ultimate principles and processes, is hidden and beyond human knowledge. One hundred years ago, two brothers named Colling, began to improve Durham or short-horn cattle. They did not take a single strain or species to start with; but pure red, pure white, and mixed red-and-white cattle; and they produced the composite breed now known as short-horn cattle; by fixing an ideal perfection; and, by breeding and feeding, seeking to produce perfect cattle.

Deacon David West, a venerable and beloved Christian reformer, living at Sycamore, Ill., has some of this sort of cattle to sell. And any farmer who raises calves, can get a pure bred young male animal of Mr. West for fifty dollars; fully equal to a lot of calves we once bought of Cassius M. Clay, for one hundred and fifty dollars apiece. He has four young bulls, beautiful as pictures, weighing from five to eight hundred pounds.

RUSKIN ON DARWIN.—John Ruskin marked Darwin out of Sir John Lubbock's list of 100 best books. Here is what he gave as the reason for so doing: "Because it is every man's duty to know what he is, and not to think of the embryo he was, nor the skeleton that he shall be. Because, also, Darwin has a moral fascination for all vainly curious and idly speculative persons, and has collected in the train of him every impudent imbecility in Europe, like a dim comet wagging its useless tail to phosphorescent nothing across the steadfast stars."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Universally delighted with the National Capital will be the thousands of visitors who will flock here during the present month. Of course these crowds of strangers will have to look out sharply for their own breakfasts and lunches and dinners and beds. But they will see the most beautiful city in the world in the month of flowers, and they can have a glorious time in many ways, for Washington is more than a thing of beauty. It is the most interesting city in America, as well.

It is to be regretted that the elevator in the Washington Monument will not be in active operation during the National Drill, when so many sight-seers will be in the city. But instead of being lifted rapidly through the shaft they will be compelled to tramp up and down five hundred feet of iron stairway by the light of candles held by themselves. The arrangements are complete for lighting the interior of the monument with seventy-five incandescent electric lights, with which the effect is very striking. The monument was lighted at its dedication, but few persons knew it, as but few entered the monument on that occasion. Since then it has only been lighted for testing purposes, and once in honor of Mrs. Cleveland, who made a trip to the top. The lights are at the stairway landings, and are fastened to brackets extending from the iron framework in the center of the shaft. The effect is very striking as one looks up the shaft from the bottom and sees these brilliant lights on alternate sides, extending all the way to the top, and brilliantly illuminating the entire interior of the structure.

Workmen have placed the memorial stones in the panels prepared for them in the interior of the monument, all the way up, and the inscriptions on them show with perfect distinctness in the electric lights. When some of the cement was taken out in fitting in some of these stones, it was found to be as solid as the marble surrounding it. Curiosity seekers think they ought not to leave Washington without having been to the top of the highest structure in the world built by the hands of man, and although the past winter was unusually inclement and unsuitable for such an excursion, about two thousand people trudged up the winding stairway to its dizzy height during each month.

Secretary Lamar did not attend the State dinner given in honor of the Queen of the Sandwich Islands at the White House during his visit, and the gossips were ready with an explanation. They said it was on account of the complexion of the dusky sovereign. This accusation made it necessary, of course, for the Secretary to come forward with his own explanation. He says his non-appearance was due to neuralgia, from which he has suffered ever since the delivery of that oration at the unveiling of the Calhoun statue in Charleston. He further vouchsafed the information that he very much regretted his inability to sit at dinner with Hawaii's Queen, which he felt would have been a high honor.

Kapiolani could not but be pleased with her reception at the United States Capital if distinguished attentions were what she most desired. Victoria could scarcely have had more honors done her in the same length of time than did the Queen of the little kingdom in the Pacific. The President's wife returned her call at the White House in less than two hours—the limit allowed by the royal etiquette in returning visits. The ladies of the Cabinet and the members of the Cabinet called on the Queen at her hotel; an entertainment was given in her honor at the Hawaiian legation as well as at the White House; a review of troops was made for her benefit; she was taken around to the sights of the city by a committee of reception; she was taken to Mount Vernon on the United States steamer Despatch; and she was the recipient of various other attentions from private organizations and from private but distinguished individuals.

On the Queen's trip to Mount Vernon, "Nice customs courtesy to kings" was rigidly observed. She was escorted to the steamer past a line made up of officers of the Navy yard gathered to do her homage, while a royal salvo of twenty-one guns was fired. Inside the cabin Kapiolani found herself the centre of a distinguished company. The Diplomatic Corps was generously represented by the ministers from Chili, Venezuela, the Netherlands, Austria, Japan, Turkey, Switzerland, the Russian 'Chargé d'affaires,' and the Chinese Secretary of Legation. Our own Government was represented by officials of the War, State and Navy Departments, members of the Supreme Court, and by members of the Senate and House committees on Foreign Relations, besides sixty or seventy other persons of recognized importance in politics or society.

THE HOME.

LOWLY, BUT ASPIRING.

Mine may not be the shining of the sun,
Lighting the pathway of great worlds afar;
No more the moon's full light, when day is done,
Nor yet the golden twinkling of a star;
But if a glow-worm's soft and steady light
Be only mine to give in sweet content—
A tiny glow-worm's shining in the night—
To break the gloom for some poor pilgrim sent,
Perchance in ways time's saintly feet have trod,
I still may light some soul to heaven and God!

Mine may not be the beauty of the rose,
Fragrant and fresh with morning's dewy balm,
Nor orange blossoms pure as falling snows,
And sweet as ever strain of wedding psalm;
But if in lowliness my whole life through
A lily of the valley I may be—
A lily of the valley to a few
In some spring hour in gladness drawn to me,
I still may hope through God's good will and grace
To too some soul to seek and find his face!

I am what God has made me, and I know
I have a place and time, a work and way;
So with a happy heart I would bestow
My humbler meed of blessing while I may,
Content each golden day to find my place,
Do well my work, and mark my way with love,
To be what God would have me, by his grace,
Serenely climbing to the hills above.
And there, as his great blessing, I shall see
Crowned ones, won to their crowning by me!

THE JOY OF SALVATION.

You will find in the teaching of Scripture, that while you are saved by Christ's work and assured by God's word, you are maintained in comfort and joy by the Holy Ghost, who indwells every saved one's body.

Now, you must bear in mind that every saved one has still within him "the flesh," i. e., the evil nature he was born with as a natural man, and which perhaps shows itself while still a helpless infant on his mother's lap. The Holy Ghost in the believer resists the flesh, and is grieved by every activity of it, in motive, word, or deed. When he is walking "worthy of the Lord," the Holy Ghost will be producing in his soul his blessed fruits—"love, joy, peace," etc., see Gal. 5: 22. When he is walking in a carnal, worldly way, the Spirit is grieved, and these fruits are wanting in greater or less measure.

Let me put it thus for you who do not believe on God's Son:

Christ's work and your salvation stand or fall together.

Your walk and your enjoyment stand or fall together.

If Christ's work could break down (and blessed be God it never, never will) your salvation would break down with it. When your walk breaks down (and be watchful, for it may), your enjoyment will break down with it.

Thus, it is said of the early disciples, Acts 9: 31, that they "walked in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost."

And, again, in Acts 13: 52, "The disciples were filled with joy and with the Holy Ghost."

My spiritual joy will be in proportion to the spiritual character of my walk after I am saved.

Now, do you see your mistake? You have been mixing up enjoyment with your safety—two widely different things. When through self-indulgence, loss of temper, worldliness, etc., you grieved the Holy Spirit, and lost your joy, you thought your safety was undermined. But, again, I repeat it—

Your safety hangs upon Christ's work for you.

Your assurance, upon God's word to you.

Your enjoyment, upon not grieving the Holy Ghost in you.

When as a child of God you do anything to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, your communion with the Father and the Son is, for the time, practically suspended; and it is only when you judge yourself and confess your sins that the joy of communion is restored.

Your child has been guilty of some misdemeanor. He shows upon his countenance the evident mark that something is wrong with him. Half an hour before this he was enjoying a walk with you round the garden, admiring what you admired, enjoying what you enjoyed; in other words, he was in communion with you, his feelings and sympathies were in common with yours.

But now all this is changed, and as a naughty, disobedient child, he stands in the corner, the very picture of misery.

Upon penitent confession of his wrong-doing you have assured him of forgiveness, but his pride and self-will keep him sobbing there.

Where is now the joy of half an hour ago? All gone. Why? Because communion between you and him has been interrupted.

What has become of the relationship that existed between you and your son half an hour ago? Has that gone, too? Is that severed or interrupted? Surely not. His relationship depends upon his birth; his communion, upon his behavior.

But presently he comes out of the corner with broken will and broken heart, confessing the whole thing from first to last, so that you see he hates the disobedience and naughtiness as much as you do, and you take him into your arms and cover him with kisses. His joy is restored because communion is restored.

When David sinned so grievously in the matter of Uriah's wife, he did not say, Restore unto me Thy salvation, but, "Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation." Ps. 51: 12.

But to carry our illustration a little farther. Supposing while your child is in the corner, there should be a cry of "House on fire!" throughout your dwelling, what would become of him then? Left in the corner to be consumed in the burning, falling house? Impossible!

Very probably he would be the very first person you would carry out. Ah, yes, you know right well that the love of relationship is one thing, and the joy of communion quite another.

Now, when the believer sins, communion is for the time interrupted, and joy is lost until with a broken heart he comes to the Father in self-judgment, confessing his sins.

Then, also, he knows he is forgiven, for his word plainly declares that "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1: 9.

Oh, then, dear child of God, ever bear in mind these two things, that there is nothing so strong as the link of relationship; nothing so tender as the link of communion.

All the combined power and counsel of earth and hell cannot sever the former, while an impure motive or an idle word will break the latter.

If you are troubled with a cloudy half hour, get low before God, consider your ways; and when the cause that has robbed you of your joy has been detected, bring it at once to the light, confess your sin to God your Father, and judge yourself most unsparingly for the unwatchful, careless state of soul that allowed the thief to enter unchallenged.

But never, never, never confound your safety with your joy.—Selected.

JOY IN THE HOLY GHOST.

When, in a Christian land, any class of people discard Christ, their songs die out because their joy has withered. Spiritualism has no exultant songs because it has no gladness in Jesus. It may gather in the tented grove, under the inspiration of waving trees, singing birds, verdant fields, glittering stars, and azure skies, but confesses that it cannot counterfeit the Christian psalmody which rolls down the ages, lifting the heart of the believer nearer to God. Mormonism, in her mountain-girded valley, sits songless. The habitations of Utah are gladdened by no melodious praise warbled from human lips. Travelers remark this dearth of song in a land smiling with plenty. The explanation is easy. There is no Holy Ghost in their religion. It sows to the flesh and not to the spirit. Free religion assembles in conventions, and argues, denounces and blasphemes; but when she tries to sing, her voice is like the gibbering of a ghost in a sepulcher.

Do not SEEK JOY. Seek not the gift but the Giver. There is a subtle selfishness in, crying for joy. If you receive the Giver you will insure the gift. But beware lest you fix your eyes on the gift aside from the Giver.

As the careful engineer occasionally stops his train in order to click the wheels and prove their soundness, so God may at times interrupt the current of conscious love, to afford us an appropriate occasion for spiritual introspection.

SEEK ME, and as an incidental result, your joy will be full. Seek ye first the kingdom of God, not in order that food and raiment may be added unto you; but "all things shall be added" as an incidental consequence.—Daniel Steel.

JOYFULNESS AND USEFULNESS.

Above all things see to it that your souls are happy in the Lord. Other things may press upon you; the Lord's work even may have urgent claims upon your attention; but I deliberately repeat, it is of supreme, paramount importance that you should seek, above all other things, to have your souls truly happy in God himself. Day by day seek to make this the most important business of your life. This has been my firm and settled conviction for the last five and thirty years. For the first four years after my conversion I knew not its vast importance; but now, after much experience, I specially commend this point to the notice of my younger brothers and sisters in Christ. The secret of all true effectual service is joy in the Lord, and having experimental acquaintance and fellowship with God himself.

But in what way shall we attain to this settled happiness of soul? How shall we obtain such an all sufficient, soul-satisfying portion of him as shall enable us to let go the things of this world, as vain and worthless in comparison? I answer, this happiness is to be obtained through the study of the Holy Scriptures. God has therein revealed himself to us in the face of Jesus Christ. In the Scriptures, by the power of the Holy Ghost, he makes himself known unto our souls. Remember, it is not a God of our own thoughts or imaginations that we need to be acquainted with; but the God of the Bible, our Father, who has given the blessed Jesus to die for us. Him should we seek intimately to know, according to the revelation he has made of himself in his own precious word.—George Muller.

A CHEERFUL FACE.

Next to the sunlight of heaven is the cheerful face. There is no mistaking it—the bright eye, the unclouded brow, the sunny smile, all tell of that which dwells within. Who has not felt its electrifying influence? One glance at this face lifts us out of the mists and shadows into the beautiful realms of hope. One cheerful face in a household will keep everything warm and bright within. A host of evil passions may lurk around the door, but they never enter and abide there; the cheerful face will put them to shame and flight.

It may be a very plain face, but there is something in it we feel, yet cannot express; and its cheery smile sends the blood dancing through our veins for very joy. Ah, there is a world of magic in the plain, cheerful face! It charms us with a spell of eternity, and we would not exchange it for all the soulless beauty that ever graced the fairest form on earth.

It may be a very little face, but somehow this cheery little face ever shines, and the shining is so bright that the shadows cannot remain, and silently they creep away into the dark corners where the pleasant face is gone.

It may be a wrinkled face, but it is all the dearer for that, and none the less cheerful. We linger near it, and gaze tenderly upon it, and say: "God bless this dear, happy face!" We must keep it with us as long as we can, for home will lose much of its brightness when this sweet face is gone. And after it is gone, how the remembrance of it softens our wayward natures. When care and sorrow would snap our heart strings asunder, this wrinkled face looks down upon us, and the painful tension grows lighter, the way seems less dreary, and the sorrow less heavy.

God bless the cheerful face! What a dreary world this would be without this heaven-born light! And he who has it not should pray for his daily bread.—Sel.

HOW A BOUQUET OF SNOWDROPS WON A SOUL TO GOD.

[From the German.]

Little Mary had been blind from her birth; but she was the light of the house, and a favorite with all who knew her. God had blessed her with a spirit of love and gentleness, and her infirmity seemed only to bring her into closer union with him. Everyone who saw her spontaneously loved her; for her pretty features, encircled by blonde curls, and her sober yet loving expression mightily attracted all hearts. They seemed the mirror of a soul consecrated to God. Her father was a rich gentleman's head-gardener, who, having lost his wife and daughter on his journeys, had now returned to reside on his estate. He lived in his books, in which, after his double loss, he had become so buried that he no longer had any intercourse with his fellow-men. But Mary had great sympathy for the lonely father—he was always so considerate and kind to those under him. She was always asking after him and wishing to know about his interests. Her mother told her that people said his heart was broken by the loss of his wife and child of whom he had been so proud, and Mary asked, "Then why does he not go to God, who is able to heal his grief?" The mother, deeply moved, kissed the dear little questioner, and then said, "My dear child, he does not believe in God; he never reads his Word, and never prays to him." "How is that possible? I thought everybody did that. O, mother, what would become of me without God?" With these words her beautiful eyes filled with tears. She went to the window, though the landscape without was as dark to her as night, and stood awhile reflecting. But from that day she prayed every night for the poor, desolate man.

The next day, when her father came home to dinner, he brought with him a bouquet of snowdrops, which gave her great pleasure. "Is it not kind in God to send us again every year these sweet flowers," she thought, as she moved her gentle fingers over the humble messengers of spring. Her father pressed her to his heart, saying to her, "I have waited impatiently for them, because they are the first spring flowers, and because they are your favorites, which I gather for you every year." "I think," said the child, "after you and mother, the snowdrops are the things I love most; I am always so happy when I feel them in my hand. Was it not lovely in them to come so early, while the earth was still frozen?" She wanted to have their form and hue described to her again and again. They came to her like a salutation from heaven, and, as long as they lasted, a fresh bunch was brought daily and put into her vase. She had the vase placed close to the window, that passers-by might enjoy them also. She knew every part of the garden so well that she could go about it alone, and this, on sunny days, was her delight.

One morning she sought out the spot where her favorites grew most luxuriantly. The pretty flowers seemed to salute their blind mistress lovingly. She knelt upon the ground that she might touch them with her tongue, exclaiming in her lively and childish way, "O, you dear, dear snowdrops!" as a rosy glow lighted up her otherwise pale face.

She did not notice the footsteps of the gentleman who had come thither, like herself, on his morning walk, and who paused to observe with glowing sympathy the delight she manifested in the flowers. "My child, you love these flowers very much," he said at last, wondering how she had come into the garden, and not recognizing her, often as he had met her when she had come in with her father.

Mary rose up, blushing, when she heard the voice of her questioner, and said, trembling, "But I know how they look, if I am blind. They are the first flowers I learned to know and love." The owner of the garden now noticed that the child was blind, and, bethinking himself, asked her, "You are the gardener's child, are you not? Tell your father you may take as many of the roses and lilies as you please; they are prettier than these snowdrops." She told him how grateful she was for his kindness, adding, however, "But I love the snowdrops most, they are so pure, and they always teach me to love God more." Then she offered him her bouquet, and continued, "Take them with you; perhaps they will teach you to love God, too; I pray for you every day that you may learn to love him."

He could not refuse the bouquet which was pressed into his hand with such sweet, childish simplicity. He said a few words indistinctly, and continued his walk. Perhaps it was the memory of his own dear child which took such hold of him at the sight of this little one. Or, was it her suffering and her sympathy which moved him so deeply? However it might be, an abundance of flowers and of beautiful presents of various kinds from that day passed from the great house to the gardener's cottage.

A year has passed, the spring has come again, and snowdrops by the hundred have lifted up their heads. God has sent them once more upon the earth to teach the passers-by lessons of purity and perfection. A man is seen bending down to pluck a great bunch of them, and tears are flowing over his cheeks. It is Mary's father who is going to take them home; but the little maiden is no longer there to take them in her hands and kiss them. Only yesterday God took her away. The mother takes them and places them in the dear child's hands; "the flowers of heaven," as Mary used to call them, were more fit than any others to adorn the pale tabernacle of such a Christ-like child. "John," she said to her husband, "Mary wished you, as long as the flowers lasted, to gather a bunch of them every day and carry them over to the gentleman, and tell him that she had prayed for him day and night, and that in heaven she would pray God to open his heart, and to send him light and consolation."

She had scarcely finished speaking, when a shadow passed the window, and there was a knock at the door. It was the gentleman himself, who had heard of the affliction of his faithful gardener, and who had come to ask the parents if he could be of any assistance to them. They led him in, and he stood in silence before the little body. A smile lingered about her lips, and the white snowdrops were clasped by her fingers. The father was weeping, but the mother, lifting her eyes heavenwards, said, "I cannot weep, for I know that my child can now see, and that she is unspeakably happy."

As she spoke she forgot all fear of the great man, and told him the message left for him by the dear child. The words moved him deeply, but still more deeply the sight of the dear, beautiful child and her flowers. He could not speak; he left the house in haste. Daily, as long as the spring flowers lasted, the gardener brought to him the bouquet of snowdrops.

And God heard the prayer of the little blind girl, and the flowers seemed like his response. Not suddenly, but by degrees light broke upon the path of the desolate man whose heart was first moved by the blind girl's flowers, and who now believed that, in answer to her prayers, God had given him a new heart.

One day he visited the gardener's cottage and told the father and mother of the little blind girl of the change that had passed over him, and how God had given him sight, to which he had so long closed his eyes. Every spring the snowdrops stood in the cottage window, and many passers-by who had learned the moving story noticed them. But in the gentleman's house, the flowers stood in a costly silver vase, serving as gentle monitors, and as a memorial of one whose gentle influence had won a soul to God.—Translated from the "Wahrheitszeuge" for the Standard.

DEAR LITTLE HEADS IN THE PEW.

In the morn of the holy Sabbath,
I like in the church to see
The dear little children clustered,
Worshipping there with me.
I am sure that the gentle pastor,
Whose words are like summer dew,
Is cheered as he gazes over
The dear little heads in the pew.

Faces earnest and thoughtful,
Innocent, grave and sweet,
They look in the congregation
Like lilies among the wheat;
I think that the tender Master
Whose mercies are ever new,
Has a special benediction
For the dear little heads in the pew.

When they hear, "The Lord is my Shepherd,"
Or, "Suffer the babes to come,"
They are glad that the loving Jesus
Has given the lambs a home—
A place of their own with his people;
He cares for me and for you,
But close in his arms he gathers
The dear little heads in the pew.

So I love, in the great assembly,
On the Sabbath morning to see,
The dear little children clustered,
And worshipping there with me;
For I know that the precious Saviour,
Whose mercies are ever new,
Has a special benediction
For the dear little heads in the pew.

TEMPERANCE.

THE OHIO SALOON MURDER.

[From the Voice.]

Dr. Northup was about forty years old, and was not married. He was reared in Northuptown, about seven miles from Gallipolis, Ohio. He graduated at the Ann Arbor, Michigan, Medical College, and practiced medicine for several years in Gallia county, West Virginia. Then he removed to Haverhill, where he has been living for about seven years. He was a Republican in politics, and was a strong and practical advocate of temperance. This was the chief cause of the hatred that the McCoy's conceived for him—a hatred that has been manifested for years. What he believed he was not afraid to advocate at any time or place. He was a mover for the enforcement of the liquor laws, and Alf McCoy, when indicted and tried for the unlawful selling of whisky and confined in jail, attributed his misfortunes to Northup.

Alf McCoy is a saloon keeper who has gained the ill-will of the entire community by his conduct. He is a Democrat and has always taken an active part in politics; is a violent hater of temperance and despises the churches and all moral organizations. He trained his children from their birth to hate and bemean such men as the one he shot.

On Wednesday, April 27, the doctor was met on the street by the McCoy's. Without warning the McCoy's opened fire upon him with their revolvers. Being unarmed Dr. Northup retreated; the McCoy's followed, keeping up their fire until they had emptied their revolvers. Dr. Northup went down towards his boarding-house, which was about forty yards away. Then he returned to get his hat which had fallen off. By this time one of McCoy's small boys had gone to the saloon and procured a double-barreled shot-gun loaded with buck-shot, and had returned and given it to his brother Pierson. The father took the gun from Pierson and started at the doctor again, who was retreating to seek shelter. McCoy overtook him, placed the muzzle against his body, and fired both barrels. One load took effect in the doctor's left arm, tearing it to pieces; the other load entered the left side of his back three inches from the spinal column, and the shot cut the spine in two. The doctor fell dead.

The post mortem examination showed that there had been fired into Dr. Northup's back forty-six buck-shot and three pistol shots.

Alf McCoy, two of his sons, and his brother James, postmaster of Haverhill, have been arrested and taken to the County Jail at Portsmouth, Ohio.

[From the Chicago Daily News.]

If there was ever a more deliberate or fiendish murder than that of Dr. W. T. Northup at Haverhill, April, 27, the details of which I telegraphed you Friday last, no record was ever made of it. Communities having less law and order than staid, old Scioto county, and communities possessing even a higher order of civilization, have turned out en masse and lynched criminals for committing lesser crimes. Yet here is Scioto county, forming a portion of the garden spot of the State in the fertility of her soil and the progress of her mental and physical culture, quietly discussing the merits of a crime so horrible in its detail as to be almost beyond human belief.

For a few days after the killing of Dr. Northup by the McCoy's there was a universal expression of horror. Not a palliating circumstance in extenuation could be heard either at Haverhill, where the deed was committed, or at Portsmouth, the county seat, twenty-one miles away. So brutal was the crime that words of condemnation could be heard from every side, and the question, "Why didn't they lynch them?" was one of common inquiry. The last week, however, has wrought a wonderful change. While there are none who have the hardihood to openly defend the cowardly McCoy's, it is becoming a common thing to hear persons questioning whether they were not in some degree justified in making an assault upon Dr. Northup. The Democratic paper of Portsmouth, four days after the McCoy's were locked up, attempted to make political capital of the matter, and since that publication the case has so rapidly taken political shape that there is now fear among the authorities that the criminals will never be convicted, or, if convicted, that it will be either of murder in the second degree or of manslaughter. Until your correspondent came here last Wednesday, Sheriff Yeager had carefully excluded all visitors and newspaper men from the jail.

"Why?" I asked.

"Well," said he, "I am afraid politics will get mixed up in the case. I had been cautioned not to let anything occur that the defense could take any advantage of from a political standpoint. The McCoy's are Democrats and whisky sellers, and, as you know, the county officials are all Republicans. Besides, there has been an effort made for a long time to prohibit whisky traffic at Haverhill, but without success, and, as I understand, the McCoy's attribute their trouble with Northup to the fact that they sold whisky."

James McCoy, the postmaster, did not do any of the shooting that sent fifty bullets into the dying Dr. Northup. All that he did was to close his post-office door to prevent Dr. Northup's escape from his bloodthirsty pursuers, and then, seeing that his brother and nephew had both emptied their revolvers, he grabbed up his shot-gun from behind the counter and ran out the door with it. But Tom McCoy, the second son of Alfred, aged fifteen, had anticipated his father's wants and gone into his house and brought out the double-barreled gun Pierson was seen loading three hours before the attack was made on the doctor. This he handed to Pierson, or some say Pierson took it from him, and Pierson, starting in pursuit, was met by his father, who in turn took the gun from him and went in pursuit of Northup. While this was going on Dr. Northup, crazed with pain, stood leaning against the fence sixty-five yards away, cutting a bullet from his arm, having done which the doctor turned and, still in a dazed condition, started back up the road. Seeing "Alf" McCoy coming running with his gun, he started on a zigzag run across the road, trying to get away. With the fury of a fiend, "Alf" McCoy bore down upon him. He was running in the direction of the river, where there was a considerable declivity in the road, and before his victim, riddled with bullets, could cross the road and take refuge in the house of Mrs. Birch he intercepted him and discharged both barrels of the gun into his body. Dr. Northup fell dead without uttering a word. He had uttered only two sentences from the time the assault was made until he died. One was that "his wrist pained him so," when he stopped to cut the bullet out of it, and the other, "my hat," when he turned almost beside himself to go back up the road.

Haverhill has but eleven houses in it, yet one or two members of every family in the village was a witness to some portion of this butchery. They are all poor people, doing odd jobs for a living. Some of them have trades, and one or two are in the employ of the railroad. Alfred McCoy keeps, besides his saloon and a make-believe grocery, a sort of lodging house for the accommodation of merchant travelers, who, leaving the Scioto Valley railroad at Haverhill station, desire to cross over to Greenup, Ky., which is directly opposite Haverhill on the Ohio river. This lodging house he dignifies with the name of the McCoy house. He owns, besides, a small and much decayed little frame house in the northern edge of the village. He has a family of seven children and a quiet little wife. At least she seemed quiet to your correspondent who spent a night in the inn. She is suffering severely from the trouble that has overtaken her husband, and the writer was led to the belief that she was rather a demure person. The near neighbors, however, looked at each other and smiled when this was suggested to them, and said she was quiet enough now. Not much is said against James McCoy, except that he was ever ready to hand "Alf" a gun when he got into trouble.

The Ohio valley at this point is two miles wide on the Ohio side and very fertile. The farm-houses are neat, roving, and bespeak thrift and prosperity on the part of their owners. The people are intelligent, the young men and women of the neighborhood being possessed of at least a good common-school education, and some of them receiving a few years in college.

One of the interesting relics of Carlisle Barracks is the old stone Guard House, with walls five feet thick. It was built in the time of the Revolution, by Hessian prisoners, who were ever afterwards confined within it. Another house was pointed out to me where Major Andre was kept for a time.

Together with Rev. Jas. Brown I called on Rev. Dr. Norcross, pastor of Second Presbyterian church. He expressed his hearty approval of our reform, and promised to aid in a lecture in that city. From there I came to Harrisburg, and took a room in the Y. M. C. A. building, where I have received great kindness and attention.

As the Legislature was in session, I went into the State Senate and listened to a discussion of the pending High License Bill, which seems likely to become a law. There are three parties to this measure. Those who regard it the best practical plan of restricting the liquor traffic, those who regard it as a breakwater to prohibition and the prohibition party, and, third, the liquor men, who want to remove all restrictions from the liquor traffic as far as possible. This last class succeeded in carrying an amendment making the granting of licenses mandatory instead of permissive. Nevertheless, prohibition is in the air, and will inevitably come.

The State House is one of the least pretentious of all the State capitals I have seen. It is most beautifully located, and from its top there is a magnificent view of city, river and mountains. On the east stands a fine monument, erected to the memory of the soldiers who died in the Mexican war, and beside it there are a number of brass cannon, brought home from the battle of Cerro Gordo. They are beautiful pieces, most of them old Spanish guns, more than one hundred years old. One is an English gun, made in 1842. It was captured in 1847. In the centre of Second street is a brown stone obelisk, erected to those who fell in the war of the Rebellion. Of all the monuments I have seen, North or South, Union or Rebel, none has equalled it in ugliness.

Since writing the above the High License Bill has passed both houses of the Legislature, and awaits the Governor's signature. It is a tolerably stringent measure, and will show what high license can do. It is doubtless relied on to defeat the prohibition amendment in this State. The result will be watched with great interest. A large percentage of the members of the Legislature wear the badge of the G. A. R., but I saw few Masonic emblems.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Evangelist Moody delivered his farewell address to business men yesterday noon, at Farwell Hall, and subsequently left for his home at Northfield, Mass.

—The Congregationalist ministers of London, at a meeting last Tuesday adopted almost unanimously a resolution offered by Dr. Parker of the City Temple protesting against the Irish Coercion bill now before Parliament, demanding that the Irish people shall be treated with justice, and urging the Government to adopt a policy of conciliation in dealing with the Irish question.

—The Illinois Conference of the Swedish Augustana Synod (Lutheran) has purchased a hospital building in Chicago, Ill., for $35,000.

—The home Sunday-school of Mr. Spurgeon's church has 108 teachers, all members of the church, and 1,428 scholars. In all the schools connected with the Tabernacle there are 7,677 scholars.

—The friends of Sabbath observance in England are hoping for the passage of the bill by Parliament stopping the Sunday delivery of letters in the United Kingdom, thus securing a day of rest for an over-worked class of public servants.

—The Episcopal Diocesan Convention of South Carolina, in session at Charleston, was agitated Friday by a discussion of the "color line" question. The lay delegates from fourteen parishes, who favored the admission of colored delegates, quitted the convention.

—The International Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association, in session in San Francisco on Thursday, elected the Hon. S. H. Black, of Toronto, President.

—The English Presbyterian Mission in China, which has now been at work forty years, has two presbyteries formed of native pastors and elders, and a third is about to be formed in Formosa. There are five thousand adult communicants.

—The London Missionary Society are about to send back the Rev. T. Shaw and his wife to their field at Tamatave, Madagascar. Three years ago he was imprisoned and shamefully treated and plundered by the French at the instigation of the Jesuit priests. Now that France has ignominiously failed in reducing that people to its servitude, it is safe again for this Christian missionary to return to his labors for their elevation.

—The largest parishes in the Lutheran church are to be found in Central Russia. One of these numbers 300 villages and comprises 35,000 souls.

—The correspondent of the Independent, writing of Dr. L. W. Munhall's work in Worcester, Mass., says: "There was not an hour's interruption of the rising enthusiasm of the churches and the workers from the time that the work began until its close. No break in the harmony of the churches, no interposition of any distracting outside matters, no diminution of the very large attendance, and not an act on the part of the evangelist to detach or diminish the strong confidence which he at first inspired. On the contrary, Dr. Munhall steadily rose in the esteem of the pastors, churches and people, and only departed at the end of nearly four weeks because his Toledo engagement, already two weeks deferred, must be met. The congregations at the afternoon Bible readings increased to the last, numbering them from six to seven hundred. Evening audiences were only limited by the capacity of the church, throughout the entire series, and the churches waived all, even business meetings, to give undivided attention to the work of the revival." "We have initiated a great evangelistic movement, likely to continue indefinitely. The impression left by Dr. Munhall is wholly good and helpful. He is possessed of a courage which knows no fear, which deals in the plainest interpretation of the Bible, and unveils the most hidden sins of men. He does not spare sinners in the church or out of it, but is neither censorious, crabbed, reckless nor hasty. He has wounded, but to bind up, and has labored with untiring energy to instruct, enlighten, convince, persuade and assist the inquirers."

—The restless aggregation of the China Inland Mission—a society only twenty years old but now numbering 170 members, has done much to open up the country hitherto closed to all but the venturesome traveler. This mission was founded by Dr. J. H. Taylor, and has some striking features which are perhaps worthy of mention. Recognizing that the work is God's, it seeks to lean very definitely upon him for guidance, supply and blessing. It never goes into debt. It never publicly solicits money, and guarantees no salary to its members. It studiously avoids appeals to consuls, or even mandarins, for protection or even justice. About 15 of the missionaries support themselves, and some of them further help the society with money. But, for the most part, it trusts to the free-will offerings of God's people, and has ever been able to expand its work. It is now the largest and most scattered mission in China, and counts nearly 2,000 converts.

—The Southern Baptist Convention met in its thirty-second session (forty-second year) with the Broadway Baptist church, Louisville, Ky., Friday, May 6th. This body is the general missionary organization of the Baptist denomination in the Southern States. It was organized in Augusta, Ga., in 1845, consequent upon the unfortunate controversy about slavery which prevented hearty co-operation between the Baptists of the two sections in the old Triennial Convention formed in 1814. In the territory represented by this body there are sixteen States, in which there are 22,576 churches with a total membership of 1,939,140. Of these probably one-half are colored churches, whose work is not represented in the missionary statistics of the convention. million white Baptists have their delegates here. One The majority of the Baptists in the South are in the rural districts, where the churches seldom have preaching oftener than once a month, and consequently are not developed in regard to the grand missionary enterprises of the denomination. The Board has missions in all the continents excepting Australia. In Africa there are five stations. In these stations, on the western coast, there are eight missionaries with eight native evangelists and assistants. The church-membership is 136, of whom twenty-six were baptized the past conventional year. In the schools are 284 pupils.

—A practical evil among the colored people of the South is the multitude of secret societies, many of them with Bible names, into which they are led, and which absorbs their time, their thought, their religion, their money, and often their morals. The colored man has a natural love for show and pageantry, and so becomes an easy prey. That he errs largely through ignorance is shown by the fact that many of these societies, along with their amusements, attempt to compensate the church by contributing to its work, or to the missionary cause, as if the church was but a society, and one society was as good as another. Our missionaries would be helped if the Publication Society would issue a suitable tract on this subject, teaching the true place of the church.—Missionary Visitor, (Baptist.)

LITERATURE.

CURRENT RELIGIOUS PERILS.—The Boston Monday Lectureship, under whose auspices Joseph Cook, the greatest of American lecturers, has delivered thirteen annual courses, lately sent out the following questions to a number of prominent individuals: "1. What, in your opinion, are the chief current religious perils?" "2. In what particulars does modern Christianity fail to follow Christ?" Of course answers to such leading and generic questions as these by careful selection of correspondents could be made to include the whole range of theological and social discussion, and cannot fail of their popular interest. Among those who have replied are Prof. Edwards A. Park, Dr. John Hall, Miss Frances E. Willard, Mrs. Herrick Johnson, Josiah Strong, F. D. Huntington, Bishop W. R. Nicholson, Dr. G. F. Magoun, Pres. J. H. Fairchild, Cyrus Hamlin, Julius H. Seelye, Profs. G. N. Boardman, S. I. Curtiss, G. F. Wright, Daniel Steele, I. E. Dwinell, Drs. John E. Todd, F. K. Alden, Hon. Neal Dow. The pamphlet can be had of the old printing house of Rand Avery Company, of Boston, at the nominal price of 20 cents, in the same handsome style in which they have been issuing the reports of Joseph Cook's regular Monday Lectures.

Mr. Henry Wood, the author of the book entitled "Natural Law in the Business World," which was published recently by Lee and Shepard, Boston, and which is exciting the most earnest attention in the Eastern States, and, indeed, in all sections of the country, was formerly a well-known business man of Chicago, whom the older residents will recall as a member of the wholesale house of Messrs. Keith, Wood and Company, who were engaged extensively in the wholesale trade of this city before the great fire. There is every indication that Mr. Wood's book will be the most popular of any yet published which discuss the economic subjects brought to the front by the agitation of the labor question.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE HEALTH OF SCHOOL-GIRLS.

How few people of means and leisure give themselves, at stated intervals, an hour for thought. If persons who can dispose of their time as they choose, fail of their greatest attainment from this cause, what shall be expected from those women who work and drudge from morning until night, and then, exhausted in soul and body, find only in the forgetfulness of sleep the necessary rest for a renewal of this toil?

In order to think our best thought, we need to be physically sound. How few women at fifty years of age, when they should be in their prime, are really well! How few have attained what was possible for them had they possessed knowledge of themselves and their powers! Alas, how few have their powers trained and disciplined into a state of readiness for the every-day affairs of life! If the education is begun in childhood an enormous amount of valuable time and strength may be saved.

Men, as a rule, continue to grow, intellectually, all their lives; their contact with the world tending towards this, if there is no endeavor on their part; but unless women are on the alert, and improve the short intervals allowed to them by the duties that most have to keep them busy, they will settle into commonplace and humdrum.

Should country girls read these lines, let me tell them that if the girls of fifty years ago could have availed themselves of the helps to knowledge which this age affords, they would have eagerly devoured what now is too often thrown aside for the sensational novel.

I knew a farmer's daughter, bright and rollicking, yet eager to learn, who, at the age of thirteen or fourteen, used to rise between four and five o'clock, in summer time, drink a glass of milk, go to the pasture and saddle her own horse, and ride five miles away to the post-office and back by half past six. She took a book with her for the uphill part of the way. On her return she would have her breakfast, wash the dishes, and get to the district school, half a mile away, by nine o'clock. Hungry for ideas, she found little time for play; girls in those days were not bills of expense to their parents but were taught to spin and bake and sew; to take care of children and relieve the overburdened mothers. Far and near, to day also, there are daughters who fill places of trust in their parents' home; but what a difference in the aids which these girls have to education and wisdom!

The education of girls is a great question. That there is, in legislative halls, none to exceed it in magnitude, will be seen if we consider the fact which George Eliot puts into words in "Daniel Deronda," where, from speaking of Gwendolen Harleth, she turns as if to explain why she gives such attention to the inner workings of a mere girl's mind at a time when the world is so full of stirring action and earnest endeavor. "What," she asks, "in the midst of that mighty drama, are girls and their blind visions? They are the yea and nay, for which men are enduring or fighting. In these delicate vessels is borne onward through the ages the treasure of human affections." How great the need, then, for future good, that girlhood should be guarded and strengthened by the utmost that wisdom can teach.

Brain-building has proved a difficult question in our schools. The nervous system is over-stimulated, the blood making power fails to support it in its forced exertions. Mental and physical indigestion is the result. There should be no more studies undertaken than are readily understood and conquered, especially between the ages of twelve and sixteen.

Enough cannot be urged against allowing growing girls, and those still in school, to attend evening entertainments or enter at all into what is understood by the word "society." Company and amusements they need; but of a kind chosen carefully by competent older persons, and not that which is to be found at balls and other entertainments of the kind. There is less danger of injuring the muscles than the nervous system, by forcing. The minds of undeveloped girls (and boys for that matter) must be allowed time to develop strength, and they will then drive in knowledge as plants do water.

It strengthens the mind to memorize, to a degree, but constant watching is required. If restlessness at night ensues, for the student, it is time to interfere. Change the study, or stop it altogether for a time. Nature will not be forced without rebelling. All minds cannot be put into the same mold; each pupil must be studied, and should be allowed discussion and inquiry, that his or her individual self may be developed.

A large army is killed each year, and many more made invalids for life, by being crowded through the schools; as Buckle says, "Their intellects are ruined by the activity of their education."

I have in mind a young girl who was the pride of her parents, and a delight to all who knew her for her beauty and wit. The appreciation and praise of friends acted as stimulants, forcing her beyond her physical endurance, until at her graduating exercises her nervous system broke down, and she only lived a month afterward.

There are some of a different nature, who never can be hurried; who plod on heavily, the development of the body taking from the activity of the brain. This class is less in danger than the one above described, but needs watching lest failure ensue because of slowness of growth. The teacher needs constant patience to hold back the former and urge forward the latter class.

The clothing of girls, especially of those maintaining a sitting posture, should be warm, light and sufficiently loose to allow the fullest inhalations. Recesses for deep breathing, once an hour, would be valuable in our schools. By this I mean that books or work should be laid aside for five minutes, all the air possible should be slowly exhaled from the lungs, then as slowly drawn in again. There is, in all persons, residual air which cannot be exhaled, but by continual effort much more space can be provided for inhaling. After drawing in as much air as possible, hold it a few seconds before exhaling it. From five to twenty inhalations an hour will help to make deep breathing a habit, and bring more oxygen into the system. This will relieve drowsiness and stupid people may be benefited thereby.

If parents and teachers would be made to feel the need of outdoor exercise for all students and growing children, I believe provision would be made for it by law. Grounds and amusements are prepared for the insane; would it not be humane and economical to provide, around all educational institutions, ample facilities for favoring the healthy development of the body?—Mrs. E. G. Cook, M.D., in Demorest's Monthly.

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.

By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.50.

This deeply interesting narrative shows how Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how bad men control the good men in the lodge and protect the evil ones. What a grand and great theme. For sale at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his failings lean to virtue's side.

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticise. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles.

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Alas, where's the rub?' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and under many and various influences to their own comfortable property."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by array of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. If it is not the best, it is very near it. It is so, it is so possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

MASONIC OATHS,

BY

E. Ronayne,
Past Master of Keystone Lodge,
No. 639, Chicago.

A masterly discussion of the Oaths of the Masonic Lodge, to which is appended "Freemasonry at a Glance," illustrating every sign, grip and ceremony of the Masonic Lodge. This work is highly commended by leading lecturers as furnishing the best arguments on the nature and actual character of Masonic obligations of any book in print. Paper cover, 207 pages. Price, 40 cents.

FARM NOTES.

ARAB HORSE MAXIMS.

Let your colt be domesticated and live with you from his tenderest age, and when a horse he will be simple, docile, faithful and inured to hardship and fatigue.

Do not beat your horses nor speak to them in a loud tone of voice; do not be angry with them but kindly reprove their faults; they will do better thereafter, for they understand the language of man and the meaning.

If you have a long day's journey before you, spare your horse at the start, let him frequently walk to recover his wind. Continue this until he has sweated and dried three times, and you may ask him whatever you please; he will not leave you in difficulty.

Use your horse as you do your leather bottle; if you open it gently and gradually you can easily control the water therein; but if you open it suddenly the water escapes at once, and nothing remains to quench your thirst.

Never let your horse run up and down a hill if you can avoid it. On the contrary, slacken your pace. "Which do you prefer," was asked of a horse, "ascend or descend?" "A curse be on their point of meeting!" was the answer.

Make your horse work and work again. Inaction and fat are the great peril of a horse, and the main cause of all his vices and diseases.

Observe your horse when he is drinking at a brook. If in bringing down his head he remains square without bending his limbs, he possesses sterling qualities, and all parts of his body are built symmetrically.—Our Animal Friends.

CHECK REINS.

Check reins, as a general rule, are of little use on the road, except in the case of inveterate stumblers. These it is necessary to sometimes check up high, so as to make them lift their feet, and besides, if they do trip, the check rein punishes them severely. Stumbling is chiefly due to bad shoeing; hence this use of the check savors of needless cruelty. If a horse shows a tendency to stumble, pull off his shoes and drive him barefoot, being careful not to break his hoofs. He will soon get over the tendency in all probability. When the feet wear, if they do, so as to necessitate shoeing, if it is summer weather put on toe clips only, and renew them often. The check rein is used to make a naturally down-headed horse carry his head high, or as high as his mate, and it is often used as an instrument of wanton torture by unfeeling grooms and drivers. The real use of the check is to prevent a horse getting his head to the ground when standing. It is of no use at all, except as above explained, when traveling. Every horse works better without one, whatever work he does.—American Agriculturist.

SHYING HORSES.

This trick or vice is generally the effect of nervous timidity, resulting from an excitable temperament. It is aggravated by improper handling. To punish a horse for shying introduces a new cause of fear. The horse will be more alarmed and show more tokens of fear at the prospect of a whipping than at the imaginary object of danger in the road. Hence one bad habit is confirmed by the introduction of another. It is impossible to whip terror out of a horse or pound courage into one. Kindness and gentle persuasion are the best weapons to correct the pernicious habit of shying. The less fear exhibited by the driver, and the less notice taken of the shying by using harsh means, the sooner will it be given up. A careful, experienced horseman can generally detect an object likely to cause a nervous horse to shy, and by word or touch will encourage him to pass it unnoticed. When this fails, give him time to look at the object of his fear; pat him and coax him up to it, then take him past it two or three times, till he takes no notice of it.

When defective sight is the cause of this bad habit it is incurable, and if the eyesight is failing, the horse, for ordinary driving and riding will be perfectly useless. A mare we knew that had gone quietly in harness for two or three years, suddenly took to jumping the white stone crossings of an ordinary macadamized street, as if they were water brooks. In three months she was stone blind.

USE OF BLINDS ON HORSES.—In his new work on "The Bridle Bits," Col. J. C. Battersby sensibly observes that the custom of putting blinds on horses indiscriminately is a great error. Carriage horses, he continues, look well in showy head-gear, and handsome blinds are a great improvement to the style and general appearance of real, well-set-up carriage teams. But for buggy, cart, car, stage, wagon, trunk and general travel, they are wholly unnecessary, and as regards safety they are a detriment rather than an advantage. What do surface-car horses want with blinds? Horses, like ourselves, want to see where they are going, and the horse that shies proves that he wants to keep out of danger by the very fact of his shying.

Standard Works

SECRET SOCIETIES

FOR SALE BY THE

National Christian Association

221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

A complete Catalogue sent free on Application.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Fully illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Most notable quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition legally attested by J. O. Doeberger, Past Master Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full-page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different publicists of the United States during the years 1831 to 1838. With Mr. Adams' address. President of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secretary works extant, aside from the Expositio. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, class and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge as a "bright Mason," but left the lodge as a "bright Mason." This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $5.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The publisher or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 307 pp., postpaid.....40 cts.

College Secret Societies. Their aims, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Zeigler. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 24 cents each; per dozen, $2.40.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellow Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templar Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per doz., $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James W. Northrup, of Dekalb County, Ga. Delivered at the Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, may drive a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder, and Oaths of the 33 Degrees. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan," by Rev. J. W. Northrup; "The Oaths of the 33 Degrees," by Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times, and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees' 304 pages.....$1.50 each.

In the Collar; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a Unitarian, of the history of the institution, showing the workings of Secrecism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are retarded and hampered by the hidden workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the history of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work)" by a Member of the Craft. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and enlarged. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 410 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. Composed of "The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eusebian Mystery, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Mysteries of every degree, and the Symbol of the Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion." 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Charge of Association with Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a succeeding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of the institution is proved by the testimony of all Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship identical. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp.....75 cts.

Masonry a Work of Darkness. adverse testimony of Unitarians to the origin and growth of the institution. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a second Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowships, by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church of America. Paper cover, price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Deiphobe's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix containing a translation of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; in cloth, $1.00. Paper cover, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscence of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geeslin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of Freemasonry. To get these thirty-three degrees, Masonic bonds, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper cover, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Secret Societies. A discussion of their character and claims, by Rev. David McMill, Pres. J. C. Battersby, and Elder David Bernard. $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00. Paper cover, 15c. Per doz., $1.50.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against fellowshipping Freemasons in the Christian Church. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, and College Secret Societies. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in one issue, bound together in cloth. $1.00 each; per dozen, $10.00.

National Christian Association.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to be adopted to accomplish the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-laws of the Association. 50c. each, per doz. $1.50.

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. Composed of "Temple of Honor Illustrated," "Adoptive Masonry Illustrated," "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies') degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, and a full and complete teaching of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Clarion Bearer" published by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances. Its Doctrines, Principles and Character, by the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper cover, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Erast," paper cover, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies. By Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leeburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secret societies, and the duty to disfellowship Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Charity and Fidelity, and a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Craft Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen $2.00.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of initiation to the addition of the rank of "Amended, Perfected and Master of the Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter how they may be clothed to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees or citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's widow, and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge when S. L. Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attorney, refused to take the oath brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge but he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses, by Mrs. Louise Ward. This is a thrilling, interesting, true narrative. 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.00.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder G. W. Wilson, of Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per doz $2.00.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Holden With Cords. OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. FLAGG, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story of the life of a man who has made his name in history. In cloth $1.00; paper 50 cents. In paper cover, 25c.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Day Brownlie. In reply to a Masonic Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellville, Ohio. An able sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

LEGISLATIVE.

Governor Beaver of Pennsylvania has signed the high license bill. The act classifies liquor according to the community in which license is to be carried on instead of according to the volume of sales, which is the existing basis of classification. There is a $500 license for cities of 30,000 population and over, $400 for smaller cities, $200 for boroughs, and $100 for township hotels.

The Illinois Supreme Court on Thursday rendered a decision which upholds the Chicago city ordinance compelling wholesale liquor dealers to take out a license.

The Roche-Winston Chicago drainage bill was unanimously passed Thursday by the Illinois House.

By a vote of 53 to 34 the Michigan House on Thursday passed the high license bill. The general tax is placed at $500, and on wholesale and retail establishments it is $800.

Mr. Bailey's bill for the appointment of a State Board of Labor Arbitration passed the Illinois House Tuesday.

COUNTRY.

At Washington, Ind., on Wednesday James A. Cunningham was given a judgment against the Evansville and Terre Haute Railway Company for $92,000 for the burning of his starch factory at Vincennes by sparks from a locomotive.

Old settlers in Wisconsin say this is the driest season for forty years. Wells have failed, the earth is like ashes, fields and pastures have become sandy, and the wheat crop will be a failure unless rain speedily falls.

Dispatches from central and northern Illinois shows the drought to be much more severe than was anticipated. Not half of the oats sown have come up, and farmers are plowing their rye fields, finding that there is no prospect of a crop this season. The pastures are also getting quite short.

The Muskegon, Michigan, region is suffering from one of the severest droughts known at this season for years. Scarcely any rain has fallen since the snow left. The fruit and berry crop, which now promises so well, must suffer greatly unless rain comes soon. Farmers report spring crops quite backward.

Severe forest fires were raging in northern Michigan and Wisconsin, threatening the destruction of some towns. The smoke is so thick on Lake Michigan as to interfere with navigation.

The late warm weather has melted the immense amount of snow in the lake region of New Hampshire and the Androscoggin is higher than it has been since 1849. Bridges are afloat and travel is stopped. The water covers, in many instances, whole farms.

A fierce rainstorm, lasting four hours, visited the vicinity of Dayton, O., last Thursday, doing its greatest damage at Xenia. Shawnee Creek, which in the storm one year ago caused such loss to life and property, again overflowed its banks and swept four feet deep through the principal streets in the town. No lives were lost, but great destruction of property resulted.

A great portion of Lebanon, N.H., was swept away by fire Tuesday morning, creating a loss of $300,000. The insurance foots up $110,000.

The steamer Gulnare, famed for her connection with the Greely polar expedition, recently sprung a leak and sunk in the Caribbean Sea, the passengers taking to the boats and landing at French Harbor. The victims of the wreck arrived Thursday at New Orleans.

An arch in a furnace in the Edgar Thomson steel works at Braddock, Pa., collapsed Tuesday night, burying a number of men in the red-hot debris. Five men were fatally burned, their flesh being literally cooked.

Mrs. McCook, living at Coal Valley, Pa., kindled a fire Thursday night with petroleum. The house was destroyed, the woman and her two children perishing in the flames.

The Ocean King, the largest American ship afloat, was burned while on a voyage between Nansimo, B. C., and San Pedro. The crew escaped.

Policemen, armed with Winchester, are guarding certain mills, lumber yards, and factories at Minneapolis, Minn., against incendiaries who started several fires Thursday night. The Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad shops were burned early Friday morning, the loss reaching $150,000.

There are no indications of a settlement of the coke-worker strike in Pennsylvania, which is causing a reduction of 34,000 tons a week in the output of pig iron in the Mahoning, Shenandoah, and Allegheny Valleys.

In a battle between silver miners in the mountains near Hot Springs, Ark., Thursday, J.A. Wilson, a prominent citizen, was killed.

Five shocks of earthquake were felt at Nogales, A. T., Friday.

A spark from a Chicago and Atlantic locomotive set fire to some shavings in the M. M. Towle Distillery Company's works at Hammond, and in one hour property valued at $168,500 was destroyed, including the Hammond Electric Light Company's plant, the bonded warehouse, the butterine factory, and Williams Bros.' lumber yards.

FOREIGN.

Advices from China say that the steamer Bantan, plying between Singapore, Penang, and Malacca, was run into about midnight March 29 by the steamer Fair Penang, and sank in half an hour. Of the 200 persons aboard only fifty are known to have been saved. Most of those lost were natives.

It is reported from Afghanistan that many of the Amer's troops are deserting to the insurgents. In a recent battle which lasted two days 700 were killed.

A congress of English-speaking Roman Catholics will meet in London shortly to discuss religious progress, labor and capital, temperance, and other subjects.

The flood at St. Johns, New Brunswick, is regarded as the direst calamity that has ever befallen the province. Frederickton is in total darkness, the gas-house having been invaded. The Nerepis bridge, which cost the province nearly $200,000, was swept away. Great waves are dashing over the tracks of the New Brunswick Railroad, and at Rothery, Riverside, and Lakeside the Inter-Colonial Railroad track is undermined.

Terrible forest fires are raging in Galicia. Fire brigades and military detachments are trying to prevent the spread of the flames. In Transylvania 400 houses were burned in the village of Caiskomos and in the village of Janoshaza. A public subscription has been opened for the relief of the homeless.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The bill before the Illinois legislature for the suppression of the tobacco business among minors, seems fortunately to have no opposers. But if the help of one wrong headed legislator to fight it is lacking, there is enough indifference to make up the loss, but not enough, we hope, to kill the measure. It is sadly needed, and under the watchful eye of Andrew Paxton, agent of the Citizens' League, it will help amazingly to thin the ranks of that juvenile army which enlists with a cigarette and ends the campaign with the death of the sot.

If we may mourn when brave men are shot down by the assassin agents of the saloon, why not also when men of naturally kind hearts and noble dispositions are killed by inches by the same devilish agency? And why not denounce the dereliction of law officers when justice is withheld in one case as in the other? In Rockford, Michigan, John Boyd, a butcher, murdered a man while half crazed with drink, and was sent to prison for life. His wife sued the saloon-keeper, who was at least a partner in the crime, and gained a verdict for $9,500. But an appeal will be taken, and probably there will be no punishment for the accomplice if not the real author of the crime. If we blame Iowa for the failure of the Haddock jury, or Ohio for her sluggish officials in the Northup case, may we not say to Michigan, why is justice so trampled in your streets?

Rev. William F. Davis, with whom the readers of the Cynosure are well acquainted through his labors among the lumbermen and his recent debate on Mormonism at Bayport, Michigan, began open-air preaching again for the fifth season on Boston Common on Sabbath before last. He was in a day or two summoned before Judge Forsaith and fined $50, but the case was suspended for the time being. Mr. Davis began this work in 1882 and was unmolested for some time. In 1885 he was arrested along with H. L. Hastings of the Christian and Dr. A. J. Gordon. The case went through all the courts, and the decision was against the evangelists—the Gospel could not be freely preached, even in old Massachusetts. The illogical and unconstitutional character of this decision was forcibly shown in the Christian of the time. Mr. Davis had to pay a fine of over $80 in January of last year; nevertheless he continued to preach all through the season without arrest. His audiences were large, numbering at times nearly 1,000, for he is an able speaker. The efforts of the saloon-keepers and Irish Catholics may at length prevent this useful work, but it should arouse every patriot to a sense of the dangers that threaten our Christian liberties, and help us to some suggestion for their preservation.

Washington was perspiring a few days ago under a National Military drill. State militia and military companies of all kinds were participating, but we fail to learn that there was any benefit except to hotels and railways. Next fall Chicago celebrates the fiftieth anniversary of her corporate existence. How? Why by a military parade. But what good reason is there for always calling for a military performance on such occasions? It inordinately exalts a relic of barbaric fancy which religion and education seems unable to fully eradicate. Is a people any nobler or wiser for dressing up its young men in fine clothes and gay colors and drilling them at much waste of precious time to walk in certain straight lines? Militarism is always more or less a barbarity. It is a great aid to lodgery; gives secretism clat; and must therefore be cultivated for the lodges set the fashion. But the churches ought to, and Chicago is great enough and wise enough to celebrate a birthday more sensibly.

The other day, after a long fog which kept the steamers in the bay, 10,113 emigrants landed at Castle Garden, New York. That was May 11th. In April 12,000 emigrants sailed from the single port of Queenstown. The workingmen and poor of Europe are coming to us this year in greater crowds than ever. America yet extends a welcome to the oppressed of all nations, and to the poor man striving by honest industry and piety to better his condition. But facts like these keep crowding upon us: The foreign born are only one-eighth of our population, yet from this class comes one-third of the insane, one-third of the paupers and the same proportion of criminals; that is, twenty per cent more than its proportion. It furnishes, also, more unhappily by far, the largest part of our liquor sellers, fully one-half of our bumner politicians and all our anarchists but Parsons. The vote of this class defeated prohibition in Michigan, and will defeat it everywhere possible. The forty-three counties of that State voting for the amendment contained 570,672 American-born voters and 268,168 foreign; the twenty-three voting against contained 227,434 American and 423,073 foreign born. These figures are suggestive and ask for practical answers. Is there any instruction for those who come to us from abroad which shall be to them as the Sabbath-school to the church? Would it not be wiser for the W. C. T. U. to establish a bureau at ports of entry and begin early with our foreign friends, rather than to cajole and encourage the Good Templars and Knights of Labor, which are a part of a system which is at war with our Christianity and our American homes and nation?

The resolution of the Minnesota millers last month that they would not submit to the rule of a Philadelphia lodge committee even if their coopers did, was a wise one. We hear no more of the threat to boycott every body who bought flour out of a barrel without a Knight of Labor mark; a threat, by the way, directed more at the poor than the rich. The Chicago builders are tired of Mr. Powderly's rule also, and refuse to recognize the labor lodges. In the strike among the jewelers in New York, Tiffany & Co. found that men who had been with them for thirty years, and with whom there were none but friendly relations, were forced to leave them at the command of the lodge boss. The firm proposes hereafter to manage its own business, and the Independent commends their resolution in such radical terms that we fear its editor will be called a Cynosure fanatic, when he says: "This is the position for all employers to take. So long as they yield to the demands of the Knights of Labor, who, in justice and right have nothing to do with their business, they, in effect, encourage these Knights to make further demands. Adopt the rule of excluding them from employment, and firmly adhere to it, and workingmen will speedily learn that their interests are not to be promoted by becoming Knights of Labor. We know of a firm in this city engaged in tin manufactures, that has for years acted upon this rule; and that firm has never had any trouble with its employees. Not one of them belongs to any labor organization."

THE DOCTRINE OF THE BIBLE IN REGARD TO TEMPERANCE.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

While others are discussing the temperance question from a social, political, or economic standpoint, the Christian moralist naturally inquires, "What saith the Scriptures?" With him the Bible is an authority paramount to all others. He cares little for the opinions of theorists unless they are sustained by the teachings of divine truth. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this Word it is because there is no light in them." (Isa. 8:20.) In order to successfully enforce the duty of abstinence from the use of intoxicating liquor, we need some more weighty and powerful motive than mere expediency, utility, or self-interest. We find it in the written and revealed will of God.

The people of this country, in the main, accept the Bible as a revelation from God. Their ideas of right and wrong are influenced largely by what they conceive to be its teachings. If, therefore, it can be shown that the Word of God is against intemperance, this fact will furnish a most cogent reason for abstaining from that vice. But if men are made to believe that the Bible sanctions the use of strong drink, it will hardly fail to encourage drunkenness.

The advocates of liquor sometimes attempt to quote Scripture in its favor. Some of them are great Scripturians—or rather scrap-torians. Infidels are in the habit of quoting certain passages in which wine or strong drink is mentioned for the purpose of trying to make it appear that the Bible fosters intemperance and is therefore not a true moral guide. I shall now endeavor to answer both classes of objectors by showing that the Bible is uncompromisingly opposed to drunkenness, and that it clearly teaches the doctrine of total abstinence as an individual duty, and entire prohibition as the true policy for communities and nations.

I shall first notice some of the passages of Scripture usually quoted by these would-be expounders of the Bible. One of the most important of these is the miracle at Cana of Galilee. Here we are told that Christ made and drank wine on a wedding occasion; and therefore they say that the Bible sanctions the use of ardent spirits as a beverage. But it remains to be shown that the wine thus miraculously provided possessed alcoholic properties. Unless this can be done—and we know it cannot—the objection amounts to nothing. There is not the slightest proof that the wine used at Cana was intoxicating. Eminent biblical scholars tell us that it was not. In support of this assertion I offer the following quotations:

PRESIDENT NOPT.—"It was nutritious and unintoxicating, and of which the guests might drink freely, because it would not derange, demoralize, or intoxicate."

ALBERT BARNES.—"It was the pure juice of the grape, and for anything that can be proved, was without fermentation. No man should adduce this instance in favor of drinking wine, unless he can prove that the wine made in the water pots of Cana was just like the wine which he proposes to drink."

DR. JACOBS.—"This was not the fermented liquor which passes now under that name. All who know of the wine then used will understand rather the unfermented juice of the grape."

DR. OWEN.—"As wine was a common beverage in that land of vineyards in its unfermented state our Lord most likely drank it."

Quotations might be multiplied, but these will suffice. Evidently the miracle at Cana does not, when rightly understood, favor the use of strong drink as a beverage. We may examine the account in the light of history, science, and Scripture, and we utterly fail to find any proof that our Saviour made and drank intoxicating wine. Such a conclusion would dishonor God, and make nonsense of his Word.

Another favorite text with our anti-temperance critics is that containing Paul's advice to Timothy: "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine often infirmities." Timothy appears to have been a total abstainer of the strictest order. Paul doubtless knew this, and did not condemn him for it, but suggested that he depart from his practice, to some extent, in order that his health might be restored. He said, "Drink no longer water"—that is, water only—"but use a little wine." The fact that a Pauline injunction was needed to induce him to take even "a little" wine for medicinal purposes is itself proof of his temperance principles. The wine was recommended as a medicine and not as a beverage. It was a medical prescription, and therefore does not apply to the conduct of persons in good health. If Timothy had been a habitual drinker of wine as a beverage, a little, used as a medicine, would not have been sufficient to act as a restorative from physical debility.

In order to still more effectually demonstrate the fallacy of the argument based upon this passage of Scripture, I shall now put it to the test by another application equally as logical and consistent. We read in the Bible that on one occasion a plaster of figs was recommended to Hezekiah. Now, if the prescribing of wine in Timothy's case proves that we ought to drink wine as a beverage, then the recommendation of a plaster of figs to Hezekiah proves that we should use the same external application! The apostle James once recommended the sick to be anointed with oil; but does that prove that we should also saturate ourselves with the same ingredient? Yet this would be no more unreasonable than to quote Paul's language to Timothy as authority for wine-drinking. Is not this true? Is not one just as logical as the other? The fact that certain remedies were prescribed for the sick in particular cases does not prove that all persons in all ages and conditions should use them.

I now call attention to some of the many injunctions of the Bible against intemperance. And in order to compress the argument into as small a space as possible, I shall briefly state the facts, and refer the reader to those portions of the Bible in which they are recorded.

1. The Bible solemnly warns us against wine and strong drink, representing it as a mocker, a raging influence, and calculated to deceive its victims. Prov. 20:1.

2. The priests were forbidden to drink wine for the reason that it would disqualify them for the duties and responsibilities of their office. Lev. 10:9-11; Ezek. 44:21.

3. It is also stated that kings and princes should not drink wine, lest it cause forgetfulness of God's law, and perversion of judgment. Prov. 31:4, 5.

4. The prophet Isaiah clearly shows that the unwarranted use of wine and strong drink among certain Jewish priests and prophets was a prolific source of error, misery, and degradation. Isa. 28:7.

5. Solomon enumerates six different indications of human suffering and degradation resulting from wine-drinking. Prov. 23:29, 30.

6. God pronounces a woe upon those who, in consequence of their intemperate habits, disregard his work and neglect the claims of religion. Isa. 5:11, 12.

7. Drunkenness is spoken of among the "works of the flesh," which are represented as sinful in their nature and perilous to the interests of the soul. Gal. 5:19-21.

8. We are admonished in the Bible that the use of intoxicating liquor is a preventive of worldly prosperity, and a hindrance to the acquirement of wealth. Prov. 21:17; 23:21.

9. Drunkards are expressly mentioned by the Apostle Paul as one of the classes of persons who shall not inherit the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 6:10.

10. Members of the church are earnestly exhorted to avoid drunkenness, and to be sober and vigilant at all times. Eph. 5:18; Rom. 13:13; 1 Peter 5:8.

11. Abstinence from wine, as an element of Christian character, is required as one of the qualifications of bishops and deacons in the church of God. 1 Tim. 3:2, 3, 8.

12. Temperance is spoken of as one of the conditions of obtaining the "incorruptible crown" promised in the Bible as one of the rewards of the righteous. 1 Cor. 9:25.

13. The Bible clearly teaches the duty of abstinence from wine, or anything else by which others might be led astray or become addicted to intemperate habits. Rom. 14:21.

14. Temperance is spoken of as one of the fruits of the Spirit, and everywhere commended as a grace and excellency which should characterize every true Christian. Gal. 5:22, 23.

15. We are commanded to not even look upon the wine in its fermented state lest we should be overcome by its tempting influence. Prov. 23:31.

16. The duty of abstinence from intoxicating liquor is enforced by the consideration that "at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Prov. 23:32.

17. The Bible pronounces a woe upon a man who treats to liquor, or who is instrumental in bringing others to drunkenness and debauchery. Hab. 2:15.

18. We are commanded not to associate with drunkards and wine-bibbers, for the reason, no doubt, that it would impair our moral sensibilities, and perhaps lead us astray. Prov. 23:20; 1 Cor. 5:11.

19. The Bible records with approbation the first temperance pledge ever taken, and shows that a blessing resulted from it. Judges 13:13, 14, 24.

20. Daniel and his three associates are spoken of approvingly for their refusal to drink wine, and were greatly benefited as the result of their abstinence. Dan. 1:8, 14, 15.

21. Samuel was a temperance man of the strictest order, his mother having abstained from wine before his birth, in consequence of which he became a chosen prophet of God and an honored judge of his nation. 1 Sam. 1:15; 3:19-21; 7:15.

22. John the Baptist was another illustrious total abstainer, using neither wine nor strong drink; hence his spiritual power, his favor with God and his abundant success as a preacher. Luke 1:15.

23. The Rechabites are represented in the Bible as a family of total abstainers, worthy of our admiration. Having been warned by their father against intemperance they refused to drink wine when tempted to do so. They are commended for their filial obedience, in following his counsels and abstaining from its use. Jer. 35:5-19.

24. The Nazarites were an order of good and holy men, separated unto God and consecrated by a vow of total abstinence. They abjured the use of intoxicating liquors; and it is evident that they were highly esteemed, and regarded by the Almighty as a blessing to their generation. Num. 6:1-4; Amos 2:11.

25. The children of Israel, during their forty years' wandering in the wilderness, drank no wine or strong drink. Deut. 29:6. Here we have the example of a nation which adopted the great principle of total abstinence, or entire prohibition, by the authority and encouragement of God himself. Would that we to-day could maintain the standard of temperance which existed among God's chosen people more than three thousand years ago. But with all our boasted progress we are not yet as wise as God's ancient law.

It is true that the Bible, in some instances, speaks approvingly of wine, but such passages evidently refer to unf fermented wine, which was not intoxicating. The Bible nowhere approves drunkenness. It never associates God's blessing with the use of intoxicating liquor. It clearly portrays the evils of intemperance. It solemnly warns us again this destructive vice. It enjoins abstinence as the only safe and proper course. It extols the virtues of those who abstained from wine and strong drink. Hence, the man who speaks of the Bible as favoring intemperance only evinces his mental or moral imbecility.

OPIMUM.

BY JAMES SPRINGER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In response to your inquiry as to statistics, necessity, use and possibility of dispensing with opium altogether, I will offer some thoughts.

Turkey opium is produced in Anatolia, and shipped chiefly from the port of Smyrna. It is brought into the United States either from the Levant or through different European ports. The amount of opium imported in 1878, was 207,752 pounds; in 1879, was 278,554 pounds; in 1880, 372,075 pounds. Total in the three years 848,381 pounds, at a cost of four million dollars.

In spite of the prohibitions of the Imperial government, its production is greatly on the increase in China. The cultivation of the poppy pays much better than that of wheat. In its preparation it is mixed with saliva to moisten it. The admirers of opium attribute great medicinal properties to it, to-wit: That it increases the force, fullness and frequency of the pulse, invigorates the muscular system, quickens the senses, animates the spirits, and gives energy to the intellectual faculties. With them it fills almost every indication in disease. It is their sheet anchor. But to me it seems to be an engine of death which, perhaps, is unsurpassed even by intoxicating drinks. Had it not been for these

M. D.'s who have wrongfully impressed the minds of the people, the use of opium would long since have been condemned, along with other drunkenness, for it is the most dangerous form of drunkenness. Blind guides! your "inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

There are about twenty commercial varieties of this deadly drug thrown upon our markets. We deny that opium has any curative power. On the contrary, its use interrupts all of the secretions and excretions of the human system. Opium increases disease and prolongs the time of recovery. It was created a poison. Man's puny fingers cannot change its quality. The only sure power that it has is the power to kill. Hence, to the shame of the profession be it said, these "doctors" find more trouble in counteracting an overdose than they would have had to cure their patients with sanative agents. The statistical record is only bad. Its use has caused the death of tens of thousands. It is folly to suppose that there is any necessity for its employment. To entirely dispense with it would be one of the grandest forward movements that could be made.

Investigation of this momentous question is certainly desirable and commendable. Let us hear from others. Should anyone differ with these statements, I would be pleased to defend the same. I favor investigation which leads to bettering the conditions of the race. Away with everything that is detrimental to our physical and spiritual happiness.

Query: If one grain of morphine, the active principle of opium, would kill a well man, how could a small dose of the same cure a sick man? Does quantity change quality?

Galena, Kansas.

WE REAP AS WE SOW.

The character of a root, or seed, foretells the character of the fruit or product. Even so it is with the character of the principles which prompt the actions of mankind. As men may be mistaken in the seed they sow, so they are frequently in the principles they advocate. Appearances are proverbially deceitful. The base coin has the appearance of the genuine. The hypocrite professes the same truths which a believer in them does. But confide or trust these truths to their true friend, and how different is the result from that of the mere professor of them! Thus a professing Christian may be a rogue, and plan dishonest actions, but a true Christian never! He may make mistakes, but never can he design or intend dishonesty in anything, not even in politics! However, the minds of men need education upon what is truth, in a thousand forms of usefulness in the world. Thousands were convinced of the evil of slavery before the war ended it, but it would have been better far that our people had fully considered the whole question, and offered a fair adjustment, if thereby the awful war could have been averted. But no! discussion was prohibited in many parts of our country, and the pioneers of righteousness were regarded as the enemies of order and peace among us. But the end came, and the truth is now clear.

So with some present evils in our favored land. Palpably the liquor traffic has made itself prominent by its vengeance upon Haddock and Northrup and Gambrell, a sacrifice of some of our best citizens upon the altar of saloonery! So with Freemasonry "sixty years since." Where is the American Walter Scott to tell of the "Waverly," the Morgan victim, at that time? And into what hydra-headed forms has this wondrous seed of lodgery been formed in our day? All manner of pretentious benevolence, all manner of infernal malevolence, all manner of ignorant brutality, or intelligent devilishness have been enlisted to swell the legions of lodgery among the most aristocratic as well as the most democratic classes. All extremes from Ingersoll to the Pope, and from Mormonism, nursed in our deserts, to the anarchism which murders scores of citizens in our streets, have bonds of "sacred obligations," or oaths which God never authorized and therefore oaths to the devil, the great deceiver of mankind. In lodgery or the secret chambers (as Ezekiel chap. 8: says "chambers of imagery") lives "jealousy," the root principle of lodgery, and its worship is of "the Sun," and "their faces towards the East."

Now what fruit is this generation of Americans and the world gathering from lodgery? Let the secret murders in Europe and our own country testify. The murders of the Czar of Russia, the Queen's representative, Lord Cavendish, in Ireland, and many less prominent were looked on with complacency in our own country until the demoniac spirit of anarchic lodgery invaded our own cities and attempted to murder scores of law abiding citizens!

What then? Why there is surely abundant proof that lodgery as 'seed, or as a principle, is a cursed one; and that the law of our free country ought to strike dead the serpent which has been gliding unsuspectingly among us to the actual destruction of life, liberty, and property; and has robbed both capital and labor of rights secured by law to every freeman and citizen.

Surely then it is high time for our people through their legislatures to demand the enactment of laws for their protection and to strengthen the hands of our Executive in their arduous labors against such a foe of civil and religious liberty! But will they? Are the people asleep, or awake to the fact that their danger is as surely in the principle of oath-bound lodgers as explosives are lodged in gunpowder and dynamite.

A ROMANCE OF LOVE AND GRIT.

[Rev. Wm. Johnston, D. D., in the Crank.]

The relation of woman to secret orders is a matter that awakens a good deal of interest. When women steadfastly set their face in opposition to evil, and in favor of a cause of moral reform, there are few influences, perhaps no influence except that of our holy religion, that are more powerful for good. Many instances could be adduced in which woman has made her influence felt in opposition to the lodge, and has been the means of saving the stronger sex from the snares in which his feet seemed likely to be taken. A little bit of romance may be rehearsed, which may prove helpful to others, and which indicates that there are heroines walking the earth uncrowned, but who we believe have a crown awaiting them in the kingdom of the hereafter.

Once upon a time a young gentleman and a young lady, after the pleasant associations that so often lead to momentous results, decided to embark upon life's voyage together, and stand by each other's side in joy or sorrow. The lady was fair and attractive as the heroine of a romance ever is, and devoted to him to whom she had pledged her heart's young love. The young gentleman was promising, ambitious, and, as the sequel will show, of a noble and manly spirit. As he was just entering upon the practice of medicine, he was anxious to avail himself of everything he supposed would help him to rise in his chosen profession. Like many another young man he had been attracted by the glamour of Masonry, and no doubt had received some artful intimations that connection with the fraternity would be an important factor in professional success. This is the bait that is so often put upon the hook at which the neophyte in a profession is so ready to bite, but which should satisfy a person that the thing is evil.

But while this young man felt a strong inclination to unite with the Masonic order, yet as a member of the United Presbyterian church, he had the manliness and the conscientiousness to just consult his pastor. In this respect he was unlike some, who choose rather to sneak into the lodge without asking counsel, and then attempt to keep it concealed.

The pastor of course remonstrated against the proposed step, and labored to convince him of the evil of all secret oath-bound associations. Not yet prepared to give up the proposed measure, there was still another one whom the honor of a man bound him to consult.

He accordingly called on the woman he loved, and to whom he had pledged his heart and hand, and told her of the purpose that was struggling in his heart. Were I so disposed methinks I could picture the scene that would have been enacted with some pulpy soul, who in such a case is clay in the hand of a potter. But I would rather talk of a heroine than a woman of putty. It was a momentous crisis in this young woman's life, but she was equal to the occasion. Rising up in the majesty of Christian womanhood, she told him he could do as he pleased, but said she: "I will never be a Mason's wife." No wonder the silence that followed was like that which follows the crash of the thunderbolt. Two hearts almost ceased to beat, and two faces no doubt betrayed deep anxiety. After a painful silence he asked her if she realized the force of her words and if she meant all they imported. With the same steady nerve and unflinching courage she answered that she knew just what she had said and intended to stand by it.

On what followed we will not intrude. Suffice it to say, that man is not a Mason, and the wife that smiles upon a happy home is the woman who vowed in his presence she would never be a Mason's wife. The physician has discovered that intelligence and skill are surer guarantees of success in a profession than affiliation with secret orders, and that there are purer joys in the company of wife and child than in the associations of the secret lodge.

Some perhaps would censure both the parties to this transaction. But in this age of limp-back men and women, it is refreshing to meet with a couple that stand up in such moral grandeur. That young woman had the courage to stand by her convictions and to demand a guarantee against what she felt would mar the happiness of her future home. That young man had the good sense to see that such a woman's love and grit and sterling worth would help him to do business "on the square" as no secret order could.

It was not because he was weak but because he was strong that he surrendered the lodge for the sake of a pure woman's heart and hand. This incident is very suggestive.

When the young Christian women of our country form the resolution, that they will never wed the saloon and the lodge, an important agency will be put in operation to further the cause of moral reform. And if they further require the stipulation from the aspirant for matrimonial honors, that the quid and cigar must also be abandoned, the rising tide of public sentiment will also sustain them.

Let the women of our country then be educated, as against the evils of the lodge. Let them realize the power they hold in their hands, and let them dare to wield it. Years ago, when little was known of secret orders, except in the form of Masonry, women were almost universally against them. But of late years their name is legion, and they have resorted to coddling in order to get the women of the country to smile on them. Many of them have a little side show for the dear sisters, and all of them resort to flattery instead of displaying the sterling moral principle and unflinching courage of our heroine. About our larger towns and cities they are playing into the hands of secret orders, and in some cases, where we should hardly expect it. Pastors have told me that some of the sisters who were too delicate to attend prayer-meeting or take part in important church work can toil like beavers on a Grand Army banquet, and climb higher up towards heaven to grace one of these banquets than they could ever climb in the house of God.

Indeed, one minister in an anti-secret church, told me with a funny twinkle in his eye, "he believed the Grand Army post was a good thing—it was making so many weakly women strong." Yet we have not learned that this or any other secret order makes either man or woman strong for Christian work.

And when women say, "We'll done, Cuttie Sark" to one of these orders they have only a short distance to travel until they can say "we'll done" to any of them. With women as with men to surrender at one point is practically to surrender along the whole line. Let us labor that the heroines in the anti-secret army may be greatly increased. We need a revival of the spirit of the times when our mothers and our sisters were almost to a woman against the lodge. It is the lodge with her ostensibly praiseworthy objects that is beguiling woman to her own hurt.

THE MARCH OF REFORM.

Abuses never reform themselves. Fallen humanity cannot heal its own diseases. Human nature falls naturally, but only rises by slow and painful efforts. The march of reform is not steady. We have sometimes stood by the sea shore and watched the incoming tide; first the tide turns, and waters that seemed rolling out begin to come in; a wave rises but a little way, it sinks back, then it rolls in again a little higher, and again sinks back as if in defeat; presently it rises, again and again, each time gaining a little in height, until at last the full tide beats against the shore.

It is thus with reforms. They usually begin with a protest wrung from some soul which has suffered wrong and can endure no longer, and utters a sharp outcry which arouses attention and startles all around. It is a protest against flagrant wrong, an outcry against injustice, fraud, trickery and iniquity. At once there is a stir, and while some are standing and wondering, the parties implicated commence the most strenuous efforts to stifle that voice. Every art is used to effect the object; and slanders, accusations and imprecations burst forth on every hand. The man who undertook to reform the abuses finds himself more grossly abused than before; the man who undertook to expose deceptions finds himself assailed and denounced as a deceiver; all the powers of darkness seem to combine to blot out that one beam of light which has flashed in upon their pathway, and it seems for the moment as if the sun not only stood still but had gone backward. These are the hours of martyrdom; and many a noble soul has been crushed, imprisoned, condemned and burned at the stake in these crises of reform. The tide seems to have turned back, and hope is almost dead; but the blood of the martyrs is still the seed of the church. The voice crying in the wilderness has been heard. It may be stilled, and the head of John the Baptist may be borne upon a charger; but behind the beheaded fore-runner stands him whose shoelatchet he is not worthy to stoop down and unloose; behind the repulsed picket line, the solid columns of the army of the Lord come marching on. The man who has borne a rejected testimony may go to his grave in obscurity and disgrace; but his cry shall be echoed from hill to valley and myriad voices shall prolong the mighty shout until all the world shall hear.

Duties are ours; results are with God. We have but to bear our testimony and march on. It will bear its fruit in due time. We need not stop to wrangle, nor expect to receive justification or approval from those around us. We must do our duty, and let God care for our rights; we must speak the honest word, the word of truth and soberness; and God will open men's ears to hear and their eyes to see, and in due time reforms will come. You may be the worse for the faithful testimony you have borne, but the world will be the better. You may win for yourself the wrath of foes, the sneers and scoffs of demagogues and partisans, but when they have spit their venom on your name, they will sneak off into the darkness, and you will stand in the sunshine at last. Do not despair. Truth has God behind it. Right has in it a secret energy which makes it victorious in the end. And though in this world we see "Right forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne," yet the time will come when they will change places, and right will be enthroned, and wrong trodden prostrate in the dust. O man of God, be strong! Stand by the right, and the Lord will stand by you.

SECRET SOCIETIES IN TORONTO.

[Toronto World, May 6, 1887.]

An opinion is becoming widely prevalent that the secret society business is considerably overdone, and there are well informed persons in this city who do not hesitate to say that the influence of these societies is becoming decidedly pernicious, if not absolutely dangerous to the public weal.

Such remarks as these are made, not by cranks, or by those claiming to be suffering from chronic grievances, but by liberal-minded persons of the highest intelligence, who are not given to talking at random or making extraordinary charges without having facts to support them.

Direct testimony is of course very difficult, if not impossible, to obtain in such cases, but there is a large accumulation of circumstantial evidence which cannot be ignored, and which is being quietly collected with a view to ultimate publication.

We have recently had an opportunity of examining a considerable portion of this evidence, and we frankly confess that we have been more than a little surprised at some of the revelations which the examination has forced upon us. Very little of the testimony is of such a character as to be available before a legal tribunal, even if there were any means of bringing it to such a test. But much of it is of a kind to carry conviction to the mind of anyone who gives it serious and dispassionate consideration, and who has no object but to get at the plain truth. And if a tithe of what is alleged is susceptible of verification, it is high time for the community to awaken to the danger by which it is threatened.

It is said that persons who belong to secret societies exercise an altogether unjust discrimination as against outsiders in dealing with the business and social affairs of every day life.

Some of the facts brought forward in support of this assertion are such that the conclusion forced upon the mind is simply irresistible. Specific instances are given, with names and dates, and a good deal of light is thrown upon certain contracts and public events which have hitherto been enveloped in an air of mystery.

It is even beginning to be whispered pretty loudly that, in the lodges of some of the higher degrees, political and other appointments are discussed and determined upon, and that, when necessary, pressure is brought to bear in various quarters to force the hands of those having the power of appointment.

Some of the appointments in connection with the School Board and the Public Library are thus for the first time made intelligible.

We are informed, moreover, that this is no new thing, but that it has of late assumed dimensions which it never before attained, at any rate in this country.

It is possible that the Church of Rome, in setting her face against secret societies may have been acting not merely in her own interests, but in the interests of society at large.

We shall return to this subject at an early day.

TALMAGE ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

[By Rev. B. T. Roberts in the Free Methodist.]

Dr. Talmage's recent defense of secret societies is an effort of which any preacher should be ashamed. Its reasoning is weak and fallacious. His first argument in their defense is based upon the social instinct. But that man's desire for companionship may be met without joining secret societies. Dr. Talmage substantially confesses; for he says that he himself does not belong to any of the "great secret societies," about which there has been so much violent discussion. Then they are not needed to meet man's social instincts. If Dr. Talmage can get along without them, if the mass of mankind in all ages has got along without them, then they are not needed.

As to the "violent discussion," the violence is confined to one side. We have heard the evils of secret societies set forth plainly; but always calmly and with appeals to reason and conscience alone. We have never heard of a single instance in which those who oppose secret societies have resorted to violence. We wish we could say as much of their advocates. But they have made and are making too bloody a record for that. Morgan's exposure of Freemasonry as a dangerous institution led to his abduction and murder. Prof. Charles A. Blanchard was put in jeopardy of his life at Vineland, delivering a lecture against secret societies. The Rev. Mr. Rathbun has been shot at twice, and attempts have been made to poison him for daring to lecture on Masonry. Even classic Boston mobbed a convention composed of godly men, some of them preachers of Dr. Talmage's denomination, for discussing calmly the evils of secret societies. In fact, violence appears to be the weapon commonly used by secret societies to overcome their adversaries. The kind of violence varies according to circumstances, ranging from the dynamite of anarchists to the boycotts of the Knights of Labor.

Dr. Talmage makes some very extravagant assertions which he leaves entirely unsupported. He says: "The men who want the whole earth to themselves would have got it long before this had it not been for the banding together of great secret organizations." One would think that at least one of such great achievements would have been specified by name; but he does not mention a single instance, doubtless for the sufficient reason that he could not.

The fact is that secret societies are themselves selfish monopolies. If they do not secure to their members some advantages which, in the natural order of things, they would not have, then they are a failure; they do not attain the object for which they were instituted. There is no despotic government on earth that exercises such tyranny over working men, as do the labor unions. The right to work when we please, and for what wages we please, is one of the fundamental rights of humanity. But this right is murderously assailed by the minions of the secret lodge; they aim to establish a monopoly of the labor market. Their scruple at no means; sometimes not even at murdering the defenseless, to carry out their outrageous schemes.

Dr. Talmage apologizes for these atrocities in the following words: "They will gradually cease anything like tyranny over their members, and will forbid violent interference with any man's work, whether he belongs to their union or is outside of it, and will declare their disgust with any such rule as that passed in England by the Manchester Bricklayers' Association, which says any man found running or working beyond a certain speed shall be fined 2s. 6d. for the first offense, 5s. for the second, 10s. for the third, and if still persisting shall be dealt with as the committee think proper."

How does Dr. Talmage know that they will cease from such outrages as even he cannot defend? Have they shown any signs of reforming? It is in the very nature of tyranny to grow more exacting. Freemasonry was originally a trades-union. Now, to a large extent, it controls church and state. If these secret societies cease from their outrageous violations of the natural rights of man, it will be when compelled to by public opinion and law.

His argument, drawn from the fact that success in business and in war sometimes depends upon a discreet silence as to plans and methods, is too weak to be noticed. What has that to do with secret, oath-bound societies?

Again, he says, "There are old secret societies in this and other countries, some of them centuries old, which have been widely denounced as immoral and damaging in their influence, yet I have hundreds of personal friends belonging to them, friends who are consecrated to God, pillars in the church, faithful in all relations of life, examples of virtue and piety."

Does not Dr. Talmage know that men are sometimes better and sometimes worse than the institutions with which they stand connected? The leading man belonging to the largest church in a village near us owns and runs the largest liquor saloon in the place. Yet he never drinks! He lives in a palace; is all that could be asked for in his domestic and social relations; and at church he looks like a saint. Does that prove rum selling to be right? Many of the most liberal and devout men of the last generation were slave holders, but that did not make slavery right. The noted James brothers were said to be gentlemanly and kind in private life. If a poor neighbor lost a horse or a cow, they would give him one; and they were held in such esteem by those among whom they lived that they could not be arrested at their home. But that is no argument for robbing trains and banks. The poet describes his hero as being "—the mildest mannered man

That ever scuttled ship or cut a throat."

But he did not adopt the logic of Dr. Talmage, and argue that therefore piracy and murder must, under some circumstances, be right.

Nor is there any more force in his argument to show that we should discredit the testimony of those who, for conscience sake, have renounced and exposed the lodge. He says of his good secret society men, "I would certainly rather take their testimony in regard to such societies than the testimony of those who, having been sworn in as members, by their assaults upon the society, confess themselves perjurers."

This is simply atrocious! If a wicked man joins a wicked society, and is tied up hand and foot by horrid oaths, administered by men who have no right whatever to administer an oath, and afterwards is convicted by the Spirit of God, repents and brings forth fruit meet for repentance, must he be stigmatized by a doctor of divinity as a confessed perjurer? Was President Charles G. Finney, a man whose memory is revered by the Christian world, a "confessed perjurer"? He must be, according to Dr. Talmage. The last book he wrote was one which shows clearly that Freemasonry is an anti-Christian and a dangerous institution. We commend this book to the careful study of Dr. Talmage. Hundreds of godly men have, for Christ's sake, renounced and "assaulted" Freemasonry. But the fact is, there is no conflict of testimony, as Dr. Talmage assumes that there is. Elder David Bernard, a godly Baptist preacher, in his "Light on Freemasonry," has given the oaths of Freemasonry, as he took them. Among all the preachers who belong to the lodge, have any testified that Bernard and Finney have not truly set forth the nature and character of Freemasonry? Ministerial eulogies of the order are abundant; but all that we have ever seen or heard evade the issue made with the order as adroitly as Dr. Talmage does. We have never seen a flat, square denial that the oaths administered are substantially as given by Morgan, Bernard, Finney, Ronayne, and others. There is no conflicting testimony.

LETTER FROM BAVARIA.

I see nothing very much out of the common place here usually, but last Sunday Miss Chapman and I walked through the cemetery and into the dead house and saw horrible things. Every person who dies here, rich or poor, (except the King) is carried to that place and kept there several days with rings connected with electric bells on his fingers, so that if a supposed dead person makes the least motion the bells ring. They are laid out in full view of all who choose to go and look, and there are always many there. They have each their name and age attached. The cemetery is crowded as we at home cannot imagine—whole families in one grave, they say. The monuments are not over a foot apart generally, and are loaded with wreaths of evergreen and artificial flowers—bright blue and red as often as any other color. Some graves have one or two evergreen trees growing and they put a pink or white paper rose on the end of every limb. It is the most sickening thing I have yet seen. This cemetery is right in the midst of the city, with people living all about it. It is only a few years since they had a water supply from the mountains. Before that many families had wells in their dooryards, (and some do now) and their other water was from the Isar which runs through the city. It is no wonder Munich was called the "Nest of the Typhus." The water is pure now but very hard.

We have not seen the fact of cold weather in America mentioned in the papers; but that is not strange, for they have no telegrams, as our papers do, from all parts of the world. What few telegrams do come, come first to Augsburg or Vienna, and afterwards here a day or more later. Several times things that have happened in Germany have been printed in the papers at home before they were in the Munich papers. Whatever happens in the United States that is bad, is printed at full length, but whatever happens that is good is either not published at all, or put into about two lines of very small type and placed in the most inconspicuous corner. The whole foreign news in the largest daily paper here takes up about a half column.

The geographys in use in the schools here are made on the same plan. Germany is put in on a very large scale, and America on a very small one; and most of the people appear to think the size and importance of the two countries is according to the relative sizes of the maps. They learn almost nothing about any country besides their own. Their idea of America seems to be that it is a place where any body can make a fortune in no time, and that we are a set of half-civilized barbarians. I showed my German teacher a picture of some of the streets in New York, Boston and Chicago a few days ago. She said, as if she was very much surprised, "Why, they look like large cities!" When I told her how many people lived in them, I don't think she believed it at all, she looked so incredulous. Yesterday a very well educated lady asked me if I came from San Francisco. I said "No, from Chicago." Then she said: "But you have seen Miss N., at home, haven't you? Miss N. comes from San Francisco." I had to explain then that Chicago and San Francisco are six days apart, and I had never made the journey. Another lady said her brother was in Pittsburg, and asked if that was not near Chicago. These people are not ignorant people when they speak of anything else. I do hope that our boys and girls at home, when they are out of the high school, know that Rome is not near London, and do not suppose that people who live in Constantinople can easily go calling in Paris.

When one thinks how little the educated people here know about America, it is not surprising to hear what a peasant woman in the market said to Mrs. N.'s son last summer. The old lady noticed that he did not speak good German, so she inquired if he was an Englishman? He replied he came from America.

"Are you American?"

"Yes."

"Were you born there?"

"Certainly."

"But you are white. I thought all Americans were red."

I suppose she thought we were all Indians, capering about with feathers in our hair.

It will be the end of the Carnival next Wednesday. The streets have been quiet until now, though every person, nearly, and I believe every society or club, has given a masked ball. There was last Sunday in the English Garden an imitation of the old "Butcher's Leap," but it is only on Sundays, and so I can not see it. The butchers' apprentices dress in fur, with foxes' tails from head to foot. At a certain time they all jump into the fountain and throw the icy water on as many people as possible. The people here say it is great fun, but I think I would prefer to keep at a safe distance.

To-day it is very noisy in the street. The students are dressed in all kinds of comical costumes, and prance about the streets, followed everywhere by crowds of children. They have begun to play tricks already, and it will be much livelier to-morrow, they say. After it is over I will write what I saw. I forgot to say that there has been even a rag pickers' ball, where everybody went dressed in the worst old clothes they could hunt up. But that was not considered very high-toned, though they say that very respectable men went.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, May 18, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Augustine's "City of God" was the first attempt at a philosophy of universal history. It was written after the Gothic King Alaric had entered Rome. In it he contrasts the perishable kingdom of this world with the immortal kingdom of Christ. "It is a grand funeral discourse upon the departing universal empire of heathenism, and a lofty salutation to the approaching universal order of Christianity." The National Reform Association is seeking to realize in America this coming triumph of Christianity. Last Sabbath I preached again in the Mt. Auburn Presbyterian church. Attention was called to the fact that the dominion of Christ is two-fold, absolute and official. The first is inherent, necessary and incommunicable. It cannot be increased or diminished or abrogated. It is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. The second is delegated. In the economy of redemption the Father sits as the representative of the Trinity. It belongs to him to appoint, to commission, to qualify, to accredit, to receive, and to reward. The Son voluntarily became his subordinate. As "the righteous servant" of Jehovah he became incarnate and suffered to the death. As a reward for his humiliation the Father exalted him to his own right hand and gave him all power in heaven and earth. This is his mediatorial dominion. This he calls upon the nations to recognize. "He has upon his head many crowns." Failure to recognize this causes evils to multiply and brings swift destruction.

Think of our dangers! Illiteracy. Joseph Cook illustrates thus: Let my hand represent the voting body. The little finger must come down—those who cannot read their ballot. Then the semi-illiterate do not read enough to vote intelligently. The next finger must be brought down. The two long fingers represent the intelligent voters, but they are divided between two great political parties. The thumb represents the criminal classes under the saloon system, and the two parties bidding for their vote. The saloon dominates the ignorant vote. The thumb closes down over the two shut fingers. It does not require an alarmist to say there is danger here. Anarchism. They carry the Red Flag. Their motto is: "Property is a crime—destruction a virtue." They are being imported in augmenting numbers. Romanism. "Scratch a Russian and you will find a Tartar under his skin." Rome at heart is the foe of civil and religious liberty. And yet how her insinuations of peace deceive the nations. Bismarck and King William are in league with the Pope. England must have a minister at the Vatican. Powderly, the head of the Knights of Labor, offers that wonderful American organization to the Church, of which he is a devoted son. The labor war, the liquor war, the war upon secretism, etc., all indicate danger ahead. None but the King of kings can save us. May we appeal to him at once.

Monday morning the M. E. preachers' meeting discussed "Evangelists, their place in the church." The paper was read by Dr. Deems. He concluded that the "book" ought to be modified so as to recognize evangelists. Dr. Bayless maintained that every pastor ought to be an evangelist. At the Presbyterian ministers' meeting that afternoon, Rev. James led the discussion. He had four topics: Marriage, polygamy, adultery and divorce. Marriage is a divine institution. It is between one man and one woman. "They twain shall be one flesh." Polygamy was practiced in the old economy, but God's frown was upon it. It is nowhere countenanced. The prophecies clearly indicate that the mind of the Spirit was that the marriage union contemplated one wife only. Adultery was a capital offense. The adulterer was to be put to death in the Jewish economy. Divorces were allowed under the Mosaic law. The causes for divorce were multiplied. There was great abuse. The Saviour was asked, "Shall a man put away his wife for every cause?" (Bad breath was a sufficient cause.) He gave an absolute prohibition except for the cause of adultery. Later a difficult case arose in the church at Corinth. A heathen is converted and his wife will not stay with him because he is a Christian. Paul stated Christ's deliverance that a Christian cannot put away his wife except for adultery. Beyond that he had not legislated. But Paul proceeds to legislate by his Spirit, covering the case in hand. If the unbelieving wife depart, the marriage tie is sundered, and he may marry again. Dr. Priest followed. He said a difficult passage must be interpreted by a plain passage. That in Corinthians is obscure. The words of Christ are clear. The church ought to prohibit divorce except for adultery. But the cure for this alarming and increasing evil must be found in abolishing hasty, ill-considered, mercenary marriages. They breed misery and death. Shakespeare's Hamlet should be a beacon light against it. Broken hearts, a wrecked home, and murder are its bitter fruits. We have fallen upon a hollow-hearted, mercenary age. I have noticed that a prosperous man can get a following. But at a "brother born to adversity" every dog barks.

"The great man down, you mark his favorite files;
The poor advanced makes friends of enemies.
And hitherto doth love on fortune tend:
For who not needs, shall never lack a friend;
And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly reasons him his enemy."

Strikes are becoming a fretting leprosy in our political body. Organized labor and concentrated capital are at war. How shall peace be made? This would do it, if applied:

"To thine own self be true;
And it will follow as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

But the Saviour's law is complete: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them."

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

"THE CROSS OF A NEW CRUSADE."

Rev. Dr. McGlynn, the persecuted disciple of Henry George, recently delivered his lecture, "The Cross of a New Crusade," in the Boston Theatre, before a large and enthusiastic audience. That his coming to the city was appreciated, was amply testified by the heartiness of his reception, not only by men holding similar doctrines, but by a large number of the opposite sex. Boston out-Bostoned Boston. To say it applauded, would be putting it mildly. It fairly yelled its delight as the martyr labor disciple made his debut on a Boston platform. Such a demonstration was all the more surprising because of the conservative reputation of the "Hub."

The substance of the discourse was the relationship of the labor cause and Christianity. There is something ominous in that word "Crusade," which was evidently suggested to the Catholic labor reformer by those prodigious failures projected against the polluters of the Holy City by his ecclesiastical ancestry. Dr. McGlynn's deep interest in the cause he has espoused, to harmonize with the title of his lecture, will be likely to lead his opponents to designate him as a new Peter the hermit. The enemies of the new crusade, now usurping the holy citadel of labor, doubtless disdainfully consider those on the march against them as cranks or fanatics. The likeness of Dr. McGlynn to the cranky Peter ends with the name, for the former is certainly a most talented and able man—decidedly clear-brained. Had Peter been a Dr. McGlynn the success of the crusades under that enthusiast would be an historical fact. The following description of the suspended priest, published the next day in one of our dailies, has upon it the stamp of "hero-worship":

"The pictures of Father McGlynn are libels on his physiognomy. He looks far better than any alleged likeness of him that has yet been printed. He has the large, heavy mouth, to be sure, and a nose that is far from handsome, but that magnificent beetling forehead, poised on a big neck, above a broad pair of square shoulders, causes everybody to forget all other features and look at his head alone. This is worth looking at. Broad, deep and high, with a Websterian width above the eyes, and a Socratic bulge in front, that head would attract the attention of an anatomist, if it were stripped of flesh and put up inside of a show-case in a museum. Under his two black brows a pair of kind brown eyes burned with a subdued and steady fire. Below them were the ordinary features of a large, strong man. Above them, crag on crag, towered that great forehead, inside which lurks many thoughts that cannot crowd themselves into lesser brains. A thin coat of straight black hair with a bald spot behind, completed his head-gear.

"Like his head, his body is large and deep and strong. A full chest, holding lungs that are as tireless as bellows; large arms, with big, fat hands for knobs; muscular legs, and feet with an aristocratic arch at the instep, make up the body of the man who has caused the great convulsion.

"At the beginning he stood erect, and, clasping his hands behind him, talked rapidly, with just the

A SCREED ON CHURCH AND CONSTITUTION.

SPRINGFIELD, O., May 16, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I saw in the Cynosure of March 17, Beecher's true history, agreeing with some remarks by Joseph Cook a few years ago. But after giving this piece of true history, I was surprised to read the following: "It never was true that the church was apathetic or opposed to the anti-slavery agitation." When I read this I wondered if you forgot the action of the old M. E. church in 1836, when she censured two of her ministers for lecturing against the damnable system of slavery; and in 1840 voted to not allow a colored member to testify against a white person in church courts; and you give the action of 1818, but not that of 1845 in the Presbyterian church. Speaking of Barnes and his great book, you were careful to not tell what Barnes said. Well, he said there was not vitality enough outside the church to sustain slavery one hour were it not sustained in it. James G. Birney said the American churches were the bulwark of American slavery. You appear to find great fault with Mr. Garrison for not voting. Reformed Presbyterians do not vote, and I defy you or any other man, to say they are not good citizens, and there was where Mr. Garrison got his doctrine of no-union with slaveholders, non-religious, non-political, and we look on an oath to the United States Constitution as no better than a Masonic oath.

As you find fault with Mr. Garrison for calling the so-called churches corporations and the United States Constitution "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell," I say the churches were corporations held together to crush the manhood out of the negro, and the United States Constitution today is a covenant with death in the shape of whisky, and an agreement with hell at the bar of every saloon. But you tell us that slavery was from hell, but the Constitution was framed by good men acting under great difficulties. Now as you denounce some of the Abolitionists for not having prayer, the United States Constitution was framed without one prayer. After Dr. Franklin made that noble speech in favor of prayer and Randolph recommended it strongly, the Convention adjourned without adopting the motion, and the Convention went on with their work without any prayer being offered; and Dr. Franklin stated that only three or four members thought prayers necessary. Now you say slavery was from hell; the framers adopted it in the Constitution and consequently adopted hell as part of that instrument.

As to the so-called churches, were it the last word I had to write, I would say they were the most deadly enemies we had to contend with in our Under-ground railroad work, and none worse than the Associate Reformed body. Their action in 1830 showed in all the synod there were but six persons favorable to putting out slaveholders from the church, and I attended their General Synod of 1841 and in all their deliberations there was not sufficient manhood in any of the members to offer prayer for the down-trodden slave; and the State smarting under the fugitive slave law, and while the agitation was going on outside the churches, they were like the Dead Sea, stagnant and corrupt. Now if the churches were not opposed to the agitation of this question, why did the noble band of ministers come out from the old M. E. church and form the Wesleyan body? or why did John Rankin, Dyer Burgess, and my friends, Rev. Geo. and Joseph Gordon, leave the Old School Presbyterian church and form the free church? and why? because of their proslavery action. But you tell us that you held to the communion table—your communion with thieves and robbers, as the slaveholders were; and no man can show a clean anti-slavery record that fellow-shipped any of those corrupt bodies. I was brought up in one of those corrupt corporations, but when I saw the wickedness of their course I left, and became connected with a church that never held slaves. I have no regrets for so doing, though I have passed my three-score and ten years.

You speak of Dresser receiving 500 [50] lashes, my history says twenty, but who laid on the stripes? elders that gave him the bread and wine the previous Sabbath, and this was the kind of religion the Northern churches fellowshipped. You say the ministers taught Mr. Lincoln. Now Mr. Lincoln said shortly before his election that a large number of the ministers would vote against him in his own city; and he was right, for if he received any teaching from ministers it must have been from some of those despised anti-slavery ministers and not from the popular clergy of that day.

I saw you in Massillon, in the convention of 1840, and you appeared to be active at that time, but I am sorry to find a man forgetting those days of trial. Some years ago I charged Dr. Bainton of Cincinnati with falsehood in the columns of the Cincinnati Gazette, but the old driveling falsifier dare not answer. I made the same charge against two U. P. ministers, and they submitted to the rebuke without making any reply. Now I give a fair challenge to meet you and let the world judge who is right. And while on this subject, in 1841 when five slaves were landed at my house I knew of but one minister in all my extensive acquaintance in two counties that would give me any aid in helping the fugitives to Canada; and he was Rev. George Gordon, and he now sleeps in a martyr's grave in Holmes county, Ohio, with this line on his monument:

"Here rest the remains of one who in life was faithful to God's poor."

DOCTORS AND DIET.

[The following private letter from Senator Pomeroy was of so much interest in several particulars that we asked permission to print it. With the reply came an additional note. The whole forms a very interesting chapter on diet and health which will be valuable to our readers.—Ed.]

I have not written lately, and for once in my life have had a doctor. For five weeks I had a severe cough, day and night, and it did not seem to surrender to any thing. I fell off, though I had a good appetite, from 241 to 234 pounds, and still my chest seemed full and breath short. I then found a Dr. Fisher here who undertook my case. He prescribed one teaspoonful of liquid made up of some vegetable extract and the juice of one orange taken morning, noon and night—and nothing else! This is the thirteenth day I have adhered strictly to that diet, yet I have not suffered hunger or thirst. I have not lost my strength; my cough left me as he said it would on the fourth day; I am now well. Still, as I rather enjoy fasting, I am going on till I get down to about 200 pounds. Having never had a doctor in my life (only a surgeon to get a bullet out) I have never taken medicine. My father died a natural death at an advanced age and had never taken medicine prescribed by any physician. I hope to die in that way. He died in my arms, while sitting in my lap, his head on my shoulder, like a gentleman and a Christian as he was. My aunt has recently died at 105 years of age! I want to get back to the physical condition of my mature manhood, and then by strict and sensible diet and correct habits I hope to live as it may be God's will. I do not intend to shorten my days by excesses.

I have said all this by way of apology for not keeping up my papers to you. This number of the Cynosure with Mr. Sumner's face is one of the best you have given us. Go on in the good work.

MAY 18TH.—I continued my fast taking only one teaspoonful of liquid food and the juice of one orange (or shaddock, a kind of bitter orange) three times a day for twenty days until I was reduced from 234 to 208 pounds. On the twenty-first day I ate one baked potato, then sparingly of other vegetables and generally of fruits of all kinds I could get at this season, then graham bread and fruits regularly, and occasionally fish.

Now I am again in perfect health, feel better, have no cough, none of my rheumatic pains, no stiffness of limbs and joints; in fact at seventy-one I feel set back to fifty!

I have adopted these rules: To eat principally fruits and vegetables; no fat meat, no butter or lard in any shape, no sugar or molasses in any form, no tea or coffee, no alcoholic drinks, and no water at meals. Graham bread and fruits with some vegetables and fish make a good sensible diet, and I eat them all sparingly.

Senator Sawyer of Wisconsin and several of my fat friends have adopted this diet and dismissed all physicians, and are renewed as in their youth.

Yours, S. C. POMEROY.

RECOLLECTIONS OF JOHN BROWN.

CASPAR, Cal., May 1887.

I like the Cynosure better every number: and why not? It calls to mind so many heart-stirring scenes of the past of the temperance movement from earliest memories. Dr. Clark and Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong are names cherished by me, as Armstrong at that time was my father's nearest neighbor.

Then when we moved west to Madison county, N. Y., in 1824, the Morgan murder became all the talk. It does me good to have these facts kept in memory. Then a full train of the anti-slavery memories in the lives of many who were in that struggle. I have eagerly read all that is published by you with interest. John Brown fills a large place in this story. I was living in Kansas, Osage county, at the time Brown gathered his last lot of slaves and started for their freedom. He had nothing to do in the killing of Cruze, as that was done on the south side of Osage river, while Brown operated on the north side of that river, and no way at that place for crossing. I have it from one who saw the fatal shot. This Cruze made himself notorious at the time Kansas was being invaded by going to the agency of the Indian Nation and offering large sums of money to have the Indians to invade Kansas under the Missouri roush. His plan would not take, but he was remembered for his trouble.

H. L. BITLEY.

SENATOR POMEROY: JOHN BROWN: DR. DOY!

In regard to the rescue of Dr. John Doy from the Missouri prison, I was glad to see Senator Pomeroy's frank explanation. It is not so material whether he was liberated in the day time or in the night, or whether John Brown took part in his deliverance; he was gallantly rescued, whoever took part in the daring enterprise. But while travelling with Dr. Doy holding conventions in the East, after his rescue, I have heard him relate, hundreds of times, all the incidents connected with his seizure by the "Border Ruffians," his trial and imprisonment in Missouri and his rescue on that "dark and stormy night" by his son John Doy, Jr., and his twelve brave companions, but never heard him mention John Brown's name in connection with the case, which it seems to me he would have done had John Brown participated in the affair. The Dr. knew and admired and had often been associated with the noble hero of Ossawatimie.

GEO. W. CLARK.

GOOD TEMPLARISM RENOUNCED.

The following letter, written by an esteemed Congregational pastor to the editor of the Cynosure years ago, is too valuable to be forever buried among old letters:

MY DEAR BROTHER:—At our General Association in Farmington some words passed between you and me which, perhaps, were not altogether pleasant, touching my membership in the order of Good Templars. I write to say that my convictions, and, consequently, my position with reference to that order have changed since that time. For more than a year past I have had doubts upon the subject. The action of the "Memorial Convention" upon the Anti-masonic resolution, and some things which were subsequently stated concerning your course there, which I knew to be incorrect, did more than any other one thing to bring me to what you will deem a right conclusion. I have now withdrawn, with my family, from all connection with the I. O. of G. T., and never intend to be a member of any secret "order" again. Henceforth I am with you and Bro. Roy and other good men and true in opposition to "secret societies." I seek no notoriety in the matter. I prefer not to have it. But I want you and all who labor with you in the good cause to know of my "conversion" and where I stand. As a minister of Christ, I desire to able to say, in the spirit in which He said it, "In secret have I done nothing."

Fraternally and truly yours,

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON FOR MAY 29 BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The protecting cloud. vs. 19, 20. The doctrine of divine providence is only a cloud and darkness to those who have no belief in providence, while to the Christian every sorrow and trial is sun-illuminated because he sees a Father's hand behind it. He may not understand the reason why some especially heavy affliction is sent upon him. He holds no "open sesame" into life's mysteries. A Christian's advantage over an unbeliever does not consist in knowledge but in faith. To realize that a loving and all-wise Friend guides our way, and be willing to sink our wills in His, is to enter into the secret of soul-peace. It is to put the pillar of cloud and fire between us and every enemy.

2. The great deliverance. vs. 21, 22. The passage through the Red Sea may or may not have been miraculous. That God's people were delivered is the all-important point for us. We see that the very thing they feared became their protection. The waters were a wall unto them on their right hand and on their left. We do not know how often a much dreaded sorrow or trouble may be a shield to us against something worse. The only safe prayer is "Thy will be done." The only safe way is God's way, though it leads us through the Red Sea of affliction and trial.

3. The great destruction. vs. 23-31. No miracle recorded in Scripture is half so wonderful as the faithlessness of God's people. The Israelites had seen the plagues visited upon their oppressors, and their own strange midnight deliverance when the death-wail sounded in every Egyptian dwelling; yet with the slavish spirit born of centuries of bondage they are not willing to dare all for liberty even with God on their side, but even complain bitterly of their leader for his action in bringing them out. It were better, say they, that we should serve the Egyptians than that we should die here in the wilderness. Every one who shrinks back from the trials and sacrifices of God's service and wants to go back to the old life of bondage to sin, says virtually the same words. There is here a strong parallel to the condition of many who have taken the Masonic oaths, yet are afraid to come out into perfect soul-liberty by breaking the vows they have taken in ignorance. They know better than any outsider the malignant power of the Secret Empire; that it can derange their business, defame their characters, and even take their lives, and like the children of Israel with the Red Sea rolling before and Pharaoh's hosts pressing on behind, their situation is peculiarly hard. Christians, and even those who lay no claim to that title, will rally round the reformed drunkard; but for the reformed lodgeman there is often a bitter experience. In too many cases the church herself harbors his enemy, and thoughtless and uninformed good people look upon him with coldness and suspicion, as one who has been false to his vows. Yet to such the command is ever, Forward. The trumpet which rallies men to the battle of truth, never sounds retreat. And the frank confession of many good men that they dare not come out against secrecy only means they dare not trust God. It is the cry of that army of slaves repeated, "Let us alone that we may serve the Egyptians."

LESSON X.—June 5, 1887.—The Manna.—Exodus 16: 4-12. GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life.—John 6: 35.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

TRIALS AND TROUBLES BY THE WAY.—Just one short month ago, the Israelites were singing songs of triumph; only one month has passed since they had experienced the goodness and power of God in a stupendous miracle of deliverance, which has comforted God's people for more than 3,000 years; and we now find them full of complaints and murmurings and crying to go back to Egypt and slavery, because they sat by the flesh-pots, and could eat their fill, while they were almost starving in freedom.

Observe (1) how soon the people forgot what God had done for them, and they had reason to believe he would do again.

(2) One reason of this was that they looked rather to Moses than to God.

(3) They needed these trials to teach them about God's power and goodness, and to lead them to put their trust in him. Without trials their life would have been a failure, and all that God had done would have been in vain.

(4) When God leads us into trials, he always shows the way out. If we rush into them foolishly, and against his will, we must suffer.

THE MANNA OF COMMERCE.—It is well known that in the peninsula of Sinai, as well as in many other countries, there is a natural production which goes by the name of manna, and in some respects has striking resemblances to the manna described in the Scriptures. The manna of the present day is a gummy substance, which exudes, either naturally or in consequence of punctures by certain insects, from the tender twigs of certain trees, and drops down upon the sand or leaves beneath in tiny flakes or grains, which, when the manna is pure, are white. There are many kinds of trees which produce the substance; but the most prolific shrub in the peninsula of Sinai is the tamarisk.—Todd.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE SCRIPTURE AND THE NATURAL MANNA.—The manna of Exodus was not the same as the above, but miraculous; for (1) it was not found under the tamarisk tree, but on the surface of the wilderness, after the disappearance of the morning dew. (2) The quantity which was gathered in a single day far exceeded the annual produce at present, and probably at the time of Moses. (3) The supply ceased on the Sabbath day. (4) The properties differed from the common manna: it could be ground, baked, and in other respects treated like meal. It was not used merely as a condiment or medicine, but had the nutritive qualities of bread. (5) It was found after leaving the district where it is now produced, until the Israelites reached the land of Canaan.—Cook. (6) It putrefied when kept, while the natural manna may be kept a long time. (7) It appeared at all times of the year, and not only in May and June, like the natural manna. (8) It was so different that the Israelites, when they first saw it, knew not what it was (ver. 15), "and it certainly looks as if the tree manna, which has always been well known, could not have been so great a wonder to the Hebrews as to have required a sample to be preserved to future generations." (vers. 32-34).

THE DAILY SUPPLY.—Each one was to gather enough for himself and his family, and no more. Some, being greedy or lazy, gathered more, and attempted to keep it till the next morning, contrary to express command, and it bred worms. Greediness is always a real failure, and breeds evils in the soul. The law here was, as an example to all times, that every one should have enough, and none should have more than he needed. One great object of this daily supply was to teach them the great truth taught in the Lord's prayer, "Give us day by day our daily bread." We are to trust God each day; each day we are to see him as the giver of every good; we are to labor and use as well as to receive. Thus they were taught faith, thankfulness, industry, economy, and brotherly love.

BREAD FROM HEAVEN.—It is impossible, now, to read this narrative without connecting it with the Saviour's discourse to the Jews (John 6: 27-58), and from which it appears that, over and above the supply of a present and pressing necessity, this manna was designed, like the blazing serpent and the water from the rock in Rephidim, to prefigure and prophesy the coming of Him in whom the wants of the soul would be as fully met as those of the body were by these well-known miracles. (1) As the manna was heavenly in its origin, so Jesus Christ is he "which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world;" (2) as the manna was abundant in its supply, so Jesus Christ is bread for every man; (3) as the manna was easily obtained, so Jesus may be received by any believer; (4) as the manna had to be gathered and eaten by each for himself, so Jesus has to be appropriated by each soul to himself, and (5) as the manna was given day by day, so we must continually resort to Jesus for those supplies of grace which we require for the constantly emerging exigencies of life.—Taylor.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PASTOR FISCH, of Paris, 1873:—The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry and be destroyed.

REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D., a renouncing Mason:—Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian. Its prayers are blasphemous. Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious. The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism.

MOSES STUART, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass, 1834:—For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to something contained in it, with horror. The triding with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.

JOHN WESLEY, June, 1773:—I went to Ballymena and read a strange tract that professes to discover "the inmost recesses of Freemasonry," said to be "translated from the French original lately published at Berlin." I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry.—N. Y. Christian Advocate, February, 1834.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL:—I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. "They are of the world, they speak of the world and the world heareth them." Christians, though in the world, are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself, is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

CHARLES G. FINNEY:—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

NATHANIEL COLVER, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice.

DWIGHT L. MOODY:—Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

HENRY TATEM, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1832:—It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge. Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called. I will remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, and men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death, and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ.

CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH:—Whoever worships is paid to any but God is paid to devils.

PETER CARTWRIGHT:—Masonry originated with the devil and will end with the devil.

BISHOP DAVID EDWARDS:—Membership in such societies is deserving of the discipline of the church, in the case of any of her own members, who, after due admonition, persist in clinging to their fellowship.

DR. WM. PALEY, the author and philosopher:—Promises are not binding when the performance is unlawful. When the promise is understood to proceed upon a certain supposition, and that promise turns out to be false, the promise is not binding.

DAVID R. KERR, D.D., editor of the United Presbyterian:—How can any man in good conscience swear to keep secret what, for anything he then knows, ought to be exposed? How can any man in good conscience swear to obey a code of laws yet unknown to him, and what for anything he knows, may be in conflict with the law of God? Such oaths are in their very nature essentially immoral.

REV. M. W. FAIRCHILD, Plymouth church, Lansing, Mich., address published by Genesee Congregational conference:—These secret societies tend to weaken Christian fellowship, and diminish interest in church institutions, church services and church work. The lodge not infrequently entirely supplants the church. The testimony to this effect is overwhelming. The very nature of these orders necessarily damages church fellowship.

REV. J. T. COOPER, D. D., Philadelphia:—I wish to set before your mind, the glaring inconsistency in which professing Christians involve themselves when they become members of the society of Masons or Odd-fellows. Nothing is more sure, nothing is more susceptible of a demonstration, than that the religion of these societies rises no higher and extends no further than simple deism. They have no Christ, no mediator, not even in their prayers.

NATHANIEL EMMONS, D.D.:—I am convinced by the highest and most irresistible moral evidence, that the Masonic institution itself is the darkest and deepest plot that ever was formed in this wicked world against the true God, the true religion, and the temporal and eternal interests of mankind.

The Library of Universal Knowledge says of Dr. Emmons, who was one of the greatest of the Congregational clergymen: "When Masonry was popular he zealously opposed it."

REV. JAMES WILLIAMS, renouncing Mason and presiding elder M. B. Church, 1875:—While Christianity has its hundreds of institutions of charity and education, yet with all its boasted age you may travel from Maine to Oregon, from Dakota to Florida, from Palestine to North America, from Asia over the islands of the Pacific to Great Britain, and not find one home for the friendless, one orphanage, one asylum for the poor, or one hospital for the afflicted built or sustained by Masonic charities.

REV. WM. DELOSS LOVE, D.D., Milwaukee, report to Presbyterian and Congregational convention of Wisconsin:—Now if Masonry neither had, nor claimed to have a religion, we should have nothing to object on that point. But since it does claim to offer to men the true religion and the way to heaven, we have decidedly to say, that the society that fellowships in religion all the heathen Chinese, the Mohammedan Arab, the American pagan savage, and the nominal Christian, is not itself Christian, does not illustrate the Christian religion nor show the way to heaven.

REV. JOHN MARSH, D. D., of the National Temperance Society, New York:—Secret temperance organizations are but stepping-stones. Young men here learn the language, forms and degrees of a 'temperance Masonry; and while they gather weekly in a secret lodge for, as they say, business, improvement and enjoyment, they easily slide into the more artful, deistical and dangerous Masonry, which has once and may again fill us with terror and give us blood to drink. From such a connection we say, the Lord deliver us. We plead with our temperance brethren to look at their responsibility, and at once cut loose from all connection by abandoning everything pertaining to secrecy.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGE.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

- Adventists (Seventh-day.)
- Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
- Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
- Christian Reformed Church.
- Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)
- Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
- Disciples (in part.)
- Friends.
- Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
- Mennonites.
- Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
- Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
- Moravians.
- Plymouth Brethren.
- Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.
- Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
- United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be exempted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.
New Hope Methodist, Lowndes Co., Miss.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1887.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON still continues to furnish topics for our exchanges. Superintendent B. T. Roberts gives a clear and powerful reply to it in the Free Methodist, one of the ablest yet. Read it on our fourth page. We hope these answers will reach and be read by Dr. Talmage, and lead him to take some course to counteract the evil influence of that unhappy, ill-starred discourse.

FOREST FIRES occasioned by drought in Michigan, Wisconsin and elsewhere have lately darkened the atmosphere with their smoke, and the papers say that in several States unless rain soon falls crop prospects are gloomy enough. Read Joel 1:14, 17, 18: "Sanctify a fast; call a solemn assembly; gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land, and cry to the Lord. The seed is rotten under their clods; the garners are desolate. How do the beasts groan! The herds of cattle are perplexed because they have no pasture; yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate." Such views prevailed in Palestine while it was inhabited by the people of God who mixed and swerved from his worship.

LEONARD BACON.—Dr. Talmage and Theodore Cuyler may disappoint us when, instead of maintaining a testimony for Christ against the lodge, they deny him who was the Light, the life of men, and who neither walked in darkness nor hid his doctrine in a secret lodge. But we have here the testimony of a greater man than either which has never before been published. Dr. Bacon wrote several years ago to the Cynosure editor, acknowledging with hearty thanks the receipt of a copy of "Freemasonry Illustrated," and saying:

"Freemasonry veiled or unveiled, illustrated or in its native darkness, is to me the dreariest nonsense in the world, the foolishness of all fooleries. Yet I heartily thank you for your kindness in sending the book."

GOOD TEMPLARISM AT SARATOGA.

This strange body sprung up at Utica, N. Y., May, 1855. The temperance cause had then been agitated fifty years, several societies existed, and the argument had been carried. A handful of Masons then undertook to "unite, charter, tax and govern all the societies in one grand organization." (See Chase Manual, p. 7.) In five years it had spread into twenty States and Canada. The Know-Nothings, a similar secret religio-political order, arose in 1853, swept several Northern States; it lived three years and died, soon after Good Templarism was born.

This is a lodge or "Rite" of four degrees, ending with a kind of Knight Templar degree, in which the members (boys and girls) are addressed as "Sir Knights," and told that their order is derived from the Knight Templars of the middle ages, who were military monks living together in male convents, in the practice of the loathsome vices for which such "orders" are chiefly remembered. (See Rom. 1:24-27.)

In 1876 their Grand Lodge split into two, on the color line. Both Grand Lodges meet in Saratoga, May 24 inst., and so will be in session when this Cynosure reaches our readers. Their hope is that the two will unite and vote together in 1888. If they heal the breach and receive colored members on an equality with the whites, they throw off the white lodges of the South. If they exclude the colored Templars, they of course lose the million of negro votes.

The third article of the Good Templars' platform is "Absolute Prohibition," but in 1884 far less than one-half of their voters voted the prohibition ticket. And though the organization is now thirty-two years old, and they had spread over twenty States in the first five years, no corresponding, or, indeed, perceptible spread of the temperance cause has sprung from their work. We see clearly what the women have done. The Ohio crusade and W. C. T. U. have filled the land with their labors. The secret Templar lodges have quarrelled and split over the negro; have held secret meetings, and delegates from the whole world are now meeting at Saratoga—expenses borne, of course.

The secret of the life of this strange body is explained in the following two paragraphs from their ablest defender, S. B. Chase, P. G. W. T. Excusing their omission of the "Benefit System," Mr. Chase says:

"The experience of the world is that men united from mere sordid and selfish motives cannot be effective in great moral enterprises. (Man, p. 8th.)

And then, praising their finances, he says, further on: "Our financial system is one of the strongest bonds to keep us together (p. 19) and upon the regular and prompt payment of dues depends our right of being present at the meetings." And again: "Each one knows that the vitality of his membership is indissolubly connected with the prompt payment of his dues." (page 20).

Put these sentences from Mr. Chase together, and they show that Good Templarism cannot "be effective in a great moral enterprise." More money can be raised by secret societies than by anything else except popery. This the inventors and leaders of Good Templarism know, and they are held together by it.

But the most melancholly circumstance in this dragon-flood of secret false worship, is that good men like "Aaron, the Saint of the Lord," are swept into it. In 1867 the then Andover Faculty, Park, Phelps, Smythe, all, indeed, but one who was out of town, petitioned the Reform Tract Society of Boston to issue a tract to persuade Congregational church members to refrain from joining secret societies. Secretary I. P. Warren, encouraged by Drs. Kirk, Blagden and Adams, put a tract in type, and wrote to Theodore L. Cuyler and others, for their advice as to publishing it. Dr. Cuyler wrote back, "No! by no means!" So the tract was not published. At that time Dr. Cuyler was member of three secret societies. This was just twenty years ago. And, now, Dr. Cuyler is out in a long weak argument in the New York Witness lauding Good Templarism, and urging Christians to join its secret lodges.

But as if wonders were not to cease, this same Dr. Cuyler, but a short time since, was in Dayton, Ohio, and, as we learn from the Conservator, encouraged Prof. L. Davis in his position against the lodge by hoping that the brethren of the Telescope would not lower the standard in the struggle against the assaults of the power of darkness against the Brethren church. Have we come to another "hour and power of darkness" when Christ's disciples, apostles even (for Dr. Cuyler has been reckoned one) are being sifted by Satan?

During the even twenty years from 1867, Dr. Cuyler has been a member of secret societies, and now, 1887, in the New York Witness, in the face of such men as Drs. McCosh, Hodge (now in heaven) and Paxton, of Princeton, he urges his Presbyterian brethren to join secret temperance lodges! Masonry has grown green under the shadow of his pulpit. Though an intelligent man and minister of Christ, he must know that Masonic Knights Templar, composed of all sorts of men, practiced infant baptism there in New York before his eyes—in the name of what god they do not say. Yet if, during these twenty years, he has whispered a word from his pulpit against these abominations, the press has not heard of it; and yet, surely, if there is or ever was "an abomination which maketh desolate standing where it ought not," these are such abominations. And it is the endorsement of such good men as Dr. Cuyler which encourages J. N. Stearns, a Freemason, to wield the princely donation of Wm. E. Dodge, through the National Temperance Society, to build up a religion in opposition to Christ the Son of the living God.

But, Masonry aside, we have certain information that John B. Gough abhorred Good Templarism; that Henry Wilson moved to publish the secret ritual of Good Templarism the first meeting after his initiation; that the beloved temperance apostle Charles Jewett, has left pages condemning the secret temperance orders; and that Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, John P. St. John, Dr. A. J. Jenkins and others "would not turn a hand over to restore secret temperance lodges if they were all dead." And in the face of these and hosts of statesmen, and divines, living, and in the face of their testimony who are dead, we have here a handful of fourth or fifth rate men, declaring they have very little secrecy in their orders; yet, for the sake of that secrecy, defying heaven and earth, and driving the holy cause of temperance like a ship on rocks; and, with the most astounding effrontery, calling on God-fearing men and women to pray for their success!

"O what authority and show of truth,
Can cunning sin cover itself withal."

HOW TO TREAT DERELICT CHURCHES.

We give in this number Mr. Boyd's letter, notwithstanding his severe rebukes of us. It is a valuable document; its facts are true, and its history instructive, and needed by those who did not live through our national midnight. But we must decline a prolonged controversy over the past. The Cynosure deals with the living present and the impending future. The question for us is, how to deal with derelict churches.

We are to follow those "who through faith and patience have inherited the promises." How did Peter treat the church which denied and delivered up Christ, when Pilot wished to have let him go. We read (Acts 3d) that Peter, after healing the cripple at the Beautiful gate of the Temple, addressed the "men of Israel" (church members) thus:

"Ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of Life. And now, brethren, (yes! brethren!) I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers." "And the captain of the Temple and the priests laid hands on them and put them in hold." But the angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors and sent them to preach in the Temple, and thousands of these church members who had "killed the Prince of life" were converted to Christ. (Acts 5: 19-20, and Acts 21: 20.) Yea, also, and Christ bade the people hear and heed the preaching of those very preachers who soon after stirred up the mob to ask Pilate to release Barrabas and crucify himself. Matt. 23: 3.

Now the Cynosure has no censure or criticism on the course taken by Bro. Boyd in leaving a church in complicity with slave-holders, and joining the Covenanters, who kept their communion free from the crime of slave-holding. If Mr. Garrison and the small circle who held with him had joined the Covenanters, or if they had observed the Lord's Supper, or kept the Sabbath, sustained Gospel preaching, with Sabbath-schools, Bible-classes, and a Gospel discipline, the writer we all have walked with them. But they did none of these. We therefore attended their meetings against slavery, and bade them God-speed in opposing it. But we shrank from them in almost everything else. "Without me," said Christ, "ye can do nothing;" and they "concerning the faith made shipwreck." W. T. Allen, James Miller McKim, C. C. Burleigh, Ichabod Coddington, Elizur Wright and others, whom we could name, were nature's noblemen, and sons of eloquence. But they did not obey the plain dying command of Christ. Allen, Coddington and others scouted his atonement. Henry C. Wright and others, worshiped familiar spirits. He (Wright) had been a Congregational minister; he became a spirit-worshipper, and vulgar, blatant infidel. We have acted with him on Abolition committees and knew him well. He fell dead in a wagon-shop, and Garrison attended his funeral and pronounced his apotheosis. These all hated slavery and hissed the churches of Christ. Weld was a meteor, brilliant and beautiful. For a time he filled our skies with light. Wendell Phillips insisted that he was orthodox, and Old School at that; and Gerrit Smith built his own church and preached in it, and kept up family prayer to the last, as also did Fred. Douglass while his children were growing up. But, to-day, the mass of Garrisonites and their children in Massachusetts deal with familiar spirits and unbelievers, whose ideas, like earthquakes, flourish amid ruins; and they resemble the staid, systematic Scriptural Covenanters about as a howling crowd resembles a family. They would burn down churches to get rid of the rats and snakes which have crawled under them.

The churches of to-day have lost half their moral power by their leaders' neglect of Christ in "the least of his brethren," the poor unpopular slave! But, "I wot that through ignorance they did it." Bad as they were, their "rulers" were worse. As now with the deistic devil worship of the lodge, the rank and file knew almost nothing about slavery. The writer was in Andover Theological Seminary before it ever came to his knowledge that church members all over the South were raising, buying and selling slaves. The political presses were silent to gain Southern votes, and the voters chose and supported the ministers; and the pulpits were stuffed with slave-raised cotton! They, too, were silent, and the masses were ignorant; and so chose Barrabas and rejected Christ. But bad, ignorant as they were, Peter called persons like them "brethren," and said that through ignorance they did it.

There is far less excuse for the ignorance of the churches to-day. For the lodges have once been turned inside out all over the North; and the Anti-masonic reformers are not heretics "denying the Lord that bought them." But ignorant, sinful as the churches are, if God had let down a golden chain, and drawn up to heaven every church, communion-table, prayer meeting, Bible-class, Sabbath-school and missionary society, the people of the United States would now be demi-savages in process of extinction. Let us follow the apostles as they followed Christ.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

Article 4 in the By-Laws of the National Christian Association, provides that "This Association shall meet annually on the third Thursday in June, at its principal place of business," etc. Members of this body will remember that this is the business meeting of the year when officers are elected, the work of the year reported, and plans for the future are made. It is highly important that every member of the corporate body should be present and that as many of the friends as possible should attend to aid by their counsels and prayers in this great and growing work.

J. P. STODDARD,
Secretary and General Agent.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston, the missionary for the Reformed Presbyterian church among the Chinese at Oakland, California, passed through Chicago last week on his way to the Synod of his church at Newburg, New York. For his brief call on the Cynosure we were most thankful and hope on his return for a longer visit.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold may fairly claim that his is a salvation tent since he keeps the great work of soul-saving always at the front. He begins work in a place on Thursday evening, and will stop only where there can be no socials, festivals, or other meetings to seriously interfere before the next Wednesday. He thus avoids deranging anybody's plans about church work. On the Sabbath he endeavors to have a union evening service in the tent for Gospel or temperance work conducted as the pastors of the place may elect. He thus puts his exhibitions where he wants them, into the society of the churches as a religious as well as educating influence.

—Thanks to a publisher in Memphis for a copy of his paper. The mechanical execution is good—but what is the matter? The paper is listed in the Year Book as a Baptist publication; yet it contains liquor, theatrical and private medical advertisements, more than forty hall and society notices to three church notices, and not a line of strictly religious reading. We trust this does not fairly represent the colored Baptists of Memphis.—Missionary Visitor.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, Governor General of Canada, owns, it is said, 120,616 acres of land in Ireland upon which the tenants are treated with severity. William O'Brien, an Irish editor and agitator, has come over and boldly assails the Marquis in his own castle. He planned a visit to the principal cities of Canada to hold meetings and arouse popular indignation against the Governor General. His purpose may have been good but his pugnacious and unhappy way of securing it maddened the Orange lodges who mobbed him at Toronto and Kingston. Barely escaping with his life and somewhat injured, he has taken refuge in our American "asylum for the oppressed." Severe as his reception may have been he is probably satisfied, as those two lodge mobs (as is ever the case) achieved more for his cause than ten years speaking could have done. Public sympathy has been aroused to see the real justice of his plea, and the Governor General may be moved to do justly by an effort which seemed likely only to exasperate and embitter all parties.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

COMMISSIONING THE UNITED BRETHREN.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., May 17th, 1887.

Fourteen miles by stage brought me to this city from Zanesville, where I spent Sabbath preaching morning and evening in the United Brethren church. Last evening I gave a lecture in the same house on the secret lodge system. The attendance and order was good and steadily increased. Bro. Haverstock was apprehensive that former disturbances might be repeated at the lecture, but although the craft was said to be largely represented there was not the slightest irregularity or impropriety so far as I noticed.

The U. B. church is reported to be considerably exercised over the "Commission" business, and I was told of some remarkable changes on the part of both ministers and members, occurring of late. Bro. William Haverstock and his wife were among the first settlers at Zanesville, and have carried the financial burden of the church for over forty years, at home, besides giving largely to the general interests of the denomination. They have over $1,700 in the present commodious and well-appointed structure, which all concede would never have been erected but for their money and efforts. They are both radicals of the radicals, and several of the spiritual-minded, active members are in full sympathy with them, but when Bro. Haverstock asked for the house for an anti-commission conference it was denied, and Bro.

H. considers himself practically excluded by this action of his pastor and the local brethren.

Bro. Johnston, a resident minister and former pastor in the place, did not attend any of my meetings, and sister Bowman said that had the present pastor been in the place I would not have obtained the use of the church; and yet Bro. Abbot and Bro. Johnston are United Brethren, under the "Commission" movement. How unlike to the U. Bs. under the old constitution or even the Bishop Weaver I once knew.

It is an old maxim that "Poverty makes strange bed-fellows," and it seems in this case as if reposing in the lap of the lodge had shorn the once strong and great of their spiritual power, and chilled the generous impulses of their hearts. To shut the door against an old man with a record like that of Bro. Haverstock is a sin and shame, scarcely equaled by the unfeeling, heartless lodge itself. But such outrages perpetrated in the name of Christ and the United Brethren church, under the shallow pretext that it is done in the interest of peace, are hastening the decisive struggle when the Bride of Christ shall put away strange gods from her communion and fellowship, and triumph gloriously in her "Living Head."

J. P. STODDARD.

HINMAN AND COLE IN PHILADELPHIA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A ride from Harrisburg to Philadelphia at this season of the year presents a panorama of rare beauty. It is true that the villages are not so beautiful as those of New England. There is less of artistic display in the style and arrangement of buildings. They are not so nicely painted nor do the streets and parks display so much good taste. But there is substantial wealth, and the appearance of solid prosperity. The farming lands are as carefully cultivated as anywhere in America, and nowhere do we see fields seared and bare, or turned over to nature, as you see sometimes in New England and very largely in the South.

Philadelphia, though old, is by no means a city that has ceased to grow or improve. Marked changes and progress are everywhere apparent. Within a few months cable cars have largely taken the place of those propelled by horses, and the old cobblestone pavements are giving way to asphalt. The great City Hall, still in process of construction, will be, when completed, one of the grandest buildings on the American continent. Already it has cost $10,000,000, and is yet far from completion. Its tower is now about 350 feet high, and 200 more feet are to be added. It is one of the few large buildings that preserves the idea of symmetry and proportion. Its height, length and breadth are in harmony.

Nor has the moral improvement greatly lagged behind. Sabbath observance, which more than any one thing serves as an index of the moral tone of society, is evidently gaining ground—at least so far as the administration of law is concerned. The liquor stores last Sabbath were closed more perfectly than for years before.

On Sabbath evening the forty-seventh anniversary of the Philadelphia Sabbath Association was held at the Broad Street M. E. church. Able addresses were made by Dr. Stevenson, of the Christian Statesman, Ex-Gov. Pollock and others, and great satisfaction was expressed at the better enforcement of the law in this and other large cities. The enforcement of the Sunday laws against the saloon is at least teaching the practicability of prohibition in our large cities.

On Sabbath afternoon I listened to an able discourse on the subject of National Reform by Rev. T. P. Stevenson. It was a full presentation of the possibilities and dangers of our nation—of our moral responsibility to God and our only safety in an humble and obedient recognition of his authority and law. At the conclusion I was asked to make some remarks on the work of the N. C. A. in the South, which seemed to be accepted as a part of the great work of National Reform.

On Tuesday morning I was cheered with the arrival of Bro. J. A. Cole, who came to aid in the reform work. Together we called on a number of pastors, who expressed much sympathy with our work, but with very few exceptions desired to be excused from any part of the conflict. We went to the office of the Christian Recorder, the able organ of the African M. E. church, and which some time since was advertised as the "National organ of colored Freemasonry." Rev. Dr. Lee, the office editor, received us most kindly; said he was quite in sympathy with our views; had been himself a Freemason, but read Finney and other authors, and was satisfied that it was utterly wrong. He said that secret societies were doing an immense amount of harm. But he discouraged all efforts to oppose them. He said the colored people were wedded to the system, and that even though some might give it up for a time, yet such was the power of the lodge that they would be driven back into subjection. Rev. Dr. Tanner, editor of the Quarterly Review, was quite anxious that Bro. Cole should write an extended article on Africa and its institutions, which will give him an excellent opportunity to say something of this relic of barbarism.

On Tuesday evening the 17th the friends of Rev. T. P. Stevenson and Mrs. Stevenson united in celebrating their silver wedding. The gathering was in the First R. P. church and was large and most enjoyable.

To-day, 18th, Bro. Cole and myself addressed the students of "The Institute for Colored Youth," corner of 9th and Bainbridge streets. It is perhaps the oldest colored school in the country and is sustained by the Society of Friends. Mrs. Frances Coppin is the principal, a graduate of Oberlin College. She is assisted by a number of able teachers and has enrolled 400 or 500 pupils in the different departments. We found a large fine library and excellent chemical, mechanical and physiological apparatus—such as we would expect to find in a first-class college. It seems to have been originally a girl's school, and has now a boy's department, but they are quite separate.

The General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterians of North America met on the evening of the 18th at corner of Vine and 20th sts. The sermon was preached by Rev. D. Steel, D. D. The annual conference of the African M. E. Zion church commenced its session at the same time. The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church will begin its session in Dr. Dale's church on Race street on the 25th inst. We hope to be able to attend these meetings and distribute reform literature.

H. H. HINMAN.

ON THE WEST OHIO BORDER.

COLUMBUS, O., May 20, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As the hand on the clock dial always moves forward, so does every reform and every reformer.

Bro. Peter Minton met me at McGonigles as expected in my last. An hour's ride brought us to his son Harvey's, whose acquaintance I made while in school at Wheaton. Both he and his estimable wife made me very welcome as usual. Bro. Minton expressed satisfaction with the work done by the N. C. A. agents and pleasure at the interest taken in the recent Congress. After a brief stop I was again accompanied by him to Jacksonsburg, a distance of some thirteen miles, where I found Bro. Henry Kumler had arranged for meetings in the U. B. church. Here I spoke three times to very good audiences. Bro. Jos. Kumler said he did not think there had been as many people in the church for two years as attended the last lecture. There was much surprise expressed by those who did not know the practices of the lodge that such things should be tolerated by sensible men. One lady who had three boys said she felt a great responsibility in keeping them out of such an institution.

My next appointment was at College Corner. My audience here was all that could have been expected. Brethren Samuel and Henry Miller, who reside at this point, have done much telling work against the lodge. A public discussion was had some time since which resulted in the total defeat of the secrecy men.

I next visited the U. P. congregations at Hope-well and Morning Sun in the interest of the Cynosure. Sabbath was spent at Fair Haven where I addressed attentive audiences both morning and evening. Several manifested their interest in our work by their subscriptions to the Cynosure. Mr. John G. Hays, who subscribed for the Cynosure for the first time last year, in addition to his renewal extended the hospitality of his home.

On Monday evening according to previous arrangement I spoke in the Friend's meeting house at West Elkton. This is an old town settled by the Friends in an early day, six miles from the railroad. Our work was entirely new to many. Some did not know that there was an organization of Christians opposing the lodge. A written request that questions be permitted was handed in before the lecture commenced. I of course gave an opportunity for the questions. The man who wished to ask them proved to be considerably deficient, so only made himself ridiculous, and took up time. It had been rumored that I would be thoroughly answered should I attempt to speak against the lodges. If the men who expected to do the answering were the best the lodge could send, they were certainly badly off for material.

I go to-day to New California where I expect to spend Sabbath and as much time as may seem best.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

SAID I NOT SO?

Said I not so, that I would sin no more;
Witness, my God, I did!
Yet I am run again upon the score;
My faults cannot be hid.

What shall I do? Make vows and break them still?
'Twill be but labor lost.
My good cannot prevail against mine ill;
The business will be crost.

O say not so; thou canst not tell what strength
Thy God may give thee at the length,
Renew thy vows and if thou keep the last,
Thy God will pardon all that's past.
Vow while thou canst; while thou canst vow thou mayest
Perhaps perform it when thou thinkest least.

Thy God hath not denied thee all,
Whilst he permits thee thus to call.
Call to thy God for grace to keep
Thy vows; and if thou break them, weep.

Weep for thy broken vows, and vow again;
Vows made with tears
Cannot be still in vain.

Then once again
I vow to mend my ways;
Lord, say Amen,
And thine be all the praise!

—George Herbert.

THE SECRET OF PULPIT MIGHT AND MASTERY.

Without a personal o'er-mastering faith, and the discipline of a genuine religious experience, no man can be a master in religion. Without the insight of his human nature, gained by personal travel along the rough road of conviction, and through the strait gate of the new birth, a preacher's words, however wise and ingenious, will fail to wake startling echoes in the souls of other men. According to that fine saying of Augustine, a man must first descend into the hell of his own heart before he can ascend to the heaven of God; or, it might be added, before he can be safely set as a religious teacher. In order to move others, one must have been deeply inly moved himself. In order to electrify others, we must have been first self-electrified. Before we can stir up our fellow men to take hold on God and religion, we must have the depths of our own being fully stirred in the revolutionary process of an original and thorough work of grace.

And in many cases, too, we must be melted up and run over in the crucible of affliction, before we have acquired the experience and power that will enable us to startle others with the thunder of truth, or by the flashes of a heaven-born eloquence to reveal to them the true greatness of their nature, and make them solemn and thoughtful over themselves. We must be put into the alembic of trial before our native ore will run, or its impurities be sublimed. And often, such is our hardness and stubborn temper, we must be wrought in the forge of suffering, and it is God's breath must be blowing the bellows before the process of refining will go so far as to reflect his image from our melting and obedient souls, and form us into vessels meet for his service. And then we must be molded and hammered on the anvil into various shapes by God's painful discipline, and we must be deeply graven upon by his marking tools, before we can be at all fitted for his best uses here or for glory hereafter. The utterances of a soul thus graven upon by the Master can not but evoke a startling answer from the souls of others, and make them feel thereby that he is a master; for they are truths concerning themselves, which conscience—or that which Joseph Cook says perceives rightness and oughtness in motives—never fails to take up and repeat in the reluctant ear.

The call of the times is for preachers thus graven upon with God's own mark. The people want to hear them, and they take note and give heed when they appear. Men like to have the solemn truths they utter echoed back from the sounding-board of their own souls. There is attentive listening whenever and wherever they appear, whether in cathedral or conventicle—shaggy Nazarites of the wilderness, eating locusts and wild honey; or polished orators of the metropolitan pulpit, learned in all the wisdom of Egypt, but marked also with the sign and seal of God.

Here is the secret of ministerial power, communion with God and profound acquaintance with self through the witnessing Spirit. And the divine discipline for a minister is through those three heavenly degrees (not of the schools) which Burton said his friend John Bunyan had taken, namely: Union with Christ; the anointing of the Spirit; experience of temptation—which do more to fit a man for the mighty work of preaching the Gospel than all the university learning and degrees that can be had.—Cheever's Correspondence of Faith.

CHRIST'S COMING TRIUMPH.

It is certainly a very marvelous enterprise which our Lord Jesus Christ has undertaken. The salvation of a single soul involves a miracle. The salvation of myriads upon myriads of the human race; what shall I call it but a mountain of marvels. The removal of the darkness which has settled over mankind in ten-fold night—what a divine labor! The ending of the enmity which exists between man and God, the reconciling of man unto his Maker—what a design! The redeeming of this world from the bondage of corruption, the setting up of a kingdom of truth and holiness—what an enterprise! Such wonders has Jesus undertaken, and such wonders he will achieve. He died to lay the foundation of his all-conquering kingdom, and he still lives that his kingdom may be established in its supremacy, and all nations may flow to it. Beloved, I fail to conceive, much more to express, the vastness of the task he has undertaken. Those of you who love your fellow-men often mourn your powerlessness with a single individual. What hard work it is to deal with our countrymen! How are we baffled by their poverty, their ignorance, their misery, their sin! You have only to battle with a single vice—drunkenness, to wit—to feel what a monster is to be overcome. Only think for a moment of the social impurity of this city, and you are sick at heart as you remember it. Now, the Lord Jesus Christ has come to cleanse this Augean stable; and he will cleanse it. The stream of the river of life shall run through the foulest parts of the earth till even those horrible regions which are comparable to the Dead Sea shall be reclaimed.

The problem staggers us. The systems of evil are colossal. The hold of evil on the race is terrible. Man is inveterately a sinner. You cannot cure him of rebellion; he is desperately set on mischief. Even when the consequences of his sin wound and afflict him he still returns to it. If you prove to him a demonstration that a thing is right and profitable, he does not therefore love it; if you prove it to be injurious, he therefore chooses it. By the use of an accused logic he puts darkness for light and light for darkness, and thus stultifies his conscience, and hardens his heart. If, perchance, you convince his judgment, you have not won his affection, you have not carried his will, you have not subdued his mind. Nothing but Omnipotence itself can save a single soul. What must be that mighty power which shall cause nations to run unto the Lord! They that dwell in the wilderness are to bow before him, and his enemies are to lick the dust. What a conquest this! How shall Ethiopia be made to stretch out her hands to him? Look how black are the hearts of her inhabitants, as well as their faces! How shall China and Hindoostan, clouded by their false philosophies, be led to own the truth? Look you, sirs, look at this great mountain, and do not underestimate its mass; and then remember that before our Zerubbabel it must and shall become a plain. The stone mentioned by Daniel, cut out of the mountain without hands, smote the monstrous image and brake it and in due time filled the whole earth. In the night visions the same prophet saw the Son of man having dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people should serve him. So must it be. But how great a thing it is!—Spurgeon.

A BAD ENDING.

A bad ending has frequently spoiled a good beginning.

"I liked your minister's sermon," said a stranger to a gentleman who had invited him into his pew. "It was a very good discourse, but he spoiled it for me by the careless way in which he gave out the hymn."

Details are important when an impression is to be made which the speaker hopes will persuade men. Michael Angelo thought the carving of a cherry not unimportant, and it stands to-day a proof of his conscientiousness in details.

He who is careless of details is apt to overlook the fitness of things. Prof. Phelps, of Andover, tells how he was once disturbed by the ending which that prince of preachers, the late Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburgh, once gave to a sermon.

The doctor was pressed for time as he was announced to speak in another part of the city and frequently eyed his watch. Pressing hurriedly through the latter part of his sermon, he drew out his watch nervously, saw he had but ten minutes to cross the city, and at once uttered the benediction. Almost before the last word had left his lips he shot down the pulpit stairs like a rocket.

"I had before seen a priest take his pinch of snuff in the midst of the celebration of high mass," says Prof. Phelps; "but that was not so revolting as the benediction and leap of the Scotch divine."—Sci.

LIVES OF CELEBRATED MEN.

DAVID ZEISBERGER.

While John Woolman was still a baby in the poor farm-house at Mount Holly, another boy of like spirit, and destined to as noble work, was born in an obscure little hamlet among the Carpathian Mountains.

David Zeisberger's forefathers were peasants, the followers of John Huss. He inherited nothing from them, not even especial intellectual alertness. Unless, indeed, we count as a heritage the drops of blood which ran in his veins from more than one of the noble army of martyrs. When he was five years old his family fled, to escape persecution, to Herrnhut, where Count Zinzendorf then had gathered the remaining Hussites. David's father and mother were among the Herrnhutters sent by Zinzendorf to Georgia, but the boy was left in Moravia to be educated by the church of the Unitas Fratrum. This church, as we all know, claims to-day to hold the place in an especial manner of a mother to the children in her communion, and no mother's care could be more keen or benignant than it is now. But in Zeisberger's day her rule was that of the typical step-mother. He was a small, delicate lad, with something in his face which attracted the notice of Zinzendorf. He sent the boy to a prosperous community of the church near Utrecht, where education, as in godly private families of the time, was given through the lash. David went through a steady discipline of work, beatings and fastings.

One day a stranger whom he helped, when he was lost in the morasses near the town, gave him two pieces of gold, bidding him keep them and not give them to the community. David's conscience, however, forced him to give one piece to the brethren, who immediately charged him with having stolen it, and publicly punished him as a liar and a thief.

This was the stroke too much. That night David, with another boy named Shober, escaped from the community and set off to America, with no means but the solitary piece of gold which he had kept. It paid their way to London. There General Oglethorpe met the lads, and, struck by David's sensitive face and singular gravity, procured them a free passage to Savannah.

In the backwoods of Georgia, Zeisberger at last found his father and mother. He set himself to learn to plow, to trap bears and hunt panthers; but scarcely had the winter opened when the Moravian settlement was broken up by raids of the Spanish soldiers from Florida. The Zeisberger family were carried as laborers by Whitefield farther into the wilderness, up into Pennsylvania. There they, as if guided by God, came to where Nitschmann, a bishop of the Unitas Fratrum, had just arrived, meaning to found a colony of the brethren.

With this handful of men and the Zeisberger family he penetrated the mountains to the headwaters of the Delaware. The place is familiar to us all; but to understand David's story we must set it back a century. The unbroken forest walled them in; the silence was oppressive. There were none of the singing birds which appear with civilization, no dogs, cows, poultry, no cheerful village life. Outside of their tents the world sank suddenly into a gloomy wilderness, tenanted only by beasts of prey and the savages who peered at them from the underbrush or fled with hoarse cries like a legion of devils. David, who was always neat and finical as a woman, felt an intolerable loathing for their indelicacy and filthy habits. Yet, back of that, they had a singular power over him. Their souls met him naked as their bodies. They were to him lost creatures of God, knowing not their Father. Yet, he asked himself, what did he, the child of the church, know of God more than they? That winter, working alone in the forest, the boy passed through that hour of wrestling which comes to every young man. "What was he? What was God? Why was he here?"

This little German, always prim and grave, endured strange anguish of soul. At times he heard, like John Woolman, a voice telling him that his work was to bring these lost savages to God. The next hour this seemed impractical. He would go back to Utrecht to a trade, to almost certain success. What had he to do with the savages more than with other brutes?

Just at this juncture arrived Count Zinzendorf.

He saw the lad, and detected again the same singular hint of promise on his face—a prophecy which he could not interpret.

He told the brethren that the boy must have a chance, and appointed him one of his staff to return with him to Moravia. David came with him to Philadelphia, and embarked with the understanding that a clear road to fortune lay before him in Europe, and that he never was to return to America.

The ship weighed anchor. Bishop Nitschmann, passing down the deck, saw the lad, pale and haggard, gazing at the receding shore.

"Zeisberger," he said, "is it possible that you wish to return?"

"Yes."

"But for what reason?"

"That I may learn to know Christ, and teach him to the Indians," said David, finding speech at last in his extremity.

"Then, if that be your mind, in God's name, even now go back!"

The ship was brought to, and the boy sent back. After this the Moravians regarded him as Eli di Samuel: he was called of God. His name was entered on the list of the brethren and their trades, as David Zeisberger, destinierter Heidenbote.

The lad at once left the community and went to the lodge of the great sachem of the Mohawks, and there lived and worked to learn thoroughly the habits and language of the Indians. He was adopted into the tribe of the Onondagas.

Thus begins the remarkable history of a work which extended over sixty-two years. Zeisberger was always, as a beardless boy or a tottering old man, an itinerant among the fiercest tribes on the Western continent. He made his way through interminable forests, through morasses in which he sank to his neck; he was dragged to jail as a French spy, and as a rebel emissary; he was tortured by the cannibal tribes and barely escaped with life; but he was, through all, the same quiet, prim little man who never was heard to complain, and who seldom spoke except when he was "about his Father's business." So silent was he that when he was in the settlements whole days would pass in which he would not utter a word. Yet his passionate bursts of fiery eloquence had a singular power over his dusky hearers. They held him as one of their kinsfolk. He was Ganonsserachi. They knew him to be as reticent and as unflinching under torture as themselves. He went into tribes where hundreds lay dead from small-pox, and alone nursed the sick and buried the corpses. Again and again he faced a mob of drunken, howling savages, and cowed them with his quiet, indomitable spirit. He spoke the dialects of the principal tribes, he controlled the grand council of the Delawares, and held the rank of sachem among the six nations. He left complete grammars and dictionaries of all the principal Indian languages, with hymnals, the Gospels, collections of sermons, etc., in the Iroquois and Lenni Lenape tongues.

No other single man ever did as much to civilize and Christianize the red man in America as Zeisberger. He traveled throughout the United States and Canada, and established forty Christian villages as the nucleus of Indian civilization. In these villages he not only taught them the Gospel, but set them to work as farmers and mechanics. If the work begun by this unobtrusive little German had been carried out, there would not be an uncivilized Indian on the continent.

During his sixty-three years of labor, Zeisberger never took a penny from the church for his support. "I am no hireling," he said quietly. "God set me this work."

In the history of colonial days, set over against the massacres, witch-burnings, and battles of both New Englanders and Virginians with the red devils, there is the figure of this silent, insignificant-looking Moravian, going in and out of the wilderness at his work. It is to our eyes like one of the apostles.

In 1782 a body of militia men fell unprovoked on the two Christian villages of Salem and Gnadenhutten, driving the inhabitants into inclosures preparatory to killing them. The Indians passed the night in singing hymns and in prayer. In the morning they were butchered like so many bees. David never recovered from this blow; these dark-skinned martyrs were dear to him as children. He foresaw, too, that the cause of Christianity would be thrown back among the Indians a hundred years by this crime. The work of the Moravians among the Indians stopped.

Zeisberger died at an extreme old age in an Indian village. Bishop de Schweinitz, in his history of the Moravian missionary, tells us that, when the hour of his death drew nigh, the passing bell tolled, and his white friends, the brethren, withdrew and gave way to the Lenape Indians, who gathered around his bed. They sang the hymns in their own tongue, which he had written for them. "Then," says the chronicler, "the red men fell upon their knees and wept aloud, for they knew that their best friend was gone forever."—Congregationalist.

TEMPERANCE.

THE PHILADELPHIA QUAKERS ON ALCOHOL AS A MEDICINE.

The Temperance Committee of the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends has issued the following timely address to physicians, bearing the signature of President Edward H. Magill, of Swarthmore College, as chairman, and Henry T. Child, M. D., as clerk of the committee:

AN ADDRESS TO THE MEDICAL FACULTY ON THE USE OF ALCOHOL IN THE PRACTICE OF MEDICINE.

Deeply sensible of the vast responsibility which rests upon the members of the medical profession in regard to the enormous evils of intemperance resulting from the use of intoxicating beverages, we address you, and wish to call your attention to the facts in relation to this subject.

You are not only the chosen guardians of the health of the community, but your position is eminently that of teachers—the very name doctor signifies teacher. All classes of the community look to you for advice, and are very much influenced by that which you give them. How often do we hear the saying: "Our doctor says" this is right, or that is wrong? Especially is this true in the case of young mothers, and your influence over these, either for good or evil, will be felt for more than one generation, the use of stimulants and narcotics during this important period often stamping an inherent taste for alcohol in the child, as well as causing the mother to adopt their habitual use. It is well known that during the last thirty years our knowledge of the properties of alcohol, and of those compounds in which it is found and used, has been greatly extended. The fact that fermented liquors, cider, malt liquors and wines contain more or less alcohol was scarcely recognized, but we now know that these drinks are all of them capable of producing intoxication. That they interfere very seriously with digestion and nutrition, and especially with the removal of effete matters from the system, is now a well established fact. The alcohol is the same in these as in distilled liquors, differing only in quantity.

The question whether alcohol is a food or a generator of heat has been carefully examined, and the evidence seems to be clear that it is neither. Many eminent physicians have arrived at the conclusion that it is simply an irritant narcotic poison; that it enters the human system, either by absorption or inhalation, as alcohol, that it remains in the blood vessels and tissues for a time as alcohol, and that it passes out of the body through the various excretories without change.

Those who believe in the necessity of the use of alcohol as a medicine must be aware that the various liquors in which it is found are not at all reliable, either as to the quantity of alcohol they contain or the other ingredients with which they are adulterated under the name of "compounds." The fact that almost all wines and liquors now sold are adulterated is well established.

We would refer the reader to the chapter on "Adulterations," in Gustafson's "Foundation of Death," pp. 46 to 56.

Dr. Benjamin W. Richardson, of London, Eng., an eminent scientist and physician, was convinced in his earlier investigations that it was uncertain and unsafe to prescribe any of the wines or liquors in common use. He therefore prescribed pure alcohol, diluted with water, so that he knew that he had a fixed amount of the former without any of the impurities which were contained in the liquors.

Every conscientious physician is careful to have the remedies used as pure as possible, and no one will advocate the use of alcohol by persons in health, and it is an important question for the medical practitioner to settle as to how far it may be advantageous to use it as a medicine.

We respectfully ask you to examine this carefully without prejudice. We refer you to the statistics and reports of the London Temperance Hospital, which was established in 1864. (See pp. 208 to 215.) Gustafson: "The reports are invariably satisfactory." "The treatment is altogether without alcohol in any form." "As a matter of fact alcohol has only been used in one or two experimental cases within ten years, and in these without beneficial results."

We trust that the loose and indiscriminate practice of recommending persons to procure for themselves any kinds of liquors as medicines will no longer prevail, as it is almost certain to lead to the evils of intoxication, which no class of the community have so full an opportunity of witnessing as the members of the medical profession, whose intimate relations with their patients and their families compel them to witness these evils in all their stages, and who are thereby enabled to wield a powerful influence for good, if by their precept and examples they are faithful to their highest convictions of right.

Another fruitful source of intemperance, for which the medical profession is not altogether responsible, is the use of patent or "proprietary" medicines, almost all of which contain alcohol, and hence are calculated to create an appetite for intoxicants. We ask you to use your influence against these.

The use of alcohol in the "official" preparations is a subject worthy of very serious consideration. We would recommend great care and caution in the continued use of these, especially after the patient has passed from under the immediate care of the physician, as it is very likely to establish the habit of drinking. The great number of fluid-extracts of valuable medicines furnishes a means of avoiding these if a little care is taken in their use. It is to be hoped that we shall be able to dispense with the use of alcohol in medicines by the substitution of harmless vehicles for the remedies required.

In conclusion, we ask your sincere and unbiassed consideration of the suggestions we have presented, our object being to promote the dignity and usefulness of your noble profession, and the good of all mankind.

EDWARD H. MAGILL, Chairman.

HENRY T. CHILD, Clerk.

The above address was approved by the committee on temperance and intoxicating beverages of Philadelphia.

KING EDGAR AND "PIN-DRINKING."

King Edgar seems to have foreshadowed to some extent the programme of the United Kingdom Alliance. Strutt says of him that under the guidance of Dunstan he put down many ale-houses, suffering only one to exist in a village. He also ordered that pegs should be fastened in the drinking horns at intervals, that whosoever drank beyond these marks at one draught should be liable to punishment. We find, however, that this last mentioned device defeated its own end, and became provocative of drinking, so that in 1102 Anselm decreed: "Let no priest go to drinking bouts, nor drink to pegs (ad pinnas)." The custom was called pin-drinking or pin-nicking, and is the origin of the phrase, "He is in a merry pin," and, doubtless, also of the expression, "Taking him down a peg." The peg-tankards, as the were called, contained two quarts, and were divided into eight draughts by means of these pegs; they passed from hand to hand, and each must drink it down one peg, no more, no less, under pain of fine.

The Pope has written a letter to Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota, on the subject of temperance and intemperance in the Catholic Church. It is in the usual super-pious strain of documents issuing from that source; but upon the subject in hand the sentiments are all right. All grades of priests are enjoined to use their best endeavors to promote temperance and discourage intemperance. The action of the Baltimore Council in this behalf is commended, and Bishop Ireland, who is very active in the cause, which he seeks to promote by high license, is esteemed as worthy of all commendation. But notwithstanding all the Pope, and the bishops, and the priests may do or say, Catholics sell whiskey all the same, and constitute a large majority in this business.

The singularity of one thing has frequently occasioned remark, while the bishops in the Lenten manifestos which they issue give specific and minute directions as to what "good Catholics" may eat, or may not eat—granting dispensations here and there—they are allowed to sell and drink all the whiskey they want during the "holy season," and not a word is said about it; and they make the most of this implied indulgence. In this one thing of selling and drinking intoxicating liquors "loyal Catholics" pay little attention to the deliverances of either the Pope or his priests. And yet there are a good many pledged and organized abstainers among them, and have been since the days of Father Mathew, with whom, some years ago, we had a very pleasant interview on the subject. But the fact remains that a majority of our whiskey-sellers are Catholics, while we do not remember ever to have seen a member of a Protestant denomination in the business.—Standard.

suspicion of a drawl in his accent. His face quivered and his nostrils dilated as he made point after point with telling effect, but his body did not stir. After half an hour's introduction, in which he eulogized Henry George and made him out the leading reformer of the century, he turned to his own trouble with the church, and his manner changed. His hands unclasped and shot out from his body toward the audience, as if he were throwing his ideas at the people; he moved from side to side so as to face all of his hearers in turn, and his tone grew deeper and firmer as if he were conscious that he was walking on forbidden ground, and wanted the people to know he did it of his own free will. His tone was courteous and kind, and every time he alluded to the church it was with deep reverence; yet, in spite of this, there was a manner which asserted itself, and a way of action which showed that the step was taken with full knowledge of what he was doing.

"Thus for two hours and a half he talked, appealing, arguing and beseeching, telling of the great good done by the holy church and the great wrong suffered by the working people, and trying to reconcile the duty he owed to one, to the allegiance he had sworn to the other. There was no rhetorical trick in his speech, no attempt to make a point out of sentiment at the expense of reason, and no Ingersollian appeal to selfish nature in order to bolster up his theory or convince his auditors. The speech was not so brilliant as those of Wendall Phillips, nor so cultured as those of George William Curtis, but it did not have a tame passage in it. Cut it in half, quarter it, and then halve the quarters, and every bit was a gem of eloquence and logic, no better and no worse than any other part that could be selected.

"Some are puzzled in regard to the real attitude the doctor has assumed toward Rome. To be sure, he declares himself a Catholic still, but the question is, what kind of a Catholic? He says the teachings of Christ confirm his acts; and that the love of man for God's sake is the essence of religion. The propaganda has condemned him, but then the Propaganda is not the church. If the church should say two and two make five, he would say it was impossible. In the course of his remarks he intimated that while he would say nothing but the truth, he would not give the whole truth. Whether by this statement he inferred that while he called himself a Catholic, he would not now say what kind—Roman or Evangelical—remains to be solved.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. M. T. Lamb, of Utah, spoke in the late Southern Baptist Convention at Louisville. Mr. Lamb is engaged in anti-Mormon efforts—his work being chiefly to undermine the faith of the Mormons in the "Book of Mormon." He said there are altogether 300,000 Mormons, of whom 200,000 are in this country. There are two factions. The Josephites oppose polygamy; the others are polygamists. Many of these are Baptists. Utah is filled with ruined Baptists. From 500 to 1,000 Southern Baptists are ruined by Mormon emissaries every year.

—The statistics of the United Presbyterian church for the past year, which have just been completed, show an increase of membership over the year previous of nearly 4,000. The number now in connection with the church is over ninety-five thousand. The advance in contributions is $10,000.

—Four persons at Earlham College, Indiana, whom the Christian Worker supposes to be students, have signified their willingness to go to foreign fields as missionaries. This action is the result of a visit to the college from J. N. Forman of the Mt. Hermon Missionary Band, a graduate of Princeton College, and a student in the theological course, whose father is a missionary in India where he was born. He conducted three meetings at Earlham, doing a good work and leaving a good impression.

—Drs. Morehead and Carson, of Xenia, recently took part in an interesting farewell service connected with the departure of Rev. Mr. Drees as a missionary to South America. It is related that Dr. Morehead took part in the farewell meeting thirteen years ago, when the same missionary went to Mexico in the same work.

—The statistics of the United Presbyterian church for 1887 are just published. The number of ministers is 736, the same as last year, but the number without a church charge is reduced from 221 to 213. There are 885 congregations, a gain of 4, and 276 are without a pastor. There were 28 houses of worship erected at a cost of $130,000. On profession were received 7,408 members, making a total of 94,641, a gain of 3,500. In the 937 Sabbath-schools are 83, 617 scholars. The total contributions are $977,860 of which $167,010 was to the mission boards.

—The General Synod of the Reformed church in America will meet in Catskill, N. Y. The Synodical sermon will be preached in the evening of the first day by the Rev. John B. Drury, D. D. Rev. Wm. Moordyk of Pella, Iowa, and Rev. P. Lepeltak of Michigan are among the delegates chosen from the synod of Chicago.

—Rev. W. E. C. Smith, of Emmanuel church, Boston, informs the Treasury Department that he proposes to import from England an iron church edifice, and requests to be informed whether it will be entitled to free entry. Assistant Secretary Maynard has written him that there is no law which would authorize the free admission of the article mentioned.

—On May 1 fifty persons united with the Third Presbyterian church of Chicago. In all, 118 members have been added to the church during the four months of Dr. Withrow's pastorate.

—Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost has begun a series of evangelistic meetings in Montpelier, Vt. Two services are being held daily, the attendance is large, and there is good promise of a successful work in that city.

—On the tenth anniversary of the consecration of Trinity church, Boston, the Rev. Phillips Brooks, the rector, announced that its contributions for missionary and charitable objects, exclusive of large sums for the support of the church, had been $365,700.

—The Rev. Dr. R. R. Meredith, of Boston, has accepted a call to the Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, in Brooklyn, of which Dr. Pentecost was lately pastor. Dr. Meredith preached for the first time in his new church on Sunday, May 8, although he will not begin his regular pastoral work there before September.

—Bishop Milton Wright is returning from his home in Dayton to his charge on the Pacific coast. He goes by the Northern Pacific route, and will spend Sunday, May 29th, near Colfax, Washington Territory, and the following Sunday, June 5th, at Garfield. He then goes to Huntsville, where he meets Walla Walla conference, June 16th.

—Thirty-five students of Cornell University have expressed the desire, it is said, to become foreign missionaries, and these, it is also stated, are the first in the history of the university to contemplate the foreign field.

—Extensive preparations are now being made for the great International Sunday-School Convention, which meets in this city on the night of May 31, and continues June 1, 2, 3 and 4. Battery D has been engaged and will have chairs to accommodate 8,000 persons soon in place. Nearly all of the railroads in the United States give reduced fare.

—The work of the American Bible Society the past year has been large and successful. According to the annual report the cash receipts were $493,358, and the expenditures were $554,490. During the year 1,675,897 copies of the Scriptures were printed and purchased. The aggregate circulation in foreign lands was 521,356 copies. In seventy-one years the society has issued 48,324,916 copies, which have been distributed in all parts of the world.

—While the General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterians is meeting in Omaha, that of the Southern church is sitting in St. Louis. In the latter, Friday, overtures were read, sent up by Presbyterians, favoring and opposing organic union, or closer relationship with the Presbyterian church of the United States (the North church). Communications on that subject were also received from the North Church General Assembly. The Moderator of the Northern Church General Assembly conveyed also in a letter the fraternal greeting of that body, and declared the sympathy of that body in the plan for closer fellowship, and desiring to co-operate with the Southern church with regard to unity of work in missions, both foreign and home.

—We chronicle a victory for the cause of evangelical truth in Syria. A marked change in the treatment of American missionaries by the Turkish Government has been witnessed since that government came to see clearly the radical differences between the purposes of those missionaries and those of the Jesuits—the former open and peaceful, the latter secret, scheming and dangerous. This change means much for evangelical work, not only in Syria, but throughout the Turkish Empire. Driven from France, the Jesuits have been actively at work in Syria, and in their own peculiar way, as the subsidized agents of a foreign power. The new phase of matters is illustrated by the fact that while graduates of the medical department of the Protestant college in Syria can, after studying some time in Constantinople, receive another degree there this privilege is not extended to the graduates of the Jesuit college in Beirut, because they announce themselves as Frenchmen and as expecting to enter the service of foreign nations.—Interior.

—Christian work is moving forward in the Hermit Nation. A Bible committee for the translation of the Bible has been formed by the missionaries at Seoul. Several Koreans have been baptized and others are studying the Word. This, at present, is done in a private way because of the existing laws against the introduction of Christianity. The medical and educational work of the Methodist Episcopal Church Mission has received royal recognition of late. The members of this mission, which is now two years old, were the only foreigners at Seoul not connected in one way or other with the government. Dr. W. B. Scranton opened a private hospital nearly a year ago, and so successful has been his work, and acceptable to the Koreans, that the King, when told of it, not only sent his thanks but gave the hospital a name and a sign-board, which is governmental recognition of the work. The school for the education of women, and that for the men, have likewise received similar royal recognition and indorsement. This is a substantial gain because the character of the men as missionaries is well known.—Independent.

LITERATURE.

THE HISTORY OF FRANCE. From the Earliest Times to 1848. By M. Guizot, and M. Guizot de Witt. Translated by Robert Black. Vols. 6, 7, 8. Price per set of eight volumes, half morocco, $6.00. John B. Alden, New York.

These concluding volumes of this great work open with the sad day for Louis XVI. when the States-General convened by his order, like a wild horse with the bit in its teeth, resolved itself in 1789 into the National Assembly from whence to the National Convention, with Danton and Robespierre and Barras, was a brief step, taken with haste, to make way for a long repentance. "The history of the French Revolution is still a field of battle which none can tread without emotion," writes the eloquent and pious Guizot, to whom the savagery of France during this period must be one of the most painful of themes. Allison, Walter Scott, Macauley, Carlyle, Thiers have written of this wonderful period, when every demonic passion of the human breast raged unrestrained but by some fiercer passion or more cruel will. If eloquence or philosophy or sarcasm, brilliant diction or profound analysis could be applied to a national catastrophe, such authors as these have done it. Yet there is a charm and attractiveness about this history of Guizot that is all its own. From the National Convention to the Directory, the Consulate and then those ambitious and gory years of the Empire when Napoleon was France, the story is told, without flinching, of vain-glorious ambition, when the Minotaur of war devoured the choice young men of Europe until Waterloo and St. Helena gave the nations rest. It is not yet time to judge fully of the last Napoleon and his brief dynasty begun in a crime which the pen of Victor Hugo has made forever execrable. So the history stops just before his coup d'etat in 1851. None who purchase this history will rest till they have read it through, for the charm and fascination of its pages never flags to the end. The publisher has issued several editions, one being at the remarkable price of $4.50.

"RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION" is a pamphlet of 83 pages in which the assertions of Cardinal Manning, who claims that Irish Romanists "never have persecuted their Protestant neighbors in the matter of religion;" that they "have been always conspicuous examples of liberty of conscience," and that "the exercise of force" in religious belief, the Church of Rome considers a "crime and heresy," are carefully examined and entirely disproved. The work is by Rev. John Lee, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church at Wyandot, Ill. He has undertaken this work under a sense of its necessity, and after wide and thorough research has shown how false are the claims of Cardinal Manning and other Romanists, who frequently make the same pretense of the immaculate character of their church. This pamphlet deserves a wide circulation at the present time. Price 25 cents. Cranston and Stowe, Chicago.

There are doubtless many boys and girls who will learn more of London, the capital of England, in the June St. Nicholas, than if they should spend a week in that great city. Mr. Stockton tells of some of its wonderful sights very pleasantly. Boys ambitious to be rich in a day will be tempted to try the gambling methods of our great cities. They will read in an account of bankers and brokers some facts that will deter them, if they are honest. "Animal Invaders" is a curious account of the migration of some insects and small animals. But the magazine in its war articles and sketch of West Point life, is not giving our boys a wholesome view of the great evil of war.

Demorest's Monthly is a finely illustrated number, a handsome portrait of Madame Demorest forming one of the attractions. Jenny June's "Across the Continent" sketches have reached Salt Lake and Mormonism. The departments of household and kitchen hints and of the fashions are full, and that of prohibition is among the best.

The Lincoln History in the June Century will review the story of the assault on Senator Sumner, and summarize the history of the Dred Scott decision, and the Judges' opinions in the case, together with the opinions of Lincoln and Douglas. In the July Century the famous "Lincoln and Douglas debates" will be described.

The June American Magazine has among a considerable number of articles, an illustrated article by Ernest Ingersoll on the "Last Remnant of the Frontier," describing the Cœur d'Alene region in Southern Montana, just before it was penetrated by the Northern Pacific. "A Woman's Experience in the War" gives a vivid account of the frequent alarms and occasional Confederate occupation of Chambersburg, Pa., which ended with the burning of that town. In "Mother Ann's Children" Prof. Van Buren Denslow describes the faith and works of the Shakers—their strange doctrines, queer dances and thrifty industries. Several portraits of noted Congressmen adorn the article "Our Nation's Lawmakers." An account of Laura D. Bridgman whose mental acquirements, with no means of learning except by the sense of touch, were among the marvels of the past, is given in "A Blind Deaf Mute."

LODGE NOTES.

The Grand Commandery of Missouri Knights Templar; the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masons, and the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, held their annual sessions lately at St. Louis.

The radical members of the Chicago Knights of Labor are objecting most vigorously against Powderly. The General Master Workman's last order expelled from the Knights Urban Hortung, Master Workman; F. A. Frederick, Worthy Foreman, and F. A. Burke, Judge Advocate, of Local Assembly, No. 9,545, at Columbus, Ohio. The cause of this was because those expelled gave Mrs. Parsons their support when she was arrested in Columbus, and because they are alleged to have collected money for the Chicago anarchists.

The latest session of the Supreme Council of the Catholic Knights of America in Chicago, was largely taken up with monotonous debate upon the pages of proposed amendments to constitution or by-laws. W. C. Smith, of Louisville, moved the adoption of a resolution, the aim of which was to petition the Governor of Virginia to release J. L. Heckman from that State's penitentiary. J. L. Heckman, who at Grafton, W. Va., acted as the Supreme Treasurer of the society, disappeared some four years ago, and together with him some $23,000 of the funds of the order. For two years past he has languished in prison. The resolution was voted down.

The Pope, having examined Cardinal Manning's justification of Cardinal Gibbons's memorial for the recognition of the Knights of Labor by the church, has instructed Cardinal Simeoni to confer with those cardinals and settle the question in accordance with the views of the Vatican. So says a dispatch of May 18.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTY TESTIMONIES

against the Secret Empire by ministers, statesmen, educators, journalists and others, on good paper, and illustrated with the portraits of the following eminent reformers, John G. Fee, Charles G. Finney, Geo. F. Pentecost, Adam Crooks, Nathan Brown, Philo Carpenter, Thurlow Weed and Wm. Wirt. Would you like these for reference? Would you like to get them for the public library? Have them framed and hung up where the young men may see what the good and great of our country have to say upon the despotic oppression and false religion of the lodge.

Any one who will write a postal card, saying, "PUT ME DOWN AS ONE OF THE CYNOSURE AGENTS FOR 1887. I will try to enlarge the Cynosure subscription list in my field during the coming year," shall receive the Testimonies by return mail.

Let old and new agents write at once, and any suggestions as to how you can be helped in your particular field will be carefully considered.

The few fine cabinet photographs of Prest. J. Blanchard which we had, having been disposed of so quickly, arrangements have now been made by which all can be supplied at this office who wish them. Price postpaid 25 cents each.

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1828, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The declaration of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed, and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument erected by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, in honor of the Character of Freemasonry by Blanchard, on the "Freedom and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.
(Editor of N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that show life melted away from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown in their true robes, and the glorious truth which they have been surrounded by the puritan literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

HOME AND HEALTH.

POOR TIRED MOTHER.

They were talking of the glory of the land beyond the skies,
Of the light and of the gladness to be found in paradise,
Of the flowers ever blooming, of the never-ceasing songs,
Of the wand'ring through the golden streets of happy white-robed throngs;
And said father, leaning cozily back in his easy chair
(Father always was a master-hand for comfort everywhere):
"What a joyful thing 't would be to know that when this life is o'er
One would straightway hear a welcome from the blessed shining shore!"
And Isabel, our eldest girl, glanced upward from the reed
She was painting on a water jug, and murmured, "Yes, indeed."
And Marian, the next in age, a moment dropped her book,
And "Yes, indeed!" repeated, with a most ecstatic look.
But mother, gray-haired mother, who had come to sweep the room,
With a patient smile on her thin face, leaned lightly on her broom—
Poor mother! no one ever thought how much she had to do—
And said, "I hope it is not wrong not to agree with you,
But seems to me that when I die, before I join the blest,
I'd like just for a little while to lie in my grave and rest."
—Margaret Fytinge in Harper's Magazine.

RAW MEAT.—Do not place raw meat directly on ice; for the juices are apt to be withdrawn. It should never be left in the wrapping paper. Put in an uncovered dish and then set on the ice.

CARE OF OILCLOTH.—Never scrub oilcloths with a brush, and never use soap in cleaning them. Those which have lain in stock for several years are the best to buy, as the paint is thoroughly hardened. Wash with a soft rag dipped in mixed milk and water, and rub dry with a handful of rags.

TO CLEAN PAPERED WALLS.—The very best method is to sweep off lightly all the dust that has collected, then to rub the paper with stale bread, cut the crust off thick, and wipe straight down from the top, then begin at the top again, and so on. Care should be taken that the parts rubbed should meet, or the wall will have a striped appearance.

To clean silver, first wash to remove all the grease from the silver, then rub with a woollen cloth wet with ammonia and whiting, and polish on the chased and filigree parts with a tooth brush. It is nice to clean glass windows and all kinds of glass ware.

To clean old lamp-burners, wash and boil them in ashes and water, then rub with them with oxalic acid, then dry and polish with fine coal ashes, and they will be clean and bright. Wash the wicks and dry. Many times the burners are condemned when only the wicks are at fault.

The walls of a sick-room should be finished in plain, subdued color. Instead of papered in fancy patterns, as patients are liable to be rendered irritable and sleepless by prolonged mental perturbation induced by vain efforts to trace problems or in counting combinations. A case of temporary insanity is reported as occasioned by a morbid disposition to solve the possible combinations into squares of certain figures on the wall-paper of a patient's room, as his mutterings implied, which ceased at once when he was removed to a room with plain walls.

The New York State Board of Health has prepared a report on the pathogenic powers of contaminated ice, in which it is stated that ice formed in impure water may contain from eight to ten per cent of the organic matter dissolved in the water, and in addition a very large amount of the organic in it. It may also contain living animals and plants, ranging in size from visible worms down to the minutest spores, and the vitality of these organisms may be unaffected by freezing. Such ice is unfit for use in drinking water, for it may cause serious illness.

SOME USES OF AN EGG.—For burns and scalds nothing is more soothing than the white of an egg, which may be poured over the wound. It is softer as a varnish than collodion, and, being always at hand, can be easily applied. It is more cooling than sweet oil and cotton, which was formerly supposed to be the surest application to allay the smarting pain. The egg is considered to be one of the best of remedies for dysentery. Beaten up slightly, with or without sugar, and swallowed at a gulp, it tends, by its emollient qualities, to lessen the inflammation of stomach and intestines, and by forming a transient coating on these organs, so enable nature to resume her healthful sway over a diseased body. Two, or at most three eggs per day would be all that is required in ordinary cases; and, since egg is not merely medicine, but food as well, the lighter the diet otherwise and the quieter the patient is kept the more rapid and certain is the recovery.

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes to this end in a most effective way. His voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are hurried up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. It is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our workmen, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"Even his failings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the real help of a happy life, and encourages us to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, and such, if needed, will make our lives better, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any of its readers. It is a book of common sense, plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incidents. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

THE QUERY OF THE LODGEVILLE CHURCH.

BY JENNIE L. HARDIE.

This simple and touching story which was lately published in the Cynosure is now ready for orders in a beautiful pamphlet. It is worth reading by every Anti-mason—and especially by his wife. Get it and take it home to cheer the heart of your companion who may desire to do something for Christ against great evils, but is discouraged from making any public effort. PRICE, FIFTEEN CENTS. Ten for a dollar

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR
GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a beautiful and interesting account of Morgan in the Onondaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attests his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the the most unscrupulous and dishonest of men, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is most worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

The Coming Conflict

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was reached. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation, a classic character, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, fanatic though he be."—Norfolk Tidings.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrecy, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of science, as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folk will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ills.)

FARM NOTES.

HOW HORSES ARE POILED.

When we have succeeded in inspiring the horse with entire confidence in himself and in his master also, there is but little likelihood, unless he is very nervous or a very perverse horse, that he will become troublesome through any vicious act, or want of honesty. "Balking," that one vice that pretty nearly takes all the value out of some horses, is undoubtedly always, or very nearly always, chargeable to indiscreet management on the part of those who have had the breaking—training—and after management at work. Thus, if a horse is overloaded while yet young, stops to rest without being told to do so, and finding the rest agreeable, and the starting—being weary—disagreeable, it is not to be wondered at that he forms the habit of stopping, and thenceforth becomes a "balker." If, when this first inclination to stop and hesitate is observed the temptation be taken away by getting into an easier piece of road, lightening the load, or giving the horse rest, and feed if needed, afterward avoiding a similar occasion for stopping, the danger of having a confirmed balky horse may be averted. But when under these circumstances the horse is hit with the whip, sharply reprimanded, then look out for a retaliatory effort. The horse assumes that you are his enemy, and from that moment he places himself in an antagonistic position, looking upon his master as an enemy.

The question is often asked whether a confirmed balker can be cured. This admits of a double answer—yes and no. If the horse is in good hands, managed by some person who has firmness and judgment, he can sometimes be cured by driving a stake and hitching him at the spot where he stops, until he is glad to move along to where his rations are. Horses have been cured by, as the saying is, "taking them at their word," and if they want to back, then keep them backing, giving the animal to understand that that is just what you want him to do. You can, in half-an-hour to an hour, convince him that backing is a very much harder motion than going forward.—National Live Stock Journal.

FEED HORSES SLOWLY.—Old horses often get in the habit of swallowing their food too fast. This is from a painful realization of the danger of not getting a square meal if they delay. None the less the habit is a bad one, and should be corrected. A few clean cobble-stones mixed with the oats in their box and left there will cause them to pick the feed over slowly and masticate it more thoroughly. Cut feed is less likely to be eaten rapidly than whole grain, and dry meal than that which has been wet.

Extract from a small boy's first composition on "The Horse." "The horse is an animal with long legs and a long, bushy tail which is sometimes made into beds and are very sprightly."

CULTIVATION IN ACCORDANCE WITH NATURE.

Nature does not store prepared nutriment, however copious her supplies may be in the raw, for plants live, as we do, by "daily bread"—each summer supplying a certain limited share of food rendered available by a culinary process or ferment in the open moist soil, which prepared food all plants are welcome to as fast as they can absorb it—the most vigorous of any present getting the lion's share and crowding the weaker out. In our culture it is often the weaker ones that we want to have succeed, counting the freer feeders and growers but weeds. And here comes in the test of our ability as cultivators, first in selecting the most profitable individual sort, and next, in strictly preventing any growth of competitive plants, every leaf and root of which are built out of the limited annual supply of available nutriment, so far as soil supply is concerned, at the expense of the plants of which we undertake the care.

Only those who promptly and entirely suppress every plant not wanted, and from the first opening of growth to its completion, are worthy to take hold as co-operators with nature in the culture of the earth.—Vick's Magazine for April.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution, a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. O. Doushburg, Past Master, Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Lecture on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written at the request of the National Christian Association of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and a full introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, in cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan, the genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, degrees, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry and the Bible. This is a new and timely work. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister of Satan will and in this work a rich feast for arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents and others, and a full account of the case of Mortimer Leggett. 2 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grand Army of the Republic," are all bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Preaching Elder of Dakota District North-western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second issue. Master Mason. Published at the request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the rights of the Machinists and Blacksmiths of the Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, containing the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of St. John. A book of 341 pages, in cloth, $1.00; $1.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Ind., for refusing to support a reverend Free-mason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucin C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Mah-Hab-Bone; or, Freemasonry at a Glance. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the works and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp., $1.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trade-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Infringe. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

National Christian Association.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. 33 Degrees. "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan. "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan." "Valiance of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan." "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan." "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 504 pages, $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Free-masonry minister, vividly portraying the work of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are controlled and ruled by the hands of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the mass of the story may be to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Brown. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.00 each; per dozen, $10.00. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 70 cents each; per dozen, $7.00.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that the bench and the clergy, the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civilization, to Christianity and to the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The Un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is shown in the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship identical. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 430 pp., $1.50 each; per dozen, $15.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness. Adverses Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Lebbeus Armstrong, a Free-mason, and a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemed. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowships, by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church. Paper covers, price 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

When the United States Supreme court assembled at noon Monday last, the Chief Justice announced the death of Mr. Justice Woods, whose chair was draped in black, and said that as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the court would adjourn until Monday next, when motions would be heard and a later date fixed for the court's final adjournment. Most of the justices will go to Ohio to attend Justice Woods' funeral.

Friends of Attorney General Garland are very confident that he will be appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to succeed Judge Woods.

There is a rumor that the United States Supreme court has reached a decision in the Bell Telephone case, and that it would have been handed down to-day but for the death of Justice Woods, in whose memory there will be an adjournment without the transaction of business. According to the same report the decision will be technically in favor of the Bell company, but that it will define and limit the rights of the company under its patents.

LEGISLATIVE.

The big distillery at Des Moines, Iowa, was served with notice Wednesday that under the ruling of the Supreme court it must close up. About thirty-seven thousand five hundred gallons of beer in vats were seized at Matthe's brewery yesterday afternoon, and will be destroyed.

The Streeter tobacco bill, which prohibits the selling of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, etc., to minors, has passed the Illinois Senate, and is now on order of second reading in the House.

Recently at Des Moines, Iowa, Constable Pierce, refused to surrender seized liquors to the United States Marshal, and was arrested for contempt of the Federal court. Tuesday Judge Love rendered a decision in favor of the constable.

The report of the legislative committee to investigate the charges against Mrs. Orr, Superintendent of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Normal, is a complete vindication of that lady.

A quarrel occurred in the Illinois Senate Chamber Wednesday morning, between Senators Crawford and Gibbs, who first questioned each others veracity, and then came to blows, but were speedily separated. The trouble arose over the report on the Roche-Winston drainage bill.

COUNTRY.

The grand jury sitting at Portsmouth, Ohio, investigated the killing of Dr. Northrup at Haverhill by the McCoys of that place, and returned an indictment May 9 against all four of the McCoys for murder in the first degree. The evidence brought out before the grand jury showed that the shooting grew out of a prosecution of the McCoys for selling liquor.

Extensive rains on Sunday through Illinois, Wisconsin and the whole Northwest, caused general joy and thanksgiving. Many years have passed since so dry a spring has been known. No rain to speak of has fallen in some parts for over two months.

Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, the well-known Brooklyn preacher, took quinine the other day by mistake, and had it not been for the prompt assistance of several physicians the result might have been serious.

The will of Washington C. De Pauw was probated Thursday at New Albany, Ind. It bequeathed $5,000,000 to his family, and the residue of his estate, estimated at $5,000,000, is devoted to benevolent, educational, and religious purposes, including a bequest of $500,000 to De Pauw University.

A vein of coal 7 feet 9 inches was struck near Taylorsville, Ill., on Thursday, at a depth of 438 feet.

Annie Boyd, wife of a man who, while drunk, committed murder, and is now serving a life sentence in the Michigan Penitentiary, secured a verdict for $9,500 damages Thursday against the Rockford, Mich., saloonist who sold her husband the liquor.

The last stone of the Philadelphia public buildings began thirteen years ago was laid last Saturday. The stone occupies a position on the tower 337 feet and 6 inches above the level of the street. The tower still requires 200 feet of iron work to complete it.

In a sermon Monday at New York, Archbishop Corrigan declared the Catholic church opposed the fallacy that ownership in land was unjust, and stated that every man had a right to acquire, by honest means, as much property as he could.

Forest fires are burning in various portions of Worcester county, Massachusetts, and threaten the village of Still River with destruction.

In a church at Parkridge, N. J., Sunday night one of the auditors attacked an evangelist named Mason for calling him the prince of devils. The preacher was also roughly handled by others of the assemblage and was released on the promise that he would leave town.

Walter W. Vrooman, socialist and editor of the Labor Organizer, of Kansas City, Mo., was arrested while speaking in the Diamond in Allegheny City. Vrooman said "the American flag was a pole with a rag to it." This aroused the ire of the crowd, and they became so violent in their denunciations of the speaker that Mayor Pearson ordered his arrest, fearing that he would be injured. A charge of disorderly conduct was made against him.

A mob of negro and Hungarian strikers attacked coke-workers Friday at Jimtown and Dawson, Pa., using clubs and pistols. A number of persons were wounded and a large amount of property destroyed.

Recently a gang of robbers invaded the premises of Farmer Wagner, near Tionesta, N. Y. A desperate fight followed, one of the burglars being killed on the spot; another being found dead a few days later. Three others of the party have been arrested.

A tannery, soap-works, and a number of dwellings at Bridgeport, Conn., were destroyed by fire Friday afternoon. An old and valued leather-splitting machine, used by General Grant at Galena, was ruined by the flames, which caused a loss of $100,000.

Charles B. Reynolds was found guilty of blasphemy at Morristown, N. J., Friday, and fined $25. He was defended by Robert G. Ingersoll.

The business portion of Lake Linden, Mich., was destroyed by fire, Friday afternoon, burning brands from the surrounding woods causing the conflagration. Over 200 buildings were burned. The only business buildings left are one saloon and one small store. The loss is fully $2,000,000, with insurance $735,000, in English and Eastern companies principally. Lake Linden was a town of about 5,000 people, many of whom will be without shelter to-night.

Forest fires threaten Crystal Falls, Whitney and Nestor with destruction. The fires are worse than ever before. A special from Marquette, Mich., of May 18, said: "Forest fires are starting again on the peninsula and are raging fiercely southwest of this city, south of Autrain, east of Los Anse, and southwest of Baraga. In the vicinity of Negaunee and Ishpeming they are very severe, and are now burning large tracts of valuable hardwood timber south. All employees of the Champion Mine turned out to fight the fire and save the mine and cordwood. All along the highlands of Portage Lake, between the canal and west of Hancock, fires are doing heavy damage. The location of the Hancock Mine is in imminent danger, and a large force is fighting hard. Near the Quincy, Franklin, and Pewabic mines thousands of cords of wood are burned. The wind is strong and the forests are dry. Nothing but speedy and copious rains can save the peninsula from a conflagration."

FOREIGN.

It is reported that the Bulgarian regents are meditating the proclamation of King Charles, of Roumania, as Prince of Bulgaria, thus virtually making the Danubian Balkan provinces one kingdom, Roumania having, it is said, consented to the scheme. The policy is attributed to the initiative of England, and is said to have the approval of Germany.

General Boulanger's plan for the mobilization of the French army causes uneasiness at Berlin. If France mobilizes Germany will mobilize also.

The Budget Committee of the French Chamber of Deputies approved Pelletan's report, which demands a reduction of from 2 to 3 per cent in the expenditures of all branches of the government. On the adoption of the report the cabinet of Premier Goblet resigned. De Freycinet attempted to form a cabinet but was not successful.

The miners in that part of the province of Hainault, including the surrounding city of Mons, Belgium, are generally joining in a strike. Troops will be kept in the garrisons ready for an emergency. A number of detachments of troops occupy the mining districts. The Cri du Peuple, organ of the socialists, announces that 10,000 men are already on a strike, and the number is being added to hourly. An unsuccessful attempt has been made to destroy with dynamite the bridge over the river Haine, near Binche, in Hainault.

OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 50c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is a warning to those who are trusting in their own righteousness, and a blessing to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffelfinger. Paper covers, 10c. This book goes to the very heart of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of hell which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It is a warning to those who are trusting in their own righteousness, and a blessing to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which, he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

A dispatch from Saratoga says that the two Good Templar bodies meeting there and figuring on a union have resolved in favor of prohibition! We read with amazement—"In favor of prohibition." Next we shall hear that the brewers and distillers are in favor of the saloon, or that the churches are in favor of religion. But, after all, we are glad to hear of it, and so will be the W. C. T. U. Nevertheless the announcement casts a suspicion upon the former position of this secret order toward the temperance cause.

George W. Cable, the talented New Orleans author, has lived in comparative retirement since his removal to Northampton, Massachusetts, some two years ago. Previously, his powerful magazine articles on the social conditions at the South had proved of national importance, and there were many evidences that his views of the social ostracism of the black race were approved by multitudes of the most candid people in the South. But he finds that there is yet a relic of savagery, and supposed injuries are never forgotten. He was engaged to lecture in Columbia, South Carolina, this week, but the citizens object to hearing from a son of the South who can accept Lee's surrender in earnest, and he has notice not to visit the city. Columbia needs a hotter fire than Sherman's conflagration—coals heaped on the head to burn, as the old darkey said, "de debbill out of um."

A decision of the Supreme Court in Washington last week puts several hundred thousand persons at the mercy of a drive-well monopoly. The case came up from Indiana where there are fifty thousand such wells on which a $10 royalty was demanded. Judge Nelson of that State decided against the monopoly, believing that the public had acquired rights during the four years the well was in use before a patent was applied for. The Supreme Court reverses this decision, and it is an unhappy defect in our patent laws that allows the successful parties the power to impose an aggregate penalty of an immense sum upon the farmers, who are the innocent patrons of this invention and have probably paid well for all the advantages they have from it.

So much ado was made over the Crosby high license bill in New York a few weeks ago, which passed the legislature but was vetoed by Governor Hill, that some interest will be taken in the new measure just passed under the name of the Vedder bill. The Governor's great objection to the first bill was its limitation to cities of 400,000 inhabitants, that is, to New York and Brooklyn only. The new bill makes a sliding scale of the license from $30 for all liquors and $10 for beer or wine, to $400 and $100, respectively, in the two cities named. Yet Governor Hill is said not to be pleased and will give saloons the gracious benefit of another veto. A son of Dr. Crosby makes the best of an illogical and unhappy case in a defense of the first bill in the North American Review in which he confesses that the liquor dealers are the most strenuous and inconsistent opposers of high license. This opposition, he adds, shows an "inexcusable ignorance of the forces which are marshaling against them. Public opinion is undergoing a wonderful change." It is this change of public opinion which gives effect to the figures which set off the benefits of high license. Instead of cutting down the saloon list, it would grow, high license or no license, were it not for the rising up this public condemnation which shall soon send back the dark traffic to its native hell.

Geneva College, over which the powerful defender of our anti-lodge faith, Pres. H. H. George, bears genial sway has just passed through a trying experience, proving once more the rule to have very rare exceptions, that in college difficulties students may rely upon it that their faculty of instructors are right, and their own case will prove to be in the wrong. In December last the college building was broken into at night, the boilers tampered with, seats daubed with white lead and oil, and general vandalism perpetrated. Four seniors were suspended for the villainy, but the young men were popular and wealthy, and friends flocked to them when they claimed to be innocent, and demanded a more positive proof of their guilt than the faculty were able to show. The father of one of them was a trustee of the college and donor to the amount of $35,000. He came on from New York, and from the result of his own investigation decided against the faculty and for the innocence of his son. The exigency became so great that the former decided to engage detectives, who in a few days produced such conclusive evidence of the guilt of the students that their case utterly broke down. They were overwhelmed with shame. The trustee was reconciled, the faculty vindicated and peace restored. Much vexation and bitterness might have been spared had the rule above indicated been remembered. It is an unpalatable, but a very wholesome lesson for young men and woman just free from the dear restraints of home life and intoxicated with high spirits and a show of independence, to learn that there are times when they are pretty sure to be on the wrong side; and it must be regretted that the lesson has often to be learned at a great expense of faith in human kind.

Some of the Good Templars of the vicinity of Haverhill, Ohio, are attempting to make out that Dr. Northrup, lately murdered by saloon keepers, was not killed because of his hostility to the liquor traffic. They may be correct, but from the mass of evidence to the contrary, it may be that the victim was outside the Good Templar ring and so cannot have its endorsement or sympathy. At least the saloon must bear its share since the grog-seller murderers are of the liquor brotherhood. An editorial in the New York Tribune ably argues that the whole business is responsible for these murders, thus: "Nor is it so certain that the holding to account for such crimes of the liquor interest generally is so unfair as may seem at the first glance. For it must be considered that this traffic is one which naturally and necessarily attracts and enlists the lowest elements of the community. The saloon in politics has made the country acquainted with those elements in the most startling way. It has put over the heads of the best citizens the vilest, most ignorant, brutal and venal. It has disfranchised intellect and virtue often, and given the control of government to vice and stupidity. It has systematized plunder and corruption, and lifted demagogues and knaves into power at the expense and sacrifice of the public interests. In many cities it has so fortified the criminal classes that they have been enabled for years to defy all efforts after reform; and in more than one instance it has been necessary to have recourse to violent methods to dislodge them. It is, therefore, no exaggeration to say that the employment of the worst instrumentalities, in the worst ways, belongs naturally to the prosecution of the combat in which the rum power is now engaged. And the further its representatives are from the centers of civilization, the remoter their location in the country regions, the more apt will they be to revert to the rowdism and ruffianism of their lowest type, as in the Haddock and Northrup cases."

POLITICAL UNREST IN GREAT BRITAIN.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The political atmosphere of this country is far from clear at present. Irish questions continue to block the way of all useful legislation. There are many urgent matters which are essential to the welfare of the people pressing for attention, but the demands of Ireland stand as an obstacle to progress. The Crimes Bill brought in by the government does not meet the wishes of the Irish people, nor does it satisfy the desires of vast numbers of the people of this country. So long as we have class legislation it is state of things will continue. More concern for the national welfare and less for success of party schemes is highly desirable. My own conviction is that the only right way of dealing with Ireland or any other country is to pass wise and righteous laws, and towards those who will not comply therewith, use compulsion. In the presence of great national questions all sectional differences ought to sink.

Of late years beneficent and remedial measures have been passed time after time, but Ireland is so honeycombed with secret societies, which are always plotting against law and order, that even the most generous legislation is rendered unpalatable and abortive. The Crimes Bill brought in by the government is termed by the opposition a Coercion bill, and is now in committee for the consideration of its separate provisions. The state of social order is still very unsatisfactory, and according to the views of some people things are getting worse instead of better.

The government bill seems to me to deal more with the symptoms of the disease than the causes thereof. The government thinks or pretends to think that their Land Purchase Bill, which will be settled immediately on the passing of the Crimes Bill, will cure the disease; but if so, why not apply it first? The greatest objection to the bill appears to be in the fact that it empowers the Lord Lieutenant and the Castle authorities to repress any organization which they may think detrimental to the state. Whether this is aimed purely at secret political societies I cannot say, but it looks in that direction. Many people think that it is its main purpose, and if so, and its provisions are good, every law-loving man should endeavor to sustain its authority. A few nights ago Mr. Parnell and his colleagues were charged in the House of Commons with fraternizing with known law-breakers and murderers. Facts are difficult things to get over, and Mr. Parnell and his friends did not vault over the accusation gracefully.

MORAL HEROES.—III.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS

won for himself a reputation wide as the domain of Christendom, and justly deserved. When there shall arise one who can do justice to the thundering plunge of the awful Niagara, then there will be a man or woman that can properly illustrate the powers of Frederick Douglass. While as yet those powers, that in after days shook the nation, slumbered, he entered my church in western New York soon after the service had commenced, a stranger to all, bearing a countenance that would attract attention any where; with a skin a little less bleached than that worn by some of us and a physique of faultless symmetry. I descended the pulpit and invited him into the vestibule, where he informed me that he was recently out of slavery, and would be glad to speak to the people there present, as he had an appointment at Le Roy in the afternoon.

I said, "Are you a Christian?"
"I think so."
"Do you think you can interest the audience?"
"You will have to try me."

It was a big venture, for we were in the midst of a revival. Nevertheless I said, "Follow me into the pulpit."

Never shall I regret that venture. Ere he had spoken ten minutes, the sluice way to the eyes of the people was opened, and never did magnetism fasten its victim in closer bonds than did young Douglass bind the audience to himself. What of money there was in the house was transferred to his pockets. He went his way, and I forgot his name. In after days when we met I used to ask him if he remembered the young minister who asked him into the vestibule to see if he knew enough to interest an audience.

The ordinary laws of heredity were certainly set aside in the birth of Mr. Douglass. It was nearer the fabled bound of Minerva from the head of Jupiter than any other birth of our day. Though Mr. Douglass insists that his mother was a woman of extraordinary talent, it is faint praise to say that she gave to the world a son of unsurpassed genius.

In those heart-rending appeals for his enslaved people, pity and love were the fuel of those volcanic fires that burned in his great nature. With the high and the low he was equally at home, and both are alike swayed by his seraphic eloquence. In vain I attempt to describe this wonderful man. Frederick Douglass can be known only by seeing and hearing him. He now resides in Washington, D. C., but most of his life has been spent in Rochester, N. Y.

His photograph lies before me. The eyes that flamed with indignation over the wrongs of the bondmen and his own as well, retained the same steady, searching gaze as when we stood together at the "rescue of Jerry" in Syracuse, and talked of John Brown in Rochester. He is now as intent on the elevation of the freed people as he was for emancipation, and few there are who wrought more effectually for these ends.

HON. JAMES G. BIRNEY

was justly esteemed the worthy standard bearer of our embattled hosts. A man of statesman-like views and comprehensive ideas of civil government, of large reflective faculties, of unblemished integrity and every inch a true philanthropist. At the death of his father he purchased all the slaves that were inherited by the other heirs, and gave them their freedom. He then removed to the North where he hoped to have freedom to labor for universal emancipation. His personal experience, his extensive knowledge of the slave system, rendered him a terrible foe to its defenders; as Judge Platt of this city disastrously learned in a debate to which he challenged Mr. Birney. He soon became so widely and so well known that in 1840, and then in 1844, he received the first anti-slavery nomination for President of the United States. So fearful of Mr. Birney's influence at the coming election were the Whigs that the day before the election came off (thus giving no time for contradiction) they perpetrated the first roorback, known as the "Garland forgery," ever imposed upon the people of this country, viz, that, "Mr. Birney has refused his nomination and joined the Democrats." The outrage was such an unheard of thing as to carry the uninitiated over to the support of Henry Clay, but not enough to save him from defeat. That was the heaven-appointed opportunity for testing the loyalty of the nation to liberty and to God. But, like the Jews of old, they knew it not; and as the Jews chose a murderer in the place of the world's great Emancipator, so the nation rejected God's anointed Birney, for the chief defender of slavery. As the madness of the Hebrews came back upon their own head, so was it with this nation.

In pursuance of his mission North, Mr. Birney established an anti-slavery paper in Cincinnati, hoping to awaken the people of the Free States to a sense of the danger of oppression. But they threw his press into the river and mobbed him. Then he sought to reach the people through public assemblies. Though Mr. Birney lived for several years in Michigan, he spent the last years of his life in the State of New York. And his ashes repose among the heights that restrain the waters of the Genesee river, not far from the village of Genesee.

Detroit.

HOLINESS AND SECTARIANISM.

BY J. LEE GAMBLE.

Sectarianism is unfavorable, if not utterly opposed, to the possession and perfecting of real Bible holiness.

1. All sectism is positively condemned and forbidden in 1 Cor. 1: 9-13 and 3: 1-5.

2. It is utterly impossible for the Saviour's prayer in John 17, 11, 22 to be fulfilled as long as the present sect system continues.

3. Sectarianism puts the believer in closer fellowship with a part than with the whole; he is not in full fellowship with all the believers.

4. All Christians in any one place should be joined together as described in Acts 1:14; 2:1, 42. Heartily believing this I cannot perpetuate division by joining one sect and thus putting myself in closer fellowship with a part than with the whole. I must take no other name than that which distinguishes me as simply a follower of Jesus and in full fellowship with all others who follow him. How it must grieve the Lord Jesus to see in a small village three or four or more sects, professing his name, and separated from each other by rules and bars which they have put up, and all together scarcely able to keep up one society or support one minister. The Lord help his people to see quickly how sad and inconsistent and unscriptural is this state of the Church of Christ.

5. Sectism is idolatrous, leading to the exaltation of the creature and the "ism" above the Lord. Long before I saw the sin of sectarianism, when in all the large anniversaries of one of the largest and most popular sects of Christendom I heard so much about what their "ism" required, and so little about what Jesus and His honor demanded, I felt that the "ism" was usurping the place Christ only should fill, and that idolatry was certainly creeping in unawares among us. So far as I am concerned I love and revere the names of Luther and Calvin and Knox and Wesley and many others, as men of God, but see clearly the sin of joining with a part of the body in a closer and more intimate communion around any human name, however great and good, than that which I recognize in the universal "communion of saints" around the name of Jesus alone. Multitudes seem willing to fight for "their church" who appear to know little about personal communion with a personal Saviour; their church (?) is their idol.

6. Sects are founded on human definitions of doctrines, and thus real Christians are separated and estranged; for as soon as they begin to define they also begin to differ and diverge. This is not the will of the Lord.

7. Until the Lord comes again there will be differences of opinion among Christians as to Scripture teaching and interpretation, but these should not be tests of membership in the church of Christ. The New Testament gives but one test, viz.: The belief that Jesus, the Son of God, died and rose again for our sins. Rom. 10:9; 1 John 4:15, etc. With these and kindred Scripture before us how can we set up, as a test of membership in the church of Jesus Christ, views of baptism, ordinances, church polity, etc.?

It is very desirable that all the members of Christ's body should see alike on all subjects; and to this end teachers who are taught of God should seek constantly to open up the Word to their fellow disciples, who should have the humble heart and teachable mind and be ready, like the Bereans, to search the Scriptures for themselves, to see whether the things preached are really so.

8. But this full teaching of the whole Word of God is impossible under the present sect system. There are many important doctrines which many believers see plainly taught in the Word which they would be prohibited from preaching to certain other collections of Christians. And then the influence of sectism upon the best minds is such as to make it well nigh impossible for them to receive certain truths without prejudice; they will measure everything they hear by their sectarian standards.

A minister who was proposing to preach to his congregation on the Bible doctrines of Divine healing, and the personal return of the Lord Jesus to earth was told by some of his most intelligent members, "These things are not according to our church standards, and we don't want anything preached which is not approved by our church." When the reply was made that these doctrines were taught in the Bible, he was given to understand that they could not be preached there as long as the church authorities did not endorse them.

The Lord have mercy on such people; and yet such is the legitimate fruit of sectism. Even where the whole truth is permitted to be preached, sectarian prejudices shut it out entirely from the heart, or allow it but a reluctant or partial reception; and its influence upon the heart and life is weakened or destroyed.

9. Real Bible holiness objects to all man-made rules—as the Bible needs no "fixing up"—and to all human ordinances as necessary to the exercise of any of the gifts and graces of the Spirit.

For these and other reasons I am prepared to stand by the declaration that all sectarianism is unfavorable if not utterly opposed to the possession and perfecting of real Bible holiness. 2 Cor. 7:1; Eph. 4:1-16; Acts 2:41-47.

SECRET SOCIETIES AND CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD IN THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONGRESS, CHICAGO, MARCH 30TH AND 31ST, 1887.

The object of this paper is, to ascertain what "the Secret Lodge System" is, whence it come from, and where it belongs—in short to find and state the place of secret societies in the "Intellectual System of the Universe."

There is a book having this lofty title, which was first issued in 1678, and it has been reissued in England and the United States for one hundred and fifty-nine years—the last edition being that of Gould & Newman, Andover, 1837; published with the approval of the old Andover Faculty, Drs. Woods, Stuart, Emerson and Skinner.

The book justifies its imposing title: "The true Intellectual System of the Universe." The ablest writers of its time called it "The noblest performance of the age;" and, fifty years later, Cromwell's Domestic Chaplain, John Howe, whom Robert Hall called "A lumbering wagon loaded with gold," designates the author of this wonderful book as "The inimitable Ralph Cudworth." Ministers and scholars well know Cudworth, but I speak for students and the young, and because we have the source of secret societies in this book.

Paul the Hebrew, was "debtor to the Greeks," but born a Roman. He knew all of the Old Testament, and wrote much of the New. He at one time met Greek philosophers in "Mars' Hill," and he had converts at Rome in "Caesar's household." Paul's mind governed Cudworth's, who, with marvellous learning and judgment, has taken his conception of the Intellectual System of the Universe from "Hebrew, Greek and Latin" sources—the three languages written over Christ's head as he hung on the cross. And this stream of intelligence, running from Palestine through Greece to Rome and England, along the southern belt of Europe, in which most of the thinking has been done and books made for mankind, found Cudworth in an English University, where he was thirty years a professor; and furnished him that Intellectual System which he has given us in his book. And as horses are worshiped in Japan, monkeys in Hindoostan, and snakes in Africa, we do not yet go to those continents for philosophy or religion. We have in Cudworth sound learning and religion if we have any on the globe. We therefore quote him at length:

I. He says: "No intelligent Pagan (and he quotes most of them) asserted a multitude of eternal, unmade, independent deities. All universally disclaimed it, and professed to acknowledge one Supreme God." I. 236.

II. "Magicians were devil worshippers, who honored evil deities in order to the gratification of their revenge, lust and ambition;" and others, beside Pagans, worshipped devils."

III. "The Pagans' religion was corrupted and depraved by four things: (1) The superstition of the ignorant. (2) Licentious fictions of poets and fable-mongers. (3) The craft of priests and politicians; and (4) The imposture of evil demons or devils. By means of these four things the Pagan religion became a most foul and corrupt thing."

IV. "In due time God sent the promised Messiah; the Eternal Word, or God-man, invested with all power, as his visible Image, and the King, Mediator and Intercessor between God and men."

V. "This religion of one God and one Mediator did effectually destroy all the Pagan, inferior deities, middle-gods, and mediators."

VI. "Introducing inferior, self-projected worships into Christianity, therefore, seems to be the paganism that which was intended for the unpagingizing of the world." I. 322.

VII. "There is a perpetual war betwixt two polities—or kingdoms—in the world; the one of light, the other of darkness.

And our Saviour, Christ, or the Messiah, is appointed head or chieftain over the heavenly militia, or the forces of the kingdom of light." And, "There will be at length a palpable and signal overthrow of the Satanical power and whole kingdom of darkness, managed by our Saviour Christ, as God's Vicegerent and visible Judge both of quick and dead."

Omitting Cudworth's learned and thorough confutation of the atheists, this is a brief outline of all the world knows of unseen, rational beings; an outline endorsed by some of the ablest minds in Christendom for a century and a half, viz.: One Supreme God; good and evil angels; and good and evil spirits of men embodied and disembodied; and the "perpetual war, said to be waged between the evil and good spirits, seems visible to the naked eye, in the ceaseless conflict between right and wrong on this earth. The secret lodge system, which is "the Mormonism of all ages," belongs to the side of darkness in this war, as would be easily seen and universally acknowledged, if there were no such thing as sin, and consequent love of darkness.

But many causes combine to hide from us the true nature of the secret lodge system; as (1) Entrenched ignorance. This filled the patriot-philosopher John Quincy Adams with bitter astonishment—that men professing to be called of God to teach their fellow men, should blink a question, involving murder and millions of the peoples' money—by saying they "Know nothing about it;" "an ignorance," says Adams, "which they took care always to preserve." (Adams' Letters, p. 230.)

(2) Then lodge leaders study to promote ignorance, in order to keep men from worshipping as Christians, by making them wonder like heathens. Geo. F. Blackie, member of a lodge dating back to 1559, more than a century before the Apple Tree Tavern Grand Lodge, London, says of Masonry, as a boast rather than a regret: "Its origin may be said to be lost." But this no more hinders our knowing and stating the nature and influence of lodgery, than our not knowing what morass first sent up miasm and malaria, prevents our knowing that they spring from swamps and breed diseases. If there were no lodges, they would spring up to-morrow.

(3) But a worse hindrance to knowledge of the lodge system is, that it has the nature of the polyp, a disgusting creature, every section of which, when cut off, becomes a perfect animal, distinct from the parent, yet the same. Hence the name of Masonry is, now, Legion. It was an original invention of priests. Its fundamental writers, Mackey, Rebold, and the rest, including the cyclopedias, derive the system from the fighting monks of the Crusades, whose sham "Knight Templary" has come back to us from the grave where indignant nations buried it. French priests invented the chapter degrees; and Blackie, the Masonic writer already quoted, tells us of the Masonic systems which have become extinct. It is scientific in the college; beneficial in the society; insurance in the secret corporation; infidel in the Orient; political in the "circle" and "post;" reformatory in the temperance lodge; benevolent, charitable, social or political, Pagan or Christian; the Kofong and the Purroh in Africa; the Jesuits with their Monita Secreta, and the papacy at Rome, the mother of them all; secret from Confessional to Inquisition—these deluges of darkness are pouring into and along all our channels of life, like the flood from the mouth of the dragon; diverse, yet the same.

"Distinct like the billows, yet one like the sea."

Let us see whether these societies have a common nature; and, if so, what that common nature is? and, whether, in any just sense, that nature is conspiracy against God?

There can be but one moral system in the universe, whose author and executive is God. There can be but one, for this plain reason, that a second infinite system, if distinct, must displace the first. The badge and binding force of this moral system is its worship; and the oath or vow is the highest worship; that which binds mind to the God of mind; and the one point which we make is, that these secret orders do un-God our globe, by substituting another worship and other oaths for the true. In effect they displace God from his own moral system, and so do destroy that system within their scope. In short, horrible as it may seem, there is no obligatory law of right and wrong in a lodge. It is a side-system—a wen—orexcrescence in the Universe. Being neither civil nor ecclesiastical, human or divine, but diabolical; it has courts, but no sheriff; no right but might, and no motives but terror and secret advantage. It is a brotherhood or family with no rightful head; and unless doomed, as it certainly is, it would produce a world with no God but a usurper, who was a "liar and murderer from the beginning." (Jno. 8:44.)

"But if the lodge system is so fearfully abhorrent, why have not Christians found it out and abhorred it?" The answers are many and various.

1. In the first place Christians have found out and abhorred it.

In 1751 France, Russia, Hamburg, Florence, Portugal, Naples and Spain adopted laws suppressing Freemasonry. The rulers of Sweden, Denmark and England had some of their number join the lodges to protect their governments. But the Southern nations generally loathed the lodge. Thus, in thirty-four years after Freemasonry dropped stone and mortar, and set up priest-craft and rites, professing to fit men for heaven, the lodge had so developed its malignant nature, that the Protestant, Catholic and Greek religions in Europe suppressed it. Later, in this country, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont and New York enacted laws forbidding lodge-oaths. The Northern lodges were suppressed, and would have remained suppressed, if they had not had in them the vitality of false religion. These facts show that Christians have found out and loathed the lodge. Yet, to-day, educated men are totally ignorant of the nature of the lodge.

2. The second reason is, its members are sworn to conceal it from those outside; and, except a few in the highest degrees, from themselves, even. So that the Masonic masses are as ignorant of the nature of Masonry as outsiders, and often more ignorant. Then, putting conflicting oaths into a man's conscience breaks down his moral nature, so that uttering untruths to conceal Masonry is not, to him, lying, but keeping his oath to conceal; and he becomes incapable of truth where the lodge is concerned. Hence, though revealed a thousand times, the lodge still goes on selling revealed secrets. Even its frivolity is profound craft; and it lies hid under the contempt of sensible men. The poet Schiller was wheedled through the Entered Apprentice ceremonies by a shallow nobleman, who asked him, as they came out: "Well, do you detect any treason in that?" The poet replied: "Would to God, my lord, there was treason, for then there would be something in it."

3. But the grand explanation of this universal ignorance is, that Gentile or false worship is paid to devils, (1 Cor. 10:20), "who blind the minds" of their worshippers. This is expressly affirmed by Paul. 2 Cor. 4:4. By what mesmerism they do this we know not. All ultimate processes are hidden. But we do know that self-projected worships blind minds. O'Connell, one of the stateliest of men, blinded by such a mass of trivial ceremonies, ordered his heart sent to Rome, to be kept, perhaps adored, as a relic—to Rome, the mother of false religious inventions, despotisms and "spiritual abominations." And there are in this city of Chicago, ministers of large following, and private members of orthodox churches, who have taken the top of a human skull sawed off, and drank wine from it, invoking double damnation on their souls should they reveal the frivolous and oft-revealed secrets of Knight Templarism. Surely these are they "in whom the god of this world hath blinded the mind." (2 Cor. 4:4.) Paul is speaking of Corinthians who had practiced false worship.

But some of these men of blinded minds deny that the lodges are religions; and they deny this in the face of their own greatest writers, who declare Masonry to be "a religious institution." (Mackey's Lex., Art. Prayer). This Mason who denies that his lodge is a religion, uttered a deist's creed at the door; knelt inside at an altar; bound himself by oaths; Christless prayers were said over him; he is called a "brother," living and dead; is buried as a brother, and the liturgy of the lodge lands him in heaven. Whoever, in the face of these facts, denies that this is a false or Gentile religion, proves that he is blind or worse than blind.

All observing men can see that there is something in a man-made religious ceremony which blinds the devotee to what that ceremony covers. The hood-wink of the lodge symbolizes that blinding force. When Morgan's murder was discussed in the Batavia lodge, endorsed by a letter which—unless forged—was sent by DeWitt Clinton, then Governor of New York, the Episcopal minister, and every male member of his church, and elders of the Presbyterian church, and other good men, if they had any good men in western New York, sanctioned that dastardly crime. This, many of them, afterwards penitently confessed. There never was but one thing on earth which explains such "blindness of mind;" and that one thing is false religion.

Some prominent members of the W. C. T. U., and others, think we should discriminate between bad secret orders and good. But there are no good secret orders. Do they not all worship? And do they worship Christ? Are they not all secret, in contempt of the example of Christ? Will one say, "some have but little secrecy;" but was not a soldier in our late war who wore one patch of gray uniform meaner than he who bravely wore a full suit? The mis-called Grand Army, Good Templars and Knights of Labor, who plead the littleness of their secrecy, as Lot pleaded for Zoar, are they not all in the Dead Sea plain of a Christless religion? Are not their secret rituals all commandments of men, which makes worship vain and law void? The Good Templar constitution has nothing to prevent electing a swearing brother as chaplain, and their lodges often do it. And do not their deist creeds all omit Christ, and "brother" his contemners? The Word of God was, and is, "Tarry not in all the plain." And though Lot was allowed to compromise on Zoar, because "it was a little one," the good man fell into drunkenness, and his wife became a pillar of salt for looking back toward the plain of Sodom with desire. We hope the noble temperance women of this country will witness no similar transformation, or manufacture another pillar of salt.

Let us now turn square toward the Word of God. What does the Bible teach concerning the secret lodge system?

The side religions so denounced by the Bible, and the secret lodges of to-day, are one and the same system. Both are inventions. Both cram the popular mind with legends and lies, to crowd out the truth. Neither of them have the true, Infinite God, because destitute of a mediator. And without a mediator men cannot reach the Infinite God. Both the lodges described in the Bible, and those of to-day, are also destitute of the perfect law of supreme love to God and equal love to man; and neither system has a perfect human character after which to copy. The lodges of to-day are the false religions described in the Bible, brought down and modernized. This is so plain that "wayfaring men, though fools," need not err. Thus in the Bible Satan promises Adam and Eve to make them divine by occult knowledge. The lodge does the same. Satan proffers the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. The lodge proffers popularity and secret and political advantages. In the 8th of Ezekiel, God shows his prophet a lodge of sun worshippers behind a wall. Blackie, a Masonic writer in Johnson's Cyclopedias, Art. "Freemasonry," says the lodge is "simple sun worship, overlaid with mystic speculation." The "New Masonic Trestle Board" speaks of the idolatrous Hebrew worshippers in the "high places," as, "Our ancient brethren." Moses foretold the dissolution of the United States of Palestine by false worships; which was fulfilled under Jeroboam, and ten states were struck from the map of the world. Secret lodges made the raid on Kansas and in them was inaugurated the rebellion which took eleven States out of our Union. The ten lodges in the District of Columbia all went for secession, and on the battlefield of Pea Ridge many of our men in blue uniform were tomahawked and scalped by Indians who would not fight our Union till their leaders had been taken to Washington and initiated by Albert Pike, "Sovereign Grand Commander" of Masons in the United States! Pike obtained money due the tribes for their lands from the United States Treasury and spent it for the rebellion against the United States, thus robbing the Indians of the price of their lands, their bread money and school fund. And he did this by the power of the lodge. So Jeroboam confirmed his rebellion and dissolved the Hebrew union by his lodge altars at Dan and Beth-el. But the Pike and Jefferson Davis rebellion did not succeed because we had Lincoln instead of Jeroboam as our chief magistrate.

Do we not see, also, in the days of Elijah the strange altars taking the entire nation from the altar of Jehovah, which was "broken down." The same work is now being done by the lodge altars in our Southern cities; where thousands of colored mothers take in washing, feed their children and board their husbands, whose earnings are eaten up by lodges which are run by their very worst men, and which are disintegrating their churches, supplanting the Bible by Masonic fables, and driving Christ from their religion.

But we need not go through the prophets. Every one of them declares what we see must needs be true, that national calamities come from false worships, and that ours are the same as theirs. Multiplying religions multiplies oaths, till, as Washington foresaw, and said in his farewell address, "the oath loses its sanctity, society trembles to its dissolution, and anarchy comes down on us like night." Let no one think we are safe because the names and images of the pagan gods are gone. "An idol," says Paul, "is nothing in the world." But worship is everything which Satan craves, and which Christ refused him; and idolatry can be practiced in Christian, as well as in heathen countries, without images as well with them. But let us come to generals.

There are three points where our race is assailable, the Family, the State, and the Church. And God has sanctified the Family as our Father, the State as our King, and the Church by Christ its "head." In the first book of the Bible, Satan as a serpent embroils the first family, and in the last book, the Revelation, his "three spirits of devils like frogs" are sent to embroil the nations; and, as "a great red dragon," he waits and watches to destroy the man-child, Christ. He achieves all three by false worship. The Mormon lodge destroys the family and makes us Mormons. By secularism he destroys all reverence for law, leaving nothing but the slender power of a magistrate, often a demagogue, "between our breasts and the daggers of assassins." And, taking away Christ, he un-Gods the globe. For "he that hath not the Son hath not the Father," and Satan takes away God from the globe when he takes Christ out of its religion. This, however, he will never do, for Christ still "hath all power in heaven and in earth."

But this he can do. He can spread Mormonism and make the family a curse. He can embroil nations as he has embroiled Europe, Mexico and our own States by his power in the lodge; in the words of the philosophic Seward and thirty-eight New York statesmen, "trampling on our rights, defeating justice, and defying every government which it cannot control!" And Satan may be permitted yet to assail Christ and his church, expelling him by receiving to communion the worshippers of his adversary and rival, cutting his name out of the Bible used in the lodge, dropping his name from its creed and prayers, casting out "Father, Son and Holy Ghost" to make room for the "Grand Architect" or "god of this world." For this secret lodge system, what is it but a foul, sustained scheme to drop Christ from the religion of mankind and leave our race morally bankrupt, without an endorser at the bank of eternity!

Such are the moral teachings of the Bible concerning the secret lodge system. Paul is more explicit. Of the mysteries which Greece brought from Egypt, Europe borrowed from Greece, and we have imported from Europe, Paul says: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," Eph. 5. 11. "I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils." 1 Cor. 10:20. "The cup of devils" of which Paul speaks, was drunk in elegant banquets by the first scholars of the world, in temples whose ruins furnish our orders of architecture, accompanied with eloquence, poetry and music. Yet the Apostle saw that Gentile sacrifices were paid not to God but to those evil spirits which inhabited the old idolatrous shrines and resisted Christ and his apostles as the legion who infested the Gadarene and the seven who possessed the Magdalen. How must his converts have shrunk from such ghastly fellowship!

Some of us have seen the slave power in this country controlling everything in church and state as the lodge power now does. But it fell as by the touch of God. Unlike the slave power we have seen the lodge power once fallen afield. Forty-five thousand out of fifty thousand forsook its lodges and it only lived by feigning to be dead. It has come back to power by changing its names and a feigned change of its nature. But its master can not deceive the Spirit of God. Every true revival of religion is fatal to it; and when stripped of its aliases, like felons of their false names, it must sink sooner and deeper than before. The slave power met its first defeat in Kansas. God grant that Chicago may prove a Kansas to the lodge and this Congress its Osawatimie, leading to its Appomattox.

LABOR LODGES SOCIALLY CONSIDERED.

Strikes, and the whole system of federated labor of which they are the result, are utterly un-American. Our institutions are based on the idea of individual manhood. Each citizen is supposed to be able to take care of himself, to respect himself, to be a free and independent voter, and to look to the law of the land to protect him in his rights. But this imported socialism says: No, you individually cannot take care of yourself. The ballot is not sufficient. You must become a member of a secret organization. You must surrender your manhood and be the slave of some master workman or executive committee. You must work when he or they tell you to. You must strike when he or they tell you to—yes, strike just as the soldier in battle shoots when the commanding officer says "fire." In war it is necessary that men should obey orders without asking questions. War is a relic of barbarism at best, and martial law is the most absolute of despotisms. But we are at peace. We are cultivating, as employers and employes, the arts of peace. We are governed by the law of supply and demand. Every man has a right to hire his neighbor to work for him and to pay him such wages as he can afford to pay, and the neighbor need not work for the offered wages unless he chooses to. He has the privilege of going elsewhere and doing better if he can. But he has no right to say that if I don't hire him I shall not hire anybody else, or that it is his prerogative to fix the wages that I shall pay, and to boycott me and destroy my property if I refuse to accede to his terms. Let our newspapers expose the sophistry of the shallow-pated theorists who are humbugging our honest working men—making them believe that they can make water run up hill—and the strike and the boycott will soon be things of the past.—Rev. Dr. C. E. Babb, in the Interior.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE NATIONAL DRILL.

Washington is full of martial music and beat of drums. The National Drill is opened and the contests are begun. The city of tents around the base of the Washington Monument is quite picturesque, and there is also a ladies' camp just north of the parade grounds. Large parties of ladies accompanied some of the military organizations here, and some of them preferred to go into camp to stopping at the hotels and boarding-houses. Some preferred it for the novelty of the experience and others because of the economic features of camp life.

Quite a sensation occurred when it was reported that there would be no liquor sold in camp because of an order issued by the President to revoke the privilege. It seems that a committee of ladies, appointed for the purpose by the W. C. T. U., called on the President and presented him a protest against the sale of intoxicating liquors on the drill grounds, it being a government property, and asked his interference. The ladies said the President received them most courteously, expressed his disapproval of the license to sell liquors on the drill ground, and gave them much encouragement to believe it would not be done. The ladies also called on Col. Wilson, Commissioner of public buildings and grounds, and other gentlemen having authority.

The bar-room privilege of the ground had been sold for $1,800, but about noon on last Friday, the man who bought the privilege of opening the bar under the grand stand, was notified that the order granting him this privilege was revoked, and he at once ceased his preparations. Later it was stated that this action of the Drill committee was in no way due to the President or to the efforts of the ladies of the W. T. C. U., that before the ladies had waited on the President the Drill committee had passed their resolution revoking the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Drill ground.

Probably the real secret of the committee's action was that it received through the Commissioner of public grounds a polite intimation that it would be very gratifying to the War Department, to which the Drill ground belongs, if intoxicating liquors were excluded. The committee, already under great obligations to the War Department, could not afford to ignore a hint of that kind, and they promptly made the order revoking the bar privilege. So, at the refreshment counter under the grand stand, only temperance drinks will be sold this week.

The President, who has been working very hard and steadily for some time, has decided to take a rest. He will go soon, accompanied by his wife and her mother, Colonel and Mrs. Lamont, to Saranac Lake, N. Y., for about ten days' fishing. Last season he delayed his trip to the mountains until it was almost too late for this sport. He expects to get there before the crowd of Adirondack visitors assemble, with a view of securing a good rest. It is probable that this will be his only opportunity to be away from Washington for any length of time. Extra session talk is again revived, and should he deem it necessary to call an extra session of Congress, as many men of prominence think he will, he would probably be deprived of a later summer vacation.

An extra session is urged chiefly by the advocates of tariff reduction, who think that the country demands relief from taxation and a release of a good deal of the money that is thereby locked up in the Treasury. From a partisan standpoint, the Democratic politicians would of course prefer to avoid an extra session. It would involve additional expense, for which the dominant party is always held responsible.

[SPECIAL LETTER.]

The great military parade is just now the all-absorbing event of the city. Splendid uniforms are everywhere seen. One would suppose, if he did not know the facts, that we were in imminent preparation for a great war. More than $50,000 have been raised by private subscription in this city and other large sums are required to defray the expense. The President of the United States, the heads of the Departments and the Governors of the several States are giving to it their presence and influence. From all parts of the land great multitudes are taking advantage of the reduced rates to come to this city intent on seeing the great show.

Is there any good reason for this great conclave? Will the country be the better or the worse for this great military display? There was at least no occasion for it. Never in the history of our country were our relations with all the world more thoroughly peaceful. Even the poor savages are for once quieted, and the tomahawk has been buried. The ordinary police force is ample to secure the enforcement of law. Not only is there no danger of foreign invasion or domestic conflict, but the resources of our nation were never so ample for any emergency. We have a vast surplus at our command, and a great and loyal population ready to respond to their country's call. There is nothing in the air to indicate the slightest necessity for this gathering. That it will have great influence in stimulating the military spirit of the country is quite evident, but that the peace and defense of our country depend on a healthy emulation among its militia is utterly untrue. The nations that have the most careful military preparations have as a rule the most war. Those nations whose main reliance is in their peaceful intentions, and the moderation and justice of their demands, are the best defended and most secure.

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the world from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts.

"The warrior's name would be a name abhorred,
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forevermore the curse of Cain."

"The military spirit" which this gathering will have "great influence in stimulating" is the curse of the nations, the demon whose power for evil is unsurpassed only by the curse of intemperance. The nations of Europe are groaning beneath its burdens, and the whole world is travelling in pain because of its demoniac power. France, Germany, Russia, Turkey and Great Britain are ready to seize each other by the throat and engage in a death struggle; and for very little reason, except that they have great armaments and a fine "military spirit." Is it a time for us to emulate their example? Are there no arts of peace that we can cultivate, and no works of mercy and beneficence in which we can engage? What a wonderful example of faith in free institutions, courageous adherence to Christian principle, and a benevolent regard for all mankind we could give, if on the one-hundredth anniversary of our National Constitution we should decree a universal disbandment of all our militia. There are, too, other conflicts in which we are engaged, and in which we will be greatly embarrassed and held back by such gatherings as this. The coming together of such a great mass on such an errand, always increases the ravages of intemperance, and checks the progress of the temperance reform. This is illustrated by the following from the Post of this city, of the 23d:

The boys had read in the newspapers that the drill management had forbidden the sale of liquors in the camp, and wanted to turn back upon hearing the sad news that Rochester beer could not be secured for a week. Hot, dusty and tired they arrived at the mess hall, and tremblingly looked with searching eyes for some sign of this liquid refreshment. Only water and coffee met their gaze. Caterer Kearns, noticing their eager intent and whisperings, asked if there was anything wrong about the breakfast. "Only this," said one, "it is too dry." "Oh," said the obliging caterer, "I forgot to say I have some nice, cool Rochester beer on ice, if any of you gentlemen ever drink." "Give us fifty-three bottles," was the only reply. The order was promptly filled and the liquid more promptly dispatched—fifty-three throats drinking as one.

Our great conflict just now is with the drink traffic. Let us not embarrass it by seeking to cultivate the twin barbarism, the spirit and practice of war.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Invincible Armada was built by Philip II. of Spain in 1588 for the purpose of destroying Protestantism in England. It consisted of 130 ships, larger than any Europe had ever seen. There was a land force on board of 20,000 under the Duke of Parma and 34,000 assembled in the Netherlands ready for transportation into England. The gifted and experienced sea officer, the Marquis of Santa Croce, was to command the fleet. Success seemed sure. But God fought for his own. Before sailing Santa Croce died, and the Duke of Medina Sidonia, "a person utterly inexperienced in sea affairs," received the command. Shortly after leaving the port of Lisbon a violent storm arose; some of the ships were lost and the rest returned for repairs. Again putting to sea they approached the British Isles in the form of a half moon, the extremes seven miles apart. A panic seized them in the first engagement. They fly. A storm overtakes them. They are terribly shattered. "Of the whole Armada fifty-three ships only returned to Spain and these in a wretched condition."

Satan is preparing another Armada against Christianity. The first ship is the liquor traffic. It puts upon the public expense every year in our land 880,000 paupers, 315,000 criminals, 50,000 idiots. Our annual drink bill is $1,500,000,000. It murdered Haddock, Northup, and Gambrell. In England two out of every thousand die yearly from drink; in Scotland three; in France two; in Switzerland three; Sweden six, and in New York State twelve. The second ship is speedy and easy divorce. In England, Scotland, France and the United States the divorces more than doubled between 1870 and 1880. In England in 1880 the divorces were 2 to every thousand marriages; Scotland three; France nine; in Massachusetts forty-five. Another ship is Sabbath desecration. Sunday trains, Sunday newspapers, Sunday base ball, Sunday excursions and concerts have converted our Sabbath into a Parisian holiday. Another is the war between organized labor and concentrated capital. Perhaps 200,000 workmen are on a strike at this hour. It grows worse. Mormon polygamy and political corruption are other vessels. They make a frightful array. But the Captain of our salvation rules the sea of society in which they float. By and by he will raise up a storm which will scatter and disable the whole fleet and the Ship of State, our Republic, with Christ at the helm will command the sea. To him the National Reform Association is calling this nation as our Great Deliverer.

Last Sabbath I preached in the Second Presbyterian church, Rev. Geo. P. Hays, D. D., pastor. This congregation has above 600 members. They have a Sabbath-school of 700 scholars. They also have a mission school on Walnut Hills of about the same size. They support a mission on 6th street and also another in the West End. Their contributions are immense. They are justly proud of their pastor. Dr. Hays was five years pastor in Baltimore; then president of Washington and Jefferson college. He was pastor of the leading congregation in Denver, Col., for five years before coming here. He is infusing a new life into every department of their work. They occupy a stone church. Its appointments are complete. With the gift of the Holy Ghost who can measure the possibilities of their work. As Dr. McCosh says, "We can bring the gift to the altar but except the heavenly influence descend we will be as little able to kindle it as the priests of Baal upon Mt. Carmel by cutting themselves could bring down the needed fire.

The Commercial Gazette complains in an editorial that the Cincinnati Presbytery passed resolutions condemning the Sunday newspaper and affirms that ministers riding on the street cars on Sabbath are just as culpable as they. The article is lengthy. "He draws out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument." Why can he not distinguish things that differ? Does he not know that the priests spent all the Sabbath in the temple slaying the sacrifices and were blameless, while the people were not allowed to slay a sheep or an ox for food? It would be wrong for a farmer to hitch up his team and draw a load of grain to the market on Sabbath. But it is right for him to hitch up his team to take his family to church on that day. It would be right and eminently proper for the street cars to run on certain hours on Sabbath to take people to and from church provided they would remain tied up the rest of the day. But to run them all the Sabbath day simply to put money in the pockets of the stockholders is a sin and a crime. It is a crime against society and a sin against God. And that is what the Sunday newspaper is guilty of. The ancient Egyptians brought a coffin to their feast to solemnize it. The Sunday paper is the coffin at our Sabbath feast. It ought to be taken out and buried out of our sight with all it contains. J. M. FOSTER.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

A MODERN POOL BETHESDA.

As was the pool Bethesda, Boston is being stirred by the visit of an angel, or rather angels, of health. Standing in front of Tremont Temple at 10 o'clock A. M., it is seldom one witnesses so "great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of"—not of water, but the hands of the Drs. Henion, who cure (?) free of charge all who are fortunate enough to get upon the platform over the baptistry of the Temple. Many go away disappointed, as the single hour of the exhibition is insufficient to treat the numberless crowd of afflicted ones.

Last week a similar scene as that witnessed at the pool Bethesda was enacted in the Temple before a large gathering. A man who had not walked without crutches for five years was assisted upon the platform. His complaint was inflammation of the knee joints. The doctors rubbed the sufferer's knees and in ten minutes he walked across the platform without crutches, cured, and shouting vociferously that it was the first time in five years he had walked without the aid of crutches. So elated he became that he actually ran back and forth, shouting his joy, while the audience also gave vent to boisterous expressions of appreciation of the result of the doctors' operations. Throwing his crutches over his shoulders, the happy fellow left the hall.

Among other subjects was an old colored lady afflicted with rheumatism of the most acute kind in both feet. The doctors applied their hands and in five minutes the old lady gave a sudden jump and rushed across the platform yelling, "Fore God, doctor, I done gib up all hope, but now I'se gwine to lib suah." After the exhibitions, if they can be so called, free consultations are given at the Quincy House.

Whether these marvelous cures are genuine or not it is difficult to determine. To ascertain the facts the services of a detective would have to be secured. Magnetism seems to be the agent which the doctors employ in effecting their stupendous cures. The modus operandi of imparting the current is through manipulations of the hands. Mind and faith cures seem to be left behind.

Only those worked upon can know the genuineness of the exhibitions. That many believe it, more or less, is demonstrated by the multitudes that flock to the Temple every day. Great amusement is derived from the affair, if nothing else. What do the physicians make out of it? With the following announcement I will leave the Cynosure readers to form their own conclusions:

Free treatment given the public at Tremont Temple, 10 to 11 A. M.; free consultation given at Quincy House, 9 A. M. to 7 P. M. D. P. MATHEWS.

Good men, grand men, noble men, heroic men, will be the rule rather than the exception, when the prohibition of the liquor traffic shall become the law of the land and in our National Government.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A GOOD RECORD.

The Congregationalist church at Byron, Ill., held its semi-centennial on the 20th of May. The programme prepared by the committee was slightly varied on account of absentees, but there was no lack of something to say and somebody to say it. The present pastor, Rev. S. A. Harris, acted as "field marshal," and Edgar A. Nott, church chorister, conducted the song service. Rev. J. S. Braddock, Rev. A. E. Arnold, and Rev. J. H. Thomas made brief, but fitting remarks. The historical address was by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, pastor from May 1st, 1861, until January, 1872. A bountiful repast was prepared by the ladies and served on the church lawn to over two hundred persons, who passed the time of intermission in reviewing sacred memories, renewing old and forming new acquaintances. A "Band Concert in the church yard" at 7 P. M. was an attractive feature to the general public. Rev. John Gibson, also a former pastor, gave the evening address, and was followed by pastor Harris and I. S. Knowlton, who had held the office of deacon in the church for thirty-eight years.

The church was organized by Rev. John Morrell, with eleven members in Lucius Read's log cabin, in May, 1837. William D. Johnston, one of the original members, is now living at Lexington, Ill., and his letter to the convention was received with great interest. Services were held for a time in Deacon Read's cabin; then in the school house, as occasion served. The contract for a house of worship was let March 13th, 1845. It was completed in 1847, and dedicated the same year by Pres. J. Blanchard, who represented its principles not only in doctrine and faith, but upon the slavery, temperance and reformatory questions of the hour. It cost in money $2,042.49, to say nothing of the self-denial and sacrifice involved when there were no celled houses, broad acres of harvests, or fine carriages in all that valley, and when wheat was worth only 25 cents per bushel, and pork 1½ cents per pound. Friends at the East gave $193.58; the remainder was raised in the congregation, all but $20 being paid before the dedication. In 1853 a bell was added, costing $310. In 1880 a commodious parsonage with a barn was added at a cost of $1,500, and the recently renovated audience-room is in every respect commodious and attractive. A well-trained choir under the leadership of E. A. Nott, Esq., has instrumental accompaniments and is helpful in leading the congregation in song service. There is in connection with the church a prosperous Sabbath-school, superintended by Mrs. Dr. J. Blount, and other benevolent and reformatory enterprises of which I failed to obtain statistics. The church site of half a block was donated by its first pastor, Rev. Ebenezer Brown, and the grounds are in the special care of the young men of the church, whose industry and taste have added much to the natural beauty of the situation.

The church has had eleven pastors and been blessed with a number of precious seasons "of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," and has received 411 members. Of this number 52 have died in connection with the church, 191 have been dismissed, 43 dropped or excommunicated, and it has now a roll of 137, of whom only twelve are reported absent, which is the largest working membership given at any one time since the organization.

There are very many incidents which it would be pleasant to mention, but all may be summed up in a word: the church of the living God in Byron stands where the fathers and mothers in Israel planted it, "The pillar and ground of the truth," united in its membership, at peace and working in harmony with its neighbors, and teaching the same grand, glorious Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It enters upon its second semi-centennial under the pastorate of Bro. Harris with every prospect of success in its mission of hastening the coming of that kingdom which is "righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Ghost."

A SENTINEL WITHOUT SELF-POSSESSION.

PAXTON, Ill., May 18, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have received a circular from the American Sentinel office calling attention to the National Reform Association, and requesting an expression of my reflections and suggestions. I do this through the Cynosure, as I am in correspondence with it.

I have at times given considerable thought to the different questions agitated which lie between our friends who observe the seventh day and all other Christian people. I have been on the most intimate and friendly terms with some of their ministers; have bought and read their publications. I would remark in view of the matters contained in the circular that the simplest things possible often solve and illustrate the most intricate and perplexing questions. The company of the literary men could not make an egg stand on end until Columbus struck one on the table hard enough to make a flat surface. Then all could do it. It was perfectly easy. Look for something simple, brethren, very simple, to solve the questions that agitate you. Don't get scared. Don't get agitated; and above everything don't get bitter, suspicious and uncharitable. This will solve nothing, but make everything worse. I have in mind a very simple thing that I think will straighten out everything and make everything plain if adopted. I will give it to you.

Down in the southeastern part of Illinois there lives a Seventh-day Baptist minister. He is a good man. Everybody, in church and out, have confidence in him. Of course they all love him. He is faithful to his convictions; preaches what he believes to be true; tries hard to convince his Christian neighbors that the seventh day is the true Sabbath. I have an intelligent Christian neighbor whom he invited to his house, and spent the day with her, Bible in hand, to get her to see that the seventh day was the true Sabbath. He did not succeed; but both understood their Bibles better than when they began, and had more Christian love and confidence in each other. This brother would preach on the seventh day for his people, and on the first day for other Christian neighbors, with perfect acceptance to all. This leaves no question to be settled. This will settle the whole thing everywhere if the method is adopted.

As to the union of church and state, I don't believe there is one individual who wants it; but the circular says there are one thousand enlisted in the National Reform who believe in, or would consent to a union of church and state. Instead of getting so agitated that all sober thought takes its flight, test the question faithfully and see if anybody wants the church and state united. It will be plenty time to raise the alarm when anybody is found who wants it done. The circular states that religious tests will be made as qualifications for holding office. This charge is too general and very misleading. It implies that men will be required to be professors of religion. This is not true. We don't want drunken, licentious, gambling, profane men for office-holders. They should be required to be clean and decent. But no man will be required to be a member of a church or a professor of religion. There are heathen places of worship now set up on our shores; we don't want idol worshippers for officeholders. We have religionists who hold polygamy as a religious right; we don't want our public officers to be polygamists. All public officers must take an oath of office. We don't want this service a mockery. We want an oath taken such as God sanctions. If an individual is so destitute of moral manhood that he cannot take this first step he ought to have too much candor to apply for office, or the people too much wisdom to elect him.

I think the brethren of the Sentinel too much excited to treat this question fairly. They throw out very uncharitable and disparaging remarks upon the persons and enterprises of others. Now such a course as this will do nothing but harm. In one number of the Sentinel it speaks as though the progress of the National Christian Association had been small. This was said with an uncharitable spirit. It had the rankle of a stab in it. If this was true, was this the way to do? Is the man in a right spirit to accomplish any thing good, who will do this way? But the slap betrays great ignorance, as well as a bad spirit. Let the brother make a patient and honest inquiry into the progress of this Association, and he will be astonished at the wonderful progress it has made, instead of sneers for the smallness of its gains.

Too much of this spirit is manifest in the Sentinel. Its criticism of brother M. A. Gault is of this character. Now I am personally acquainted with brother Gault, and I know the criticism to be as bitter as it was untruthful, and as untruthful as it was bitter. It accuses him of cool, calculating selfishness under the guise for a desire for justice. This is an intensified, wicked piece of writing. I know brother Gault, and he will go as far, and do as much to protect our Seventh-day brethren in their religious worship as he would our First-day brethren. All he would say is, Let us respect each other's rights. If you must work on the first day let it be so as not to disturb us, and we will do the same by you. Brethren, you must feel different and speak different if you expect to influence those who differ from you. Let us all seek a right spirit. Fraternally yours,
W. W. BLANCHARD.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BRO.—Perhaps a note from this part of the field of battle would not be amiss to the readers of your great and good paper—devoted to the greatest reform of the age.

The loyal U. B. held a convention in King Street church, Chambersburg, Pa. Bro. Wm. Dillon, editor Christian Conservator, was present, and during his stay preached five excellent, profitable and soul-comforting sermons. Oh, for more of such preaching, and there will be less secret society in the churches, and more Holy Ghost among the members. One day was taken up with the convention. Bro. J. M. Bishop, the long and tried anti-secrecy champion, was elected president, and I. C. Weidler, secretary. Bro. Dillon was the chief speaker, and entertained an intelligent congregation in a Christian and able manner, showing the evils of secret societies and the folly of the U. B. commission to open the doors in the U. B. church to admit this curse of churches and of the country. If the General Conference and commissin ring would have been as godly and devoted as ministers ought to be, there would have been no such folly committed in Israel; but instead, measures adopted to purify the church and cleanse it from sin.

The U. B. church has got old, and the sons have gone to house-keeping, inheriting the wealth, temporal and spiritual, and some of them the "brains" that the fathers lacked—as they think—and they have concluded to formulate a church "worthy of Christendom, and of the ages to come," making secrecy the chief corner-stone. Thank God, more than seven thousand of the U. B. children, having the courage of their convictions inherited from their fathers, will not bow the knee to this modern Baal.

Bro. Dillon gave a profitable lecture in the Covenantant church in Fayetteville, the village where Bro. Keiter was refused the privilege of preaching the Gospel in the U. B. church. Some of the sons of "brains" run that church. The preacher was present to hear the lecture, but was a "little" afraid to come to the front.

I have just read Rev. Talmage's sermon, "For the times," and am taken aback with the far-famed Dr.'s apology for secret societies, and of his confession of ignorance in reference to them. It is a matter of surprise that a minister of so much research and painstaking to expose wickedness, would risk his reputation for truth and faithfulness in his mission, and tell us that he is ignorant of the horrid oaths that bind Freemasons together, and of their ejecting and rejecting Christ from his Word in the lodge.

AN ADDRESS AT THE CONGRESS CALLED FOR.

NEW YORK, May 21, 1887.

DEAR BROTHER KELLOGG:—I write to ask you to secure for early publication in the Cynosure the address of Father Blanchard at the late congress of churches.

I desire to urge this as a deserved tribute to him as one of the earliest, most earnest and able champions of this great reform. Like the venerated Washington he has the dauntless spirit and courage for war, the mild and Christian spirit for peace, and is enshrined among the first in the hearts of those, his countrymen, who know and love the truth.

I desire it also for the sake of the thousands of your readers who were not able to be present at our convention to hear it from his own lips. It is also very much desired by those who were present in the congress at the time, but because of lack of light for the reading and quietness for the hearing of it, felt they were not able to enjoy it as they desired. And finally, I urge its publication, because, having been favored with the reading of it at my leisure after the convention, I feel confident it will be considered by intelligent and careful readers as one of the most successful efforts of the author's life, and the most complete summary of the truths bearing on that most important branch of this subject that has ever been published.

I also desire and expect to see it copied by every journal advocating the cause of anti-secrecy. It will thus be "like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Yours very sincerely,

J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI.—June 12, 1887.—The Commandments.—Exodus 30:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.—Matt. 22:37.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The reason why God should have supreme homage. vs. 1-2. Every command of God has its root in the highest reason, and here we see that he establishes his claim to be worshiped supremely, not on the basis of creation but of redemption. "I have redeemed thee. I have called thee by my name. Thou art mine." That he had brought Israel out of such fearful bondage ought to have been enough to bind the nation for all time to his service. Has he done less for us individually or as a people? That he gave his Son to die for us is a far higher claim on our gratitude than the mere act of creation and renders the giving up of our entire selves to him indeed but our "reasonable service." And it is also in the highest degree "reasonable" that a nation he has so wonderfully guided and preserved for over a century should recognize him in all its public acts and elect for rulers and lawgivers "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness." In no way can a people insult him more than by electing vile men to fill high places. In this respect the American nation has deeply sinned. Men of loose morals, impure lives and hands stained with bribery are set to be his viceroys, to represent him who is of purer eyes than to behold evil, who is absolute purity, absolute justice, absolute truth! Have we not reason to fear his righteous judgments?

2. Idolatry Forbidden. vs. 3-6. Idolatry seems to be one of the most deeply rooted instincts of our depraved human nature, and for this reason the command against it takes the lead and is the basis of all others. It is of no great consequence to us what kind of false worshipers were practiced by the nations of antiquity, but it is a question of absorbing, of vital moment whether our own nation practices them. What is Masonry with its mock resurrection of Hiram Abiff? Masonic writers tell us that "Hiram Abiff is the Osiris of the Egyptians, the Mythus of the Persians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, the Dionysius of the Fraternity of Artificers, and the Atys of the Phrygians, whose passion, death and resurrection were celebrated by these people respectively." But every one knows that these are the names of pagan deities, and if we inquire farther, not of its enemies but of its own standard writers we shall find that its ceremonies are modeled on the rites of ancient heathenism; and, therefore, every Masonic lodge in the land, as well as all minor secret societies, of which it is the mother, break this first commandment "and teach men so."

3. Profanity Forbidden. v. 7. Every false or extra-judicial oath is profanity. He who goes through the first seven degrees of Masonry takes 69 different oaths that are doubly unlawful (1) because of their nature—they shield crime and enjoin revenge and murder; and (2) because they are illegally administered. The vows and obligations in the lesser orders though not so shocking to the moral sense are still false oaths. They bind men's consciences, because to a tender conscience they have all the sacredness of a solemn vow.

4. The Sabbath Day. vs. 8-11. It is not strange that with such a record as regards the first three commandments the lodge should lead the way in breaking the fourth. From the highest Masonic orders down to the trade unions the Sabbath is systematically violated by Sunday picnics, street parades and heathen ceremonies. It is only the true God who claims the seventh day. A false god means no Sabbath, no rest for the poor and toiling, no shadow of heavenly things brought down to earth; but instead, Mammon's clutch on every day in the week.

From Peloubet's Notes.

(1) The Ten Commandments express the great principles of true life. Hence (2) no outward penalties are attached, as to civil enactments, for they were to be the life principles of freemen, training them to the obedience of love. (3) Hence, also, they are eternal. They never have been outgrown; and never will be. They are obeyed naturally in heaven and by all the good. They have never been repealed (Matt. 5:18), and never can be, unless the very nature of God should be changed. (4) They are comprehensive. "They sweep the whole field of morality." (5) The law is marked by wonderful simplicity and brevity. Says Hamilton, "Such a contrast to our human legislation, our British statute-book, for instance, which it would need an elephant to carry and an Edipus to interpret!"

The First Commandment. (1) Every person must have some God. We all have a tendency to what Carlyle calls hero-worship; we must look up to some one greater and better than we. (2) The test as to who or what is our God is the supreme affection and choice of our souls. This is the Ithuriel's spear of our moral natures. Whatever we love most and choose first is our God. It may be ourselves, or money, or pleasure, or honor, or it may be our heavenly Father. This is the foundation of all true religion and morality.

All that is good and true in our natures demands of us that we worship and love the God who has made us, and redeemed us, and watches over us with loving care.

The Second Commandment forbids (1) the worshiping of God in a false manner. (2) It requires me to render to the true God that kind of worship which is suited to his spiritual nature and unlimited perfections. (3) It is impossible, absurd and wicked to make any outward, visible representation of that God who fills immensity with a spiritual, invisible presence and energy. (4) This command does not forbid the use of sculpture or painting for other purposes, as some have absurdly imagined. (5) I am not allowed to frame, even in my mind, any image or conception of God as possessing form.—Boyd on the Shorter Catechism.

The Third Commandment.—This forbids (1) being false to judicial oaths; promising in the name of God and not fulfilling the promise. It does not forbid a judicial oath, which is of a very different nature from profane swearing, or taking God's name in vain; though even of such oaths Coleridge says, "The more swearing, the more lying." (2) It forbids all careless, trifling use of God's name. Men excuse themselves for swearing by saying that they did not mean anything; but that is the very sin forbidden here. (3) It forbids all irreverent use of the Bible, hymns, sacred things; all joking and punning upon them or connecting funny stories with them. (4) It forbids all irreverence, thoughtless laughing and talking in the house of God. (5) It forbids all empty forms of religion, without its spirit. (6) It forbids all that large class of by-words which may be called "substitutionary oaths." They are the devil's drill ground for profanity, and recruiting office for the army of profane swearers. (7) All mean, narrow, grudging doing for God's cause is profanity lived.—P.

The Fourth Commandment.—"Remember." This word is evidence that the Sabbath was not a new institution. It is as old as the race. The law is written (1) in the Decalogue; (2) in the nature of man. Some say the Jewish Sabbath is abrogated. The Jewish peculiarities are fulfilled as their other ceremonial law. But this command is not abrogated. It represents God as a foolish being to say that he has annulled it from the Decalogue, but continues it in the nature of man. The power of its obligation is that God commands us to keep the Sabbath. "Sabbath." The original word means "rest after labor." The Sabbath is therefore literally "the rest day."

"To keep it holy." This points to something more than mere rest; the day should be set apart to special religious privileges and duties. The commandment was not intended, however, to repress the natural feelings of the heart and exercises of the mind, in so far as these are consistent with the general requirement of rest and worship. In very holiness should make it cheerful. The remembrance of creation completed, and of a Saviour triumphant over the grave, and triumphant for us, should occasion only the most jubilant thoughts. Parents should endeavor to make this day one of sacred and decorous joy in their own use of it and in the estimation of their children.—Johnson. The Sabbath is more restful for being kept religiously.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley: "I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond; even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield; in conducting the governments of the world there are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps: "All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-Masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: "I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Charles P. Sumner, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont: "One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?"

Philo Carpenter: "This saint of God (Moses Stuart) like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been, and are being 'ensnared.'"

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.: "It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason."

Horace Greeley: "Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not."

Hon. Seth M. Gates, ex-Mason: "Profoundly convinced by long experience and observation that Freemasonry is an evil and pernicious institution. I wish once more in my advanced age to lift my warning voice publicly against it and all kindred organizations, and to beseech Christian men to have no connection or fellowship with them. Jesus is not, and cannot properly be recognized in Freemasonry. He must be ignored in the lodge-room, in its lectures, instructions, and in its prayers."

Hon. Heman Lincoln, ex-Governor, Mass.: "Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and regulations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee. . . . We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery."

Gen. Henry Sewall, a companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this 'perfect rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its charity appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion deism because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity unsustainable; its titles fulsome; its rites barbarous and absurd; its oaths extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken, and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGE-RY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them every considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD.

EDITORS.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1887.

THE LUTHERAN HOUSE-FRIEND is the agreeable name of the German organ of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod, whose headquarters are in Chicago. One of the editors, Rev. Mr. Severinghouse, gives in a late number a most dramatic and life-like picture of Knight Templar Thomas, as he appeared in the Congress of churches in March last; his cool assurance at first, running into bluster and impudence; and, under the questioning of Pres. C. A. Blanchard, ending in slinking out of the house like a poodle dog when water is thrown on him. This minister Thomas of LaCrosse, Wis., is a discredit to the Presbyterian name.

Did our readers scan closely two articles on page 3 of the Cynosure of May 5th., one from the Bombay India Watchman, the other from the Chicago Times Mexican correspondent? If not, turn to them and read them carefully. The Times writer says, "Freemasonry has recently seemed to receive a new impetus in Mexico." This is true of the United States, and, doubtless, of every country on the globe. These affect society as earthquakes affect the earth: internal fires, finding vent in eruptions of volcanoes, as human passions find vent in wars and insurrections. The earth was cursed for the sins of men, and it shudders when sin is to be punished. See Rev. 16: 18.

BISHOP DICKSON: THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.

The Telescope of May 25th has an admirable reply to Talmage's sermon from Bishop Dickson; that of Rev. B. T. Roberts only equals it. The Bishop is severer than his wont. He quotes from the Homiletic Monthly charges against Mr. Talmage of "unreliability," and "recklessness." But the article is good tempered and the argument crushing.

The same paper gives a weak argument from Prof. Kephart to prove the "Commission" legal, which tenders a false issue, which is always illogical, and, when intentional, immoral.

If the Commission of twenty-seven whose legality he defends, had said (like honest men) "Freemasonry, as heretofore, is excluded by our Constitution, as it has been by our church from the first." Then they would have said something. But the Commission now say nothing. They drop a plain, honest clause made by honest, upright men, viz., that Freemasonry must not be tolerated in the church, and substitute a clause giving the General Conference power to exclude such secret societies as are "contrary to the Word of God," without saying there is such a secret society on earth, or ever was! As Mohammed dodged the question of eating pork, so the Commissioners treat Masonry, an order which is secret; and so despises Christ's example, which promises salvation to its members without Christ or the Holy Ghost; which swears its members to have their throats cut if they break its by-laws; which caricatures the Burning Bush, and allows, nay, requires grog-selling lodge masters to say, "I am that I am;" which practices infant baptism as they say the heathen did before the pyramids; and mocks and mimics the Lord's Supper, by killing and eating the "paschal lamb." All these facts lie open on the pages of Masonic books, now printed and used as authority in Masonic lodges. Even so low down as the third degree of the universal Blue Lodge, Christ is insulted and the resurrection caricatured by the force of raising Hiram Abiff by the "grip" of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, which is a direct blasphemous insult to Christ as the raiser of the dead.

Now the twenty-seven Commissioners have taken out the condemnation of this lodge from the constitution of the church, and given the General Conference power to do what? "To legislate against secret societies which are contrary to the Word of God," without saying there are any such secret societies, or, if any, what? This makes a sporadic constitution, tolerating Masonry where that prevails; Odd-fellowship, with its chains, masks and skeleton, where it prevails; the false Grand Army; the secret temperance lodges; and the Knights of Labor led by papists, etc., for all these are ready to swear their secret lodges "are not contrary to the Word of God."

The Commissioners do this to allow Masons unchallenged in city churches. They say they wish to make their church popular in cities, and they know that, till the lodge falls, they cannot do this while they exclude Masons, though they admit all the others. If they were honest men they would say: "We intend Masonry shall have a quiet lodgement in our churches where that lodge is popular," for that is what their constitution provides for in practice.

Mohammed wanted to take in the Christ-hating Jews, at the same time he wanted those Christians who ate pork. So he said, as Cowper gives it:

"There is a part in every swine
No friend or follower of mine
May eat, whatever his inclination,
On pain of excommunication."

But he did not say what the prohibited part was, as the twenty-seven do not say what lodge is prohibited. So,

"Mohammedans eat up the hog."

as these men swallow, by their non-committal constitution, the whole secret lodge system. In practice, they go the "whole hog."

"With sophistry their sauce they sweeten,
And quite from tail to snout 'tis eaten."

Bishop Weaver wrote cosy letters to the Harrisburg paper, while Warner, who is a Mason, was its defender and moved to have it issued at Dayton, when every one knew it was supported by Masons. Mr. Shuey employed lodgement to work on the Telescope when plenty of Brethren printers could have been had; and when he was told of young men, members of Summit street church, who were joining the Odd-fellows, and requested him to say or do something against it by kind advice to the pastor, he refused.

Now we do not "judge" these brethren. God will do that. But as Paul withstood Peter in a like case, "because he was to be blamed," so the Cynosure withstands them; and we affectionately entreat them to cast off the disguise they wear, and not deceive the brethren who trust them and love them; and who were made United Brethren by the Holy Ghost at Isaac Long's barn, a hundred years ago, and whose constitution has kept good the glorious testimony against devil-worship which these Commissioners are now throwing away.

THE CHINESE AT HOME AND ABROAD.

The report of Rev. N. R. Johnston, missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian church to the Chinese in Oakland, California, is not only an interesting document in itself, because of its varied information respecting the mission work on the coast, but also is it valuable for its suggestions respecting the Chinese already in America, and their influence upon the uncounted millions in their native land.
